VAIN EXCUSES.

"But to Israel he saith, All day long have I stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people."—ROMANS x. 21.

How descriptive this, of the Jews! And no less of sinners now, as is seen in the vain excuses they make for their neglect of religion, and their indifference to it.

1. One does not like the plan of salvation. So it was with the Jews. They were in love with the law: they wanted to be saved by their works; and so there are those now who do not like to renounce themselves, relinquish all reliance upon their own merits, and trust entirely in Jesus Christ for eternal life, and receive it as the gift of God through him.

2. One says he must wait till the Lord's time comes. Extremes meet. The other, above-named, thinks he can do all, and yet does nothing: this one thinks it must all be done for him, and therefore does nothing; so they both agree in doing nothing, and the practical effect of the two errors is the same, and one persevered in is as fatal as the other. To hope to be saved by our works is vain; and it is also vain to hope for salvation while we sit down with the presumptuous plea of waiting God's time. Sinner, you have already waited too long! It is time now to turn and live; turn, for why will you die?

3. Another says he has many other things to engage his attention, so much to do that he has no time to attend to the concerns of the soul, to the invitations and entreaties of Jehovah. Just as if religion were not the one thing needful, and it were not enjoined upon us as a duty, to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness!

4. Another says, there is time enough yet. So here again extremes meet. One has no time, and another has so much time that he is in no hurry; and both do nothing but disobey God and invent excuses for their disobedience. Time enough! But who can tell what shall be on the morrow? And who gives us liberty to boast of time which we have not and may never see? Now, now, sinner, now is the accepted time; now, now is the day of salvation!

5. But to sum up all excuses in one—some will say, God is too merciful and has made too many promises to cast us off; he surely will not destroy the work of his own hands. So said the Jews; but where are they now? and where have they been for these eighteen hundred years? And, sinner, where will you be, by and by, if you regard not the outstretched hand of God, and listen not to his warning and inviting voice? Did he not say to the unbelieving Jews, Ye shall die in your sins; whither I go, ye cannot come? And does he not say the same to you, if you believe not? Beware, then, how you trifle with the calls of God. Beware how you reject the Son of his love, and resist and grieve his blessed Spirit! He is just, as well as merciful; he has threatenings as well as promises, and you will find him faithful and true. Believe, and you shall live; refuse, and you must die! Away then, with your vain excuses! Come to Jesus Christ, and trust in him for salvation. Come, O come, without delay.

W. J. M.

NO SELF-CONVERSION.

I may affirm, without fear of contradiction, that no true Christian ever believed that he converted himself. They uniformly ascribe the very commencement of the saving work to the Spirit. It is God's work in the beginning and continuance of it. Should any one deny this, he would be regarded as still unconverted, or as under the power of some strong delusion. I have seen the following statement:

A lady, one evening, argued long and violently in the defence of the creature's being first in the work of conversion to God. When about to separate for the night the gentleman with whom she had been arguing said, "Madam, when you retire you will think to spend a few minutes between you and God; please then, to tell God what you have just told me." "What is that?" "Why, madam, that you began with God before he began with you." "No, I will not," said she. "I knew you would not," replied the gentleman, "for I never knew one of your opinion that could address God in consistency with the language which you hold out to your fellow men." Christians cannot do this. It would seem to them like "blaspheming the Holy Ghost" to deny his power and grace in their conversion.

The Rev. Charles Simeon, a distinguished minister of the Church of England, could not for some time fully receive this doctrine on account of some supposed difficulties. "But," says he, "I am as much convinced as I am of my own existence, that I should no more have loved God if he had not by his free and sovereign grace turned me, than a cannon ball would of itself return to the orifice from which it had been shot. I soon learned to take the Bible in its plain meaning, and from that day I never had a doubt respecting that doctrine."

The late Dr. Milnor, of the Episcopal Church, in this country, was, while unconverted, violently opposed to this doctrine. He deemed the efficacy of his own efforts all-sufficient. By his conversion he became a signal proof of the truth of this doctrine. After that he said, "How am I astonished, when I look back at my former misconceptions of religious truth! My endeavour was to make poor, finite, feeble and depraved man, the efficient cause of his own salvation. Now, my prayer is, that I may be washed in the blood of the Lamb; be sanctified by divine grace, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." Such is uniformly the difference between the unconverted and the converted man on this subject.

The feelings and sentiments of Christians respecting this subject are expressed with great clearness in their prayers. When they bow together before the throne of grace, there is always manifested a most delightful unity of sentiment. I never heard a prayer—I never read one, which was designed for the use of evangelical Christians, in which the sovereignty of God, in the bestowment of his blessings, was not fully and solemnly recognized. This doctrine pervades their devotional exercises. There they seem to forget systems, and parties, and prejudices, and to give free utterance to the heaven-taught sentiments of regenerated hearts.

NO TIME TO READ.

Offer a good book to some people, they will give you the above reply. Or ask them to subscribe for some good periodical, they will make the same response—No time to read. This, they think, is a true and justifiable excuse for them. But very many of those same characters have, almost any time, time enough to commence, and long continue, and very tedious to end, a dry, poor, if not vain, conversation, and use a multiplicity of words.

No time to read! Nevertheless they have time enough to hunt up and get their tobacco, smoke-pipes, and cigars, and sit together for hours, every day, and raise a volley of tobacco smoke.

No time to read! Yet they have time enough to spend every week a day or two in travelling about, visiting from house to house; keeping coffee and tea parties, and other feasts of pleasure, and thus killing up their time in worse than idleness.

No time to read! Yet they have a great relish to go to musterings and vendues, elections, rolling and grubbing matches, and other gatherings, and oftentimes will go idling and drowning their precious time away in worse than idleness.

No time to read! Yet others make it almost their regular business in the evening of each day, to sit about in work-shops, store-rooms, or tippling-houses, spending their long evening hours in vain chit-chat and tattling, throwing away their time in this miserable way.

No time to read! Yet others misimprove their time, decorating the body, but neglecting the soul, thinking more about their dress, than about their immortal spirits; spending much of their time before the looking-glass, to get their dress to please them, in order to make a fair show, and hide deformity, fixing on their ruffles and artificials, setting on their breast-pins and finger rings, and a few more such jewelries and fooleries.

Now, if the above different characters would live more by a becoming system, purchase good books, subscribe for good papers, and regularly attend to reading, and thereby improve their time and intellects, and cultivate the desire and principle for reading, we should then soon have, in general, a better state of morals, brighter minds and better hearts, and a more pious and useful society. The Lord send information.—W. Messenger.

A GOOD NAME.—Always be more solicitous to preserve your innocence than concerned to prove it. It will never do to seek a good name as a primary object. Like trying to be graceful, the effort to be popular will make you contemptible. Take care of your spirit and conduct, and your reputation will take care of itself.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. C. C. Jones.
Assistant Secretary—Rev. R. Happersett.
Treasurer—Samuel D. Powel.

Address, Mission Rooms, No. 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Letters relating to Missionary appointments, and other operations of the Board, including Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.

Donations and Subscriptions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:

J. D. Williams, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.
Thomas Moodie, Columbus, Ohio.

WESTERN EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE AND DOMESTIC MISSIONS IN THE WEST AND SOUTH-WEST.

The "Statement of Facts, &c.," recently issued by the Western Executive Committee of the Board in Louisville, is of so much value that we shall transfer the whole of it to the pages of the "Home and Foreign Record," in order that it may have as wide a circulation as possible, and produce its happy effects in the North, East, and South, as well as in the West and South-West. In consequence of much of our matter having gone to press before the "Statement" came to hand, we shall be able to print but one half of it in the present number, although, through the kindness of two of the Boards, we have been indulged with two more pages of space than we are entitled to. The Executive Committee in Louisville is infusing new life and energy into their operations, and the Board rejoices in it, and in the grand aim now set forth in the "Statement," that the west and south-west should sustain their own missions. Upon such a consummation, there will be feelings of gratitude and joy and of self-reliance, under God, unknown before in the bosoms of the brethren and churches occupying that vast and growing field. It will be a great and glorious day to our Church, and one which we believe cannot be far distant. Onward then, beloved brethren, and the great Lord of the harvest for his own glory, speed the work!

TOUCHING NOTE OF THANKS.

"As I opened the box of clothing my heart ascended to God in gratitude to the kind ladies of N. church who remembered the missionary. A record is kept of their labour of love on high. O, if my dear wife were here, her blessing would rest upon them. After nine weeks of patient suffering, she called our little family around her and gave us her last affectionate embrace, and her dying exhortation and blessing, and then said, 'Now I am going, all is peace and happiness,' folded her hands upon her bosom, and fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle or a groan!" ANNUAL TABLE OF RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FOR SYNODS AND PRESBYTERIES.

Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut street,
Philadelphia, September, 1852.

We have prepared for the present, as we did for the past year, a Table showing the actual amount contributed to the Board of Missions, by the particular Synods and Presbyteries in connection with the Office in Philadelphia; and also the actual amount expended by the Board for the same Synods and Presbyteries. Our ecclesiastical year closing a month earlier, by the alteration of the Board, the Table covers but eleven months, instead of twelve.

We present the Table, and then subjoin a few remarks based upon it.

TABLE

Showing the amount of money contributed to the Board of Missions in eleven months, from May 1, 1851, to April 1, 1852, by the various Synods and Presbyteries in connection with the office in Philadelphia, and the amount paid in return to them, by the Board, for the same time, for the support of their ministers and missionaries, &c.

REMARKS.

1. The number of Synods in connection with the Office in Philadelphia is 14, and the number of Presbyteries is 75, following the Minutes of the General Assembly for 1852. The new Synod of the Pacific and its Presbyteries have not yet appeared in the Minutes.

The number of ministers in the 14 Synods and the 75 Presbyteries is 1,331; and the number of churches is 1,674, making the excess of churches over ministers 343.

The number of churches in these Synods, reported in the Minutes of the Assembly as vacant is 303; and the number of ministers reported as being without charge is 188. In counting up the ministers we have been as careful as our time permitted to exclude the "infirm," "professors," "teachers," "editors," "agents," "colporteurs," "secretaries," &c. There may be some slight mistake, yet the general result will vary very little from what we have made it. If the 188 ministers "without charge" were employed, the Synods would still have 115 churches unsupplied. Many of the churches are small, and might be thrown together and form circles of churches, and so require fewer ministers to supply them. Still, after setting all the ministers to work who are "without charge," and throwing the churches together as much as possible, a wide field is left even among them for the employment of more ministers and missionaries, without taking into account the missionary ground in which we have no organizations at all. Ought not Presbyteries to make some earnest efforts to obtain employment for all ministers "without charge," who are able and willing to labour, in some vacant church or missionary field? A letter was received in the Office a short time since upon this very subject, in which the writer says, that vacant churches, instead of employing ministers "without charge"—able and good men—are reaching after new and young men. Would there be any harm in Presbyteries moving in this matter? The Presbyteries and churches in our purely missionary fields may now learn why, when they write to the Board of Missions for missionaries, the missionaries are not in all cases sent. They are not to be had. The Board would be glad to obtain suitable missionaries for some important fields at the present time.

The number of church members in the 14 Synods and 75 Presbyteries is 153,548, or 48,341 more than one half the entire membership of our church; the entire membership, as reported in the Minutes of the Assembly for 1852, is 210,414.

2. The whole amount contributed to the Board of Missions for the 11 months by these Synods and Presbyteries, in the office in Philadelphia, is $32,759. And the whole amount drawn out by them in the same time, is $32,718, leaving to their credit in the treasury of the Board in Philadelphia but FORTY-ONE DOLLARS! This is a fact worth remembering. How are the expenses of conducting the work paid? and how are expenses for expanding into destitute and new regions paid? Through INDIVIDUAL DONORS. We are not yet up to the full measure of our duty. Again, we must repeat the principle upon which all our church schemes should be conducted, namely, WHAT WE UNDERTAKE TO DO AS A CHURCH, WE MUST SUSTAIN AS A CHURCH. Brethren, we need more general and larger church collections.

The Synods contributed in the following order of their membership, beginning with the highest. Philadelphia, with 27,595 members, contributed $8,074. Pittsburgh, with 22,550 members, contributed $3,297. New Jersey, 19,357 members, $2,875. New York, 14,088 members, $7,428. Virginia, 11,254 members, $1,783. Wheeling, 10,981 members $1,693. Ohio, 10,891 members, $968. North Carolina, 10,680 members, $1,319. Albany, 8,527 members, $2,435. South Carolina, 5,715 members, $274. Georgia, 4,563 members, $1,462. Buffalo, 4,363 members, $872. Northern Indiana, 2,181 members, $208. Wisconsin, 806 members, $71. Total contributed for the eleven months, $32,759.

And the Synods drew out—Philadelphia, $4,494; New Jersey, $4,300; Wisconsin $3,961; New York, $3,548; Ohio, $2,528; Pittsburgh, $2,499; Virginia, $2,346; Buffalo, 2,043; Northern Indiana, $2,027; Georgia, $1,595; Wheeling, $1,186; North Carolina, $1,083; Albany, $881; South Carolina, $227. Total drawn out for the eleven months, $32,718.

3. We now beg the brethren not to take encouragement from the Table too readily, nor to think of their contributions more highly than they ought to think. A Synod or a Presbytery says, "We have done well. We have paid in more than we have drawn out, and are ahead of such a Synod or such a Presbytery." But is this the proper way of determining your efficiency and liberality? We trow not. In average per church member, you are perhaps behind many other Synods and Presbyteries; and had you contributed as liberally as they, you would have had one-fourth, or half as much more to your credit in the Treasury of the Board. The Synod or Presbytery that pays in more than it draws out does well: but the Synod or Presbytery that pays in most per church member does better.

Taking the average per church member as, on the whole, the most correct mode of judging of missionary zeal and liberality, the leading Synod is New York, averaging per church member 52 cents and 7-10ths of a cent: and the other Synods follow after thus—Georgia 2d, averaging 32 cents; Philadelphia 3d, 29¼ c.; Albany 4th, 28½ c.; Buffalo 5th, 20 c.; Virginia 6th, 15.8 c.; Wheeling 7th, 15.4 c.; New Jersey 8th, 14.8 c.; Pittsburgh 9th, 14.6 c.; North Carolina 10th, 12½ c.; Northern Indiana 11th, 9½ c.; Ohio 12th, 8.9 c.; Wisconsin 13th, 8.8 c.; South Carolina 14th, 4.8 c. The Synods of Northern Indiana and South Carolina cannot be reckoned in this average, as their Presbyteries are not all in connection with the Board.

Averaging the Presbyteries in like manner, the leading Presbytery is New York, averaging $1.10 c. per church member; Troy 2d, averaging 67 cents and 8-10ths of a cent; Baltimore 3d, 67.7 c.; Georgia 4th, 62.7 c.; Philadelphia 5th, 58.6 c.; Orange 6th, 40.9 c.; North River 7th, 39.2 c.; Bedford 8th, 38 c.; Hopewell 9th, 37 c.; West Jersey 10th 34.7 c.; East Hanover 11th, 34⅓ c.; Columbia 12th, 30 c.; Flint River 13th, 28¼ c.; Buffalo City 14th, 27.7 c.; Rochester City 15th, 26.2 c.; Carlisle 16th, 26 c.; Ohio 17th, 25.9 c.; Northumberland 18th, 24.9 c.; Albany 19th, 24 c.; Connecticut 20th, 23.7 c.; Susquehanna 21st, 22.9 c.; Cherokee 22d, 22.26 c.; Columbus 23d, 22.24 c.; Lexington 24th, 20.6 c.; Lake 25th, 20 c., and the scale gradually goes down until a Presbytery closes it with a contribution of one cent per member!

A balance cannot be struck between the contributions and disbursements now given, and those of the year previous, since our Table covers but eleven months. The contributions of the Synods of Albany, Buffalo, Ohio and Georgia, for the eleven months, exceed their contributions for the whole year preceding. All the other Synods fall short. We hope they may in the remaining month come up to, should they not go beyond, the contributions of the past year.

4. All the Synods embrace missionary ground within their limits: some, indeed, are altogether missionary ground. Yet judging from the number of their church members: and the actual extent of missionary ground under their care, the consuming Synods are too many and the paying Synods too few. Consuming Synods may become paying Synods, either, by bringing up their churches and fields now on the Board, to the point of self-sustentation: or as nearly up to it as possible: or, by awakening a greater zeal for missions, and securing, by faithful effort, not only more general, but also more liberal contributions from the churches. Both these methods might be adopted, and of course the success would be more certain. Presbyteries might visit their missionary fields and churches by committees, who could confer with and exhort, and encourage them to sustain the gospel for themselves. If such committees did no more than strengthen the principle of duty in the minds of our people, that they should support their own ministers, and relieve the missionary brethren from urging that duty upon their respective charges, they would do far more than enough to pay for the time consumed and the expense incurred. Upon such visits they might preach in the churches two or three days in succession, and unite in administering the Lord's supper. Would not the souls of God's ministers and people be refreshed? would not the cause of the Redeemer be advanced in every way? And the brethren, by exchanges, might preach on the subject of domestic missions, and take up collections in each other's churches. Why wait for Agents? And if none come, then no collections are taken up until they do come: whether it be for one year, or two years or more! There is no better agent in a Pastor's congregation than the Pastor himself. Where there is faith, there will be works. Where there is a will, there is a way.

Finally, Brethren, in this great enterprise so long cherished and so dear to our church, and so essential to her prosperity, how much is it dependent for its success, yea, we may say, for its very life, upon our Ministers. To them, under God, we look, upon them we call. They have in times past upheld this enterprise. We believe they will uphold it in all time to come. They are the Lord's own ministers. They love him. They love his people. They love the souls of men. They behold the immense and increasing wants of our country and they will not be found wanting in their duty to supply those wants and to build up our Zion. The season of the year is rapidly approaching when the Board will need a larger increase of funds, and we trust the brethren will come up generously to its aid.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

THE FIRST OLD-SCHOOL CHURCH IN OREGON.

We give below some statements from a recent letter from Rev. Lewis Thompson, showing the efforts made by a few Presbyterian families to build their house of worship, and their present wants. If any friends of Zion feel disposed to render aid in this interesting case, we shall be happy to hear from them. Our Church Extension funds are all appropriated: and as the General Assembly directs the Board not to anticipate funds, and thereby run into debt, the appropriations are made only when funds are in the Treasury to meet them.

"Lexington, Clatsop county, Oregon Territory, July 20, 1852.

"At a meeting of our church and congregation, on the 5th inst., a resolution was passed requesting the pastor to ask the Church Extension Committee of the Board for $300 to enable us to pay off the debt for the building, and to make some other improvements. That you may appreciate the propriety of our application, let me mention the fact that three families subscribed $1600, as follows: the first $750, the second $500, and the third $350. Ten others gave $550. It is probable that the three first families gave more than they could well afford under their circumstances. They are not now clear of debt—and all are in moderate circumstances. The amount asked for appears small, but those who have contributed so liberally do not feel able to do more at present. Shall the debt continue to lie upon us? It would be better certainly that the first church (Old-school) founded in Oregon should be free from debt. We are trying to make some return for the benefits already received and now asked for. Our contributions to the different Boards the present year will probably reach $100 or $150. Trusting that the Lord may bless your efforts to extend his Church I am, sincerely, yours in him.

LEWIS THOMPSON."

AN ELDER'S HORSE SAVED!

Rev. J. H. Gray, D. D., in making application to the Church Extension Committee for aid for the church of Walnut Grove, Presbytery of Memphis, Tennessee, says: "A few have exercised great self-denial in order that the house of worship might be built. It is the first Presbyterian church ever organized in the county, and the only one in several surrounding counties. The amount asked for is small—but sufficient. I will just add, that one of the Elders, who had already given the largest subscription, had brought his horse to market to sell to raise the means to finish the house. When he learned that Presbytery would recommend their church to the Church Extension Committee, he was greatly delighted, and consequently did not sacrifice his horse."

The Church Extension Committee granted the application, and the worthy brother has his horse to use in some other way for God's service.

The Church Extension Committee are in want of funds: and we need some more money for the house of worship in St. Paul's, Minnesota.

OLD REHOBOTH CHURCH HERSELF AGAIN!

CAN OLD CHURCHES DIE?

Rehoboth Church, in Somerset county, Eastern Shore of Maryland, is said to be THE MOTHER—the oldest Presbyterian Church in our country. Some deny this, and affirm that the 1st Presbyterian Church in the City of Philadelphia is the oldest. We shall not undertake to decide the controversy in this place. We shall give no one offence when we declare Rehoboth to be, if not the oldest, then next to the oldest Presbyterian Church, in these United States of America. Her position is, to the 4335 churches (O. S. 2733. N. S. 1602) that have sprung up and spread over the land, what the position of the church of Jerusalem was of old, to the world—the mother of all. Rehoboth, if we only were living 1500 years earlier, might be made by some American Constantine, the seat of a Patriarchate: and her present Bishop, our highly esteemed and beloved brother, the Rev. J. L. Vallandigham, might be A Patriarch: and the question of seniority being decided in favour of Rehoboth—might be THE Patriarch of our whole Church.

Rehoboth has existed a church of the Lord Jesus Christ 150 years. And for the time, with exceptions occasionally perhaps—has had her minister and been a light in the world. But changes in God's providence have passed over her, and in these latter days she has needed aid from her numerous and favoured daughters. Her pastor, when not receiving aid specially on her account, has received it for some church or field contiguous: so that she has occupied and been placed on missionary ground. Her daughters have come up cheerfully and heartily, and contributed towards the support of her pastor: yea the stump has been left in the ground—with the sap of life in it: and bound about with the love of God, and watered with his grace: and now the noble tree has shot forth her stem and boughs, and is herself again: and flourishes in renewed youth and beauty in the midst of the trees of the Lord.

Brother Vallandigham is pastor of Rehoboth and Monokin churches, and writes: "We have lately received into both churches nine members: recently ordained and installed two additional elders in Rehoboth church; and will shortly ordain and install two new elders in Monokin church. My whole charge is in a promising and flourishing condition, and, by the blessing of God, we hope at the end of the year to dispense with any further aid from the Board."

Who fails now to perceive and to acknowledge the wise arrangements and provident care of the General Assembly over its Churches, in conducting its domestic missionary work? Are our ancient and decayed and feeble churches to be abandoned, and left to die? No. The General Assembly has never so ordained it. But, on the contrary, they are to be cherished and kept in being, as many have been, and even now are. But cherished and kept in being, on the missionary standard. They are to have their fair proportion of men and means. They are to be associated with neighbouring churches or fields, until they again—if it be possible—revive and stand alone—or alone with some other in association, like old Rehoboth. She has been associated with a neighbouring church and the surrounding field, until now, by the blessing of God and the faithful labours of pastor and people, they are strong again, and need no more aid, but stand ready to grant aid to others. The independent old Presbyterians (not old in age—but old in association and piety and principle) receive aid gladly and thankfully, and it is their right: but no longer than it is necessary—not one moment beyond the time that they are able to help themselves. So live for ever this Christian independence in our churches!

DEATH-BED DONATION OF A CHILD.

We received a short time since the following touching note, without comment. Our young friends can read and think upon it; and they will call to mind the words of the Holy Bible, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou has perfected praise."

"Cedarville Church, N. J.—Death-bed request of a little girl, aged ten years: That her money should be given to the missionaries: One Dollar."

How she died the note does not say; but her mind was turned on the unspeakable value of the gospel to dying sinners, and she did what she could with her little treasury, to send it to them. We hope she has gone to be with the Saviour in heaven. The Lord make us conscientious in the use of the property he gives us, be it more or less, and prepare us for death, judgment and eternity!

ENCOURAGING MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

"I am prayed for."

Although the general state of religion in our missionary churches and fields is not what the friends of Zion would desire, and it calls for heart-searching and humiliation before God, yet we have recently received a number of letters from various parts of our country, that cheer the heart; and we now present extracts from some of them, in the hope that they may reach the eyes of churches, lukewarm and inefficient, and awaken them to the duty of strengthening the things that remain and are ready to die.

Connecticut.—"Within less than a year from the time the first effort was made, there has been gathered and organized a church of 34 members, to which have since been added 5 by letter, and 22 on examination; arrangements made for the purchase of a church edifice, and an encouraging part of the amount secured; and I may add, finally, a pastor called and settled. In reference to spiritual affairs, we have still to take up the song of praise. God has not yet withdrawn from us. Since my last report we have had one communion season: 11 additions, 4 by letter, 7 on examination. The previous communion, (we have had but two,) there were added by letter 1, and 15 on examination; making the present number of members 61, as given above. There is still a pleasant state of feeling, and I hope we shall have further additions to our number." C.

This enterprise is most promising. If we succeed in establishing six or eight strong churches in Connecticut, (and there is material for them,) their influence will be of the happiest kind, and we should not be surprised to see the Presbyterian church acquire a strong foothold in the State, and go on its way increasing.

New York.—"I have reason to believe that the Holy Spirit is at work in the minds of some of our children. One dear child, about 12 or 13, has for some months given very decided evidence of a change of heart; and several others are serious, if not indulging a hope. I have endeavoured to visit every family as often as possible, that I may find out the spiritual wants of my people, and throw around them those pastoral influences which can be obtained in no other way. I believe the children and I are pretty well acquainted. I love them, and try to make them love me." R.

Pennsylvania.—"At our last communion at B— church, there were added on profession of their faith 10 persons, and 1 on certificate; 7 children were baptized. There appears generally to be a sober and serious state of feeling in the church and congregation." W.

From the same State.—"During the year God has evidently been with us, and borne testimony to his truth. Six were added to C— church, and 4 to D— church; and in June, our last communion, 5 were added to C— church, and the state of feeling is encouraging. Our wish is soon to ask the Board for no more aid, and by the blessing of God, we think that day not far distant." P.

Ohio.—"About two weeks since we had a very interesting communion season in the congregation of G—. The Lord seemed graciously to be near, and his work to be revived. Five persons were admitted on examination; 4 of them were baptized; of the baptized, 2 were elderly ladies, heads of families, and one a young man who had been brought up in a most irreligious manner, scarcely knowing what Christianity or religion meant. There were others under serious impressions." A.

From the same State.—"To the B. church we received thirteen members at our two last communions. I think at no former period have our members been so much encouraged." R.

Indiana.—"On last Sabbath seven persons were received to the communion of the church of C. where I labour once a month. We have received applications from three persons for our next communion, and hope for more. The cause of temperance seems to be, at the present time, making most encouraging advances throughout our State, and we doubt not but that the Maine liquor law will be carried in Indiana. More than four thousand people attended a temperance mass-meeting of this county, in this place yesterday. Meetings of the same kind are frequent throughout the State."

Illinois.—"Our congregation numbers one hundred and fifty to two hundred. Eighteen months ago, when we organized, we had about fifty. Our Sabbath-school is in a flourishing condition; over one hundred members. The Presbyterial Academy is also in a flourishing condition, and is exerting an excellent influence over the youth. The change for the better in the morals of the place is so great that the irreligious themselves notice it. We hope to have our house of worship finished in two or three months. We recently determined to take up regular contributions for our Boards; we raised twenty dollars the first collection for the Board of Missions. All this is very encouraging. I feel that the Lord has blessed our efforts extensively. What we need is his blessing spiritually." G.

Virginia.—"I have been considerably encouraged; congregations larger, people feel more interest in religion, the impenitent more willing to be conversed with. We have had two interesting additions. One a very intelligent lady who was a member of the Roman Catholic church, and educated in a convent. She has seen the truth, and I trust embraced it heartily; and grace was given her to overcome every obstacle. The other was a young physician, who, I trust, will make a zealous and efficient labourer in the Lord's kingdom. We hope we have indications of better times." W.

North Carolina.—"A greater degree of solemnity prevailed at A. church. At a sacramental meeting, two young men and four other persons were received on examination, and one on certificate. Several children baptized. I preach statedly here two Sabbaths in a month, and on those days, preach twice to the whites and once to the blacks; the latter a truly interesting field. They exhibit a degree of order, sobriety, attention, and self-respect and reverence for the sanctuary, which I am sure is not surpassed by any congregation, similarly situated, in our whole country. The attendance is remarkably good, caused, in part, by the great degree of attention I give them during the week everywhere. They appear to appreciate their privileges. The hearts of God's people are gladdened thereby. At our meetings, the Spirit of God is evidently present. God was pleased to be with me from the very first at S. church. At this church twenty-five souls, we trust, have passed from death to life; twenty-two white and three coloured. Among the former, three children of my worthy predecessor in the ministry here! A delightful state of Christian feeling; breaches healed; brotherly love prevailed. A leading part of the blessed work is that which has taken place among the blacks. A great change has come over them in their interest in and attendance upon the means of grace. At R. C. church many friends thought there was scarcely any hope, so great were the seeming discouragements. I went, met an overflowing congregation; very solemn service; tears were shed! A soul converted that day! Since then, six dear young people have given their hearts to God! To God be all the glory." A.

Arkansas.—"In D. and D. and N., I now preach once a month to the coloured people. There appears to be some interest manifested among them. Some are anxiously inquiring the way of salvation." W.

Louisiana—"I am cheered by the manifest interest felt by the servants, to whom I preach on the great concern of salvation. On two plantations where I labour, several have professed hope in Christ. I have examined twenty-three of the coloured people, preparatory to admission to the church. As far as I can judge, they are worthy of admission; may the Lord sanctify and preserve them faithful unto the end. Pray for us." W.

May they who read remember the request of this last missionary. All who are engaged in this great work need the presence and blessing of God, that they may be faithful. Pray for us. A missionary, long engaged in preaching the gospel under peculiar trials, and with much labour, was remarkably sustained in health, strength, resolution, and faith; and seemed borne along over all discouragements. Reflecting on all this, he said to himself, "It is wonderful! How can you account for it? You are nothing in yourself. Very true. Now, said he, 'I think I know.' I am prayed for. THE PEOPLE PRAY FOR ME. Blessed be God!"

A STATEMENT OF FACTS RESPECTING THE BOARD OF MISSIONS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH; AND ITS OPERATIONS IN THE WEST.

The Western Executive Committee of the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church respectfully invite attention to the condition and prospects of the Board.

The Rev. C. Leavenworth has been appointed to the agency for the Synods of Cincinnati, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa.

The Rev. Benjamin M. Hobson is the agent for the Synods of Kentucky, Nashville, Memphis, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, and Texas.

The Rev. John F. Cowan is a missionary agent for Missouri.

Since the beginning of this missionary year, which dates from April 1st, but little has been done in the way of raising funds. The number of churches on our field exceeds one thousand. It is wholly impossible for our agents to visit even the half of these churches, scattered as they are, over the vast territory occupied by the twelve Synods. Our reliance must be, therefore, under God, mainly on the ministers who are labouring within these bounds.

It is the purpose of this publication to request you respectfully, to take up a collection for the Board in the church or churches which you serve in the Gospel, unless you have good reason to expect a visit from one of the agents of the Board; and to place within your reach such information as will enable you to present the cause satisfactorily to the people of God, we embody herein a statement of facts collected from a variety of sources.

I. THE EXTENT AND POPULATION OF THE COUNTRY.

The area of the United States is estimated at between 3,260,000 and 3,500,000 square miles. It exceeds the whole of Europe by 500,000 square miles, and composes about one-fourteenth part of the really habitable globe. We might carve out of our vast possessions about 450 States as large as Massachusetts, more than 80 as large as Kentucky or Ohio, and about 70 as large as Louisiana or Mississipi. The whole kingdom of France might be laid down at least fifteen times on our map, and the British Islands nearly thirty times.

The population of the United States in 1850 was, in round numbers, 23,000,000. It is ascertained, that since the year 1790, the average rate of increase has been more than 34 per cent. in ten years, doubling our population every thirty years. At this rate we have, for years to come, the following results in round numbers:

A. D.	1850, our population was	23,000,000
	1860, our population will be	31,000,000
	1870, " "	41,000,000
	1880, " "	54,000,000
	1890, " "	72,000,000
	1900, " "	96,000,000
	1910, " "	128,000,000
	1920, " "	170,000,000
	1930, " "	207,000,000
	1940, " "	275,000,000
	1950, " "	360,000,000

Making every reasonable deduction for counteracting influences, we are almost appalled at the prospective increase and vastness of our population.

II. FOREIGN EMIGRATION.

The number of passengers arriving in the United States for the year ending September 30, 1850, was 315,333. (Am. Alm. 1852, p. 224.) Deducting natives of this country returning from abroad and adding foreigners who entered the country by the way of Canada, we may estimate the increase of our foreign population at one thousand a day; demanding to keep pace with that portion alone of our population, an annual increase of three hundred and sixty-five ministers of the Gospel.

III. OUR MISSIONARY FIELDS.

We may divide our country into four missionary fields: the Atlantic slope, the Pacific slope, the region of New Mexico and Utah, and the valley of the Mississippi. We limit our present statement to the latter field, as the most of it falls under the supervision of the Committee.

IV. THE EXTENT AND POPULATION OF THE WESTERN FIELD.

State.	Square Miles.	Population.
Ohio,	40,500	1,977,041
Indiana,	36,626	988,734
Illinois,	56,506	858,298
Michigan,	60,537	397,654
Wisconsin,	68,000	304,226
Iowa,	73,000	192,214
Missouri,	70,050	682,043
Kentucky,	40,023	982,405
Tennessee,	41,752	1,002,625
Arkansas,	54,617	209,639
Mississippi,	49,356	592,853
Louisiana,	47,413	500,763
Alabama,	54,084	771,671
Texas,	397,319	187,484
Total,	1,089,783	9,647,649

The territories of Minnesota and Nebraska are not included in the above table. Exclusive of these wide regions, the West is about five times as large as the kingdom of France, and about nine times as large as the British Islands, or all the kingdoms of Italy.

The inhabitants of Ohio average nearly fifty to the square mile. At that rate the West would contain a population of fifty millions. New York State contains nearly seventy to the square mile. At this average the population of the West would swell to seventy millions; and if it becomes as densely settled as Massachusetts, one hundred and twenty-seven to the square mile, our Western population will amount to nearly one hundred and thirty millions. If as densely peopled as France, one hundred and sixty eight to the square mile, then our population would be one hundred and seventy millions; or as England, three hundred and two to the square mile, the West would contain three hundred millions of immortal beings.

The rapidity with which the West is now filling up may be seen in the following facts: In twenty years Ohio has added more than a million to its population; Indiana more than six hundred thousand, almost trebling its numbers; Alabama and Mississippi have increased more than four hundred thousand each; Arkansas has multiplied itself six fold; and Michigan thirteen fold. Of Iowa and Wisconsin twenty years since, we cannot speak, as neither of these great States were then in existence. But in ten years they have increased, Iowa almost five fold, and Wisconsin ten fold.

V. THE PROGRESS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE WEST.

What has been done in the West for the last few years may be stated in a variety of forms.

1. Increase of Synods.—Since 1841 six new Synods have been erected; all of them products of our Board of Missions. These are the Synods of Northern Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa, Arkansas, Memphis, and Texas.

2. Increase of Presbyteries.—Since the year 1841, thirty-one Presbyteries have been formed on this missionary field, viz: Maumee, Findlay, Indianapolis, White Water, Lake, Fort Wayne, Muncie, Rock River, Milwaukie, Winnebago, Dane, Iowa, Cedar, Des Moines, Chicago, Potosi, Upper Missouri, Nebraska, Memphis, Maury, Knoxville, Tuscumbia, East Alabama, Chickasaw, Indian, Ouachita, Creek Nation, Brazos, East Texas, West Texas, and Talladega.

3. A General View.—The following table, published in the Presbyterian Herald of July 22, will show the progress of the Church in the West for ten years, as exhibited by a comparison of the Minutes of the Assembly for 1841 and 1851. The Presbyteries which have been formed since 1841, and thrown into new Synods, are counted in the table as if they were in the Synods which covered their territory in 1841. The first three columns show the number of ministers, churches, and communicants in 1841; the last three exhibit the number of these in 1851.

The 8 Synods of the West, in 10 years grew into 12 Synods, and have formed 24 new Presbyteries, and their ministers increased from 354 to 673, their churches from 682 to 1073, and their communicants from 27,706 to 55,929. Their contributions to Domestic Missions rose from $7,355 to $27,250, to Foreign Missions from $8,563 to $22,330, of Education from $4,438 to $35,712, to Publication from $2,115 to $5,611, and their whole contributions to these objects from $22,471 to $90,903.

It will be seen that the contributions of the West to Domestic Missions and Publication, last year, nearly equalled those of the whole Church in 1841, and their contribution to Education exceeds that of the whole Church in 1841 by $13,277. It ought to be stated, however, that there were important items included under that head in 1851, which were not reported under it in 1841.

5. A Comparative View.—The Herald remarks on the above table:

"The West increased 319 ministers, 391 churches, 28,223 communicants, and her contributions to Domestic Missions $19,895, to Foreign Missions, $13,967, to Education $31,274, and to Publication $3,496, whilst the whole of the other parts of the Church increased in ministers 404, in communicants 47,650, in contributions to Domestic Missions $42,099, to Foreign Missions $9,691, to Education $35,677, and to Publication $9,750. The West grew in ministers about one hundred per cent., whilst the other parts of the Church grew only fifty per cent. In churches the West grew nearly fifty per cent., and the other portions only about twenty-five per cent. In communicants the West has increased near one hundred per cent., whilst the others only increased about thirty-five per cent. The West increased in her contributions near four hundred per cent., whilst the others increased about two hundred per cent."

THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION IN SCOTLAND.

Desirous of keeping our Church acquainted with the movements of theological education in Scotland, we publish a number of overtures adopted by the last Assembly of the Free Church.

1. "That the ordinary theological curriculum shall consist of four years' regular attendance upon the Divinity Hall; that in no case shall less than two years' regular attendance be sustained; that exemption from four years of regular attendance shall be granted to particular students only by a Board appointed by the General Assembly; that enrolment in two different sessions shall be required for each session, for which exemption from regular attendance may be granted; and that all students exempted shall be yearly examined upon books and subjects prescribed to them."

2. "That, inasmuch as a class of Natural Science exists in the New College, Edinburgh, for which no additional charge is made, attendance upon that class for one session be required of all theological students pursuing their theological course in Edinburgh."

3. "That every student about to enter the Hall for the first time, shall be examined upon his previous course of study by a Board of Examination to be appointed by the General Assembly, and shall produce a certificate of his having passed that examination satisfactorily, to any Presbytery to whom he may apply, with a view to his being allowed to begin the study of theology according to the existing laws of the Church."

4. "That every theological student, before he applies to any Presbytery, in order to his being taken upon trials for license, shall be examined upon his previous studies by a Board of Examination to be appointed by the General Assembly, and shall produce to the Presbytery a certificate of his having passed the said examination satisfactorily."

5. "That the election of Professors shall be vested in the General Assembly, under such regulations as the Assembly may from time to time enact for securing due deliberation in the discharge of this important duty."

6. "That the ordinary discipline of the College, and the regulation of the library and museum, shall be vested in the Senatus Academicus, consisting of the Principal and Professors, subject to such rules as the Assembly may lay down, according to the laws of the Church."

7. "That the right now enjoyed of sending representatives to the General Assembly shall be vested in the Principal and Professors, being office-bearers of this Church eligible to be members of Assembly."

8. "That all Professors of Theology shall be inducted into their respective offices by the Presbytery of the bounds, in the same manner in which ministers are inducted into their charges."

9. "That a Select Committee shall be appointed by the General Assembly, to consist of eleven ministers and ten elders, of whom not more than five may be changed from year to year, with authority to undertake the general administration of College property and finances,—to originate and prosecute before the Church Courts processes against any of the Professors for heresy or immorality, reserving the rights competent to all parties, according to the present laws of the Church, to originate also and to prepare for the decision of the General Assembly proposals for the retirement of Professors disabled by age or infirmity, and for fixing the retiring allowances they are to receive, and generally to exercise the functions of ordinary visitors of the College."

10. "That the General Assembly shall institute a quinquennial visitation of the College by Special Commission, to consist chiefly of the senior members of the Church, and that said Commission shall bring up a special Report to the Assembly on the general state of the College."

The following summary of the difference between the state of theological education in the Free and in the Established Church, is taken from the Edinburgh Witness, edited by Mr. Hugh Miller.

ESTABLISHED AND FREE CHURCHES.

"At the Disruption, both parties had the same curriculum. Since that time the Establishment has made no change; the Free Church, on the other hand, has made important changes, all tending towards raising the attainments of the ministry. Without instituting any invidious comparison, we shall just state the agreements between the two curriculums and the differences, and leave the public to determine which of the two is the more stringent. 1st, The preparatory course at the University before entering the Hall in both Churches is four years. But the Free Church demands that, in the course of these four years, her students shall not only attend all the classes that are attended by the students of the Establishment, but shall also give such attendance at the Hebrew classes as to be able to prepare and translate passages in the Hebrew Scriptures. The students of the Established Church are not required to know even a single letter of the Hebrew alphabet. 2d, The time of attendance at the Hall in both Churches is a session of five months each year for four years. The Free Church demands that this attendance shall be bona fide for the whole four sessions. The Establishment only requires three sessions of regular attendance. During one of the so-called years of study the student of the Established Church, if he choose, need never open a book or enter a class-room. 3d, The number and the order of examinations of students by the Presbyteries are the same in both Churches. But, over and above the Presbyterial examinations, the Free Church has appointed a Board of Examinators, before which every student must appear at the close of his University course, and again at the close of his theological course; and if he cannot pass the examinations of this Board, he is at once sent back to his studies. The Establishment has none but the Presbyterial examinations. Those who know what Presbyterial examinations are, in all churches without exception, will look on the Board instituted by the Free Church as the only effective agency for testing the qualifications of students which yet exists in any Church in Scotland. 4th, The theological course prescribed by law for every student of the Free Church, requires exactly double the number of professors that are required by the prescribed course of the establishment. 5th, Natural science, in its bearing on theology, has no place in the curriculum of the Establishment; it is an indispensable part of the curriculum of the Free Church. We might also have adverted to the fact, that while the session of the Established Church Hall in Edinburgh is as long as that of the Free Church, in St. Andrew's it is shorter by one month, and in Aberdeen, the session, if we mistake not, is only three months. We have assumed that the Professors and students in both Churches are equal so far as talent and attainments are concerned. We do not anticipate that our friends in the Establishment will put in a claim of superiority. At any rate, such a claim on either side amounts to nothing in a comparison of the two curriculums. The Free Church has everything in her curriculum which the Establishment has, and a great deal more."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

WANT OF FUNDS.

The treasury for general Christian education is now empty. There are no funds applicable at the present time to assist in sustaining our institutions of Christian education.

The General Assembly has adopted a plan, which commends itself generally to the Church, by which schools, academies, and colleges, shall be established upon a strictly religious basis. A number of such institutions are now in operation with most encouraging prospects. The agency of the Board of Education has been influential in organizing and sustaining them, and some are still dependent upon the Board for aid during the interval which frequently marks the history of such enterprises.

In regard to the necessary funds, the Board have seen the difficulty, if not impossibility, of aiming at two collections in the churches, one for candidates for the ministry, and one for institutions of learning. Objections have also been made to the plan of operating through a common fund, to be drawn upon according to the wants of each department. If these two plans are set aside, the Board must either rely upon private collections for its academical operations, which resolves itself finally into the plan of two collections, or it must appeal to some churches for aid in one department, and to others for aid in the other; that is to say, it must present the claims of candidates in some churches, and the claims of Christian institutions in others. On either of the four above-mentioned plans, it is obvious that there are serious difficulties in managing successfully the finances of the Board.

In this state of things, the appeal is made for aid in such form as may best suit the views of those who have the interests of the cause of education at heart. The Board, in addition to the old fund for candidates, which must be sustained unimpaired, need from $6000 to $10,000 for the support of schools, academies, and colleges. Last year the amount received for this latter department was $6833 74; but this year, for four months, the amount received has been only $568 55. The Board are now, therefore, greatly in need of funds. If $10,000 were our income for this year, a great impulse could be given, with the Divine blessing, to this branch of benevolence, so thoroughly connected with the prosperity and growth of our Church.

From the Southern Presbyterian.

THE GEORGIA SYNODICAL FEMALE ACADEMIES.

Mr. Editor—I am gratified to be able to announce that the Rev. C. P. B. Martin, the popular teacher of the Milledgeville Female Academy, has been unanimously elected President of the Synodical Female Seminary of Griffin,* which is to go into operation within a few months. Mr. Martin has accepted of the appointment.

The Trustees have, in my opinion, made a wise choice. Mr. Martin is a laborious, able, and judicious teacher. He is favourably known and highly esteemed as an instructor in various places of Georgia where he has taught. His past experience and success in Female Schools constitute the best guarantee for the future.

Success, I say heartily, to the Female Seminaries at Greensboro' and Griffin, under the care of the Synod of Georgia. Much will be expected of them both; and I hope they will sedulously avoid some of the dangerous tendencies of the times, and prove models of Female Education.

Whilst it is truly gratifying to see such unusual interest awakened in all parts of the State in relation to the too long neglected cause of Female Education; still the method adopted should be adjusted wisely, and with a discriminating reference to the different spheres to which the sexes are destined. A system of education that overlooks this principle, may contain latent elements that will develope bitter fruit.

Woman was never designed to occupy a public sphere. The inspired direction of Paul, 1 Cor. xiv. 34, "Let your women keep silence in the churches" is a Divine appointment, involving a principle that cannot be undervalued without a violation of the laws of nature, and a distortion of the female character.

Any system of education that exposes young females too prominently to the gaze of the promiscuous crowd—that shocks the natural modesty and retiring delicacy, which are at once the ornament and the protection of the sex—that blunts sensibility, encourages forwardness—that shows off a bold girl, and keeps the charms of a diffident one in the shade, is to be looked upon suspiciously, and as tending to deteriorate society, when the generation under the influence of those causes shall have grown to maturity, and shall be giving tone to society.

In the organization of Female Institutions, every thing should be rigidly discarded that developes a spirit alien to the domestic retirement and quiet of that sphere in which woman is destined to act, and where the truly accomplished female exerts an influence at once so benign and powerful, so elevating and refining.

Let the Trustees and Faculties of the Greensboro' and Griffin Female Seminaries, in their organization and plans, carefully eschew all humbuggery and false show. Whilst they labour to provide for the fair daughters of the land a solid and accomplished education, under the benignant influence of Christianity, let them guard against vanity and a prurient love of display, and wise parents will appreciate their claims.

I recently read in the columns of a prominent newspaper, an account of a commencement of a new Female College. You would have thought that each of the Female orators of the graduating class was an angel just let down from heaven. The writer speaks of the good fortune of the men who should be happy enough to gain their fair hands, as though these young girls had not vanity enough already without being inflated by the sickly compliments of an undiscriminating and wholesale flatterer, and as though they would not think of beaus and of matrimony quite early enough without the auxiliary suggestions of a prompter.

* Just as we are going to press, we observe with deep regret an announcement that the Seminary building at Griffin, Ga., had been consumed by fire.

THE PIONEER ENGLISH SCHOOLMASTER AT ALBANY.

The following copy from an original record in the Secretary of State's Office, New York, is a relict of antiquity worth preserving.

The Governor's License, granted unto John Shutte, for teaching of the English Tongue at Albany.

Whereas the teaching of the English Tongue is necessary in this Government; I have, therefore, thought fitt to give License to John Shutte to bee the English Schoolmaster at Albany: And upon condition that the said John Shutte shall not demand any more wages from each Schollar than is given by the Dutch to their Dutch Schoolmasters, I have further granted to the said John Shutte that hee shall bee the onely English Schoolmaster at Albany.

Given under my hand, at Fort James in New York, the 12th day of October, 1665.

RICH'D NICOLLS.

We hope the State system will not seek to continue this monoply of "English schoolmasters," but will allow the Church free scope to carry forward its instructions in the language of Zion.

THE IMPORTANCE OF EARLY RELIGIOUS EDUCATION OF CHILDREN.

Children are capable of receiving religious impressions at a very early age. They are then much more readily brought under religious influence than in after years, when their habits are confirmed, and hearts hardened by contact with an evil world. Every husbandman and zoologist is familiar with this principle and turns it to profit. When the husbandman would train a vine, he does not select the rugged growth of years, but would rather choose the tender scion, and transfer it to his vineyard, while its fibres are flexible and its tendrils delicate. With such a choice he finds but little resistance in shaping its growth. When the zoologist would domesticate a wild animal he would not choose one with fully developed frame and ferocity, matured by the exercise of its native habits, but rather select the young, ere its fierce nature has been matured. Then his task is easy. From these observations we should learn a lesson in reference to our children. Multitudes, who become the subjects of grace in advanced age, in their fierce struggles against early habits, are led to deplore the deprivation of early religious instruction.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, September 13, 1852.

India.—Letters have been received from Amballa, June 25; Saharanpur, June 25; Futtehpore, June 26. The health of Mr. Morrison was gradually improving. At both Amballa and Saharanpur, the various labours of the missionaries were going on as usual. At the new station at Futtehpore, in connexion with the Allahabad mission, a beginning had been made. Mr. Munnis reports 145 boys in the school, and mentions the liberal interest manifested by English residents in the success of the new station.

Siam.—Dr. House writes, under date of May 26, "The usual Sabbath and daily religious services are sustained by these brethren, (Mattoon and Bush,) and I have more time for tract distribution. The ladies continue their visits to the palace, with unabated interest on their part, and on the part, I believe, of their pupils. Under the new reign we certainly are treated with more respect than formerly by all classes, and find the people more willing than before to converse on the subject of religion, nay, ready even to introduce it themselves; but, alas, the first inquirer among the Siamese, who is really in earnest about the great salvation, we have yet to find."

China.—Letters have reached us from Canton, June 24; Shanghai, June 16; Ningpo, June 8. Mr. Happer had been suffering for some time with inflammation of the eyes, preventing him from engaging in his usual duties, but was better at the last date. He speaks of an aged man, an attendant at the Dispensary, who "professes to have renounced his idols, and to worship and trust in Jesus alone." One of the truant boys, John G. Bergen, had not been able to pay for a passage to California, and was received back into the school. At Ningpo, an edition of 10,000 copies of the new version of Genesis was about to be printed, mostly for the missionaries of other societies. Mr. W. Martin's work on Geography in the Romanized Colloquial, Mr. Way's Geography in the Chinese character, Mr. Quarterman's translation of "the Union Questions" on the Old Testament, and Mr. Happer's Questions and Answers on the New Testament, had been just printed or were in press. Dr. M'Cartee was engaged in translating a work on Mechanics and Natural Philosophy. Mr. Rankin mentions, as under the instruction of his wife, an aged woman, concerning whom it was hoped that she had "indeed tasted of the grace of Christ."

Creeks.—A letter from Mr. Loughridge, of July 14, states: "At our communion on the 11th inst., one Indian was received into the church on profession of his faith. There is a very interesting state of inquiry among the children of the school."

P.; Education of Hindu Women, by X.; "Men with hot hearts," by Iota; Donations in July.—Selected articles: "I long to see the Sun;" Prayer for the Heathen; An aged inquirer; The carnal mind; A sweet comforter.

September No.—Pamphlet Edition: The same as above, with the addition of The Monthly Concert Meeting—How shall it be made interesting?; An unknown champion for the truth; Gujerat—Liberality of a heathen lady.

Revised Terms.

For the terms of the Foreign Missionary, as conformed to the new postage Law, see notice on page 158. According to these terms, there are two rates, one for twenty copies and upwards, the other for packages under twenty copies. On the former, weighing not less than eight ounces, the postage will be prepaid; on the latter, the postage falls on the subscribers at the office of delivery, where, if paid quarterly in advance, it is one-half cent on each copy. As an offset in part to the postage which subscribers will have to pay on packages under twenty copies, the price is reduced to seventy cents for ten copies, or thirty-five cents for five copies, to the address of one person. As the lowest rate of postage is available only on packages of eight ounces weight and upwards, we hope that in all cases where it can be done, orders will be sent for the largest number of copies. Send on $2.00, $3.00, $5.00, or any larger sum, and packages of 20, 30, 50, or more copies will be sent—postage all paid every month, without any trouble to subscribers.

Day-school; teacher wanted—Medical practice; physician wanted—Girls' school; scholars received—Attendance at Church.

After Mr. Allison, the teacher whom I had here from Gaboon, had returned thither, there was no one to conduct the boys' school. I thought, however, that I could spare two or three hours a day, to be in the school, to govern it. The school increased from fifty-four, which it had numbered under Mr. Allison, to seventy-two boys and young men. But I soon found that the labour of attending to it, together with my other duties, was beyond my strength. Not a day passes, but what I have several patients to administer medicine to, either at the mission-house, or at some of the neighbouring towns. When I had attended to these, to the school, and to my various duties about the mission-house, I was totally exhausted, every evening, often so much fatigued, that I was barely able to stand on my feet. I was compelled, therefore, after a trial of one month, to disband the school. It was with much sorrow that I did it, for the instruction of the youth here is certainly the most promising part of our work. Can you not send us two teachers? I am afraid we will have to wait a long time if we are to get teachers from any place on this coast. I have written to the Rev. D. A. Wilson, at Monrovia, according to your suggestion, but when I will hear from him, or have an opportunity of writing again, I do not know. The means of communicating from here back to Monrovia are very unfrequent. I have only had one opportunity since I heard of Mr. Wilson's arrival out, and that was by Captain Brown's return on his recent voyage.

There has been a complete revolution in regard to the opinion and confidence of the people respecting medicine, since our mission was established here. There would be a fine field open to a pious physician. I am called upon to see the sick oftener than I can go. Recently my other labours have been such that I could not go out often to the towns. Every day patients either come or are brought to the mission-house to receive medical aid. The superstitious mummeries and drummings and dancings over the sick are nearly altogether abandoned. Their native doctors use very few remedies that have any medical virtue at all. There are some important medical plants growing here, but they formerly knew nothing of their properties. For the cure of diseases they depended on their fetish to drive away the evil spirit which they supposed caused the disease.

The house for the girls' school was completed and the school got under weigh about the first of this month. Many more girls were offered than we were willing to take as boarders. When I wrote last, I mentioned that we would take ten out of the number offered. I selected that number. Three of them are betrothed to boys who are employed about the mission-house. Five of the rest are free from any engagements, and their fathers promised, that on condition that I take them, they should not be betrothed to men having wives already, nor removed from the mission until they grew up to be women. The remaining two are betrothed to men who have a plurality of wives already. One of them I hope to get released, and the other was taken under peculiar circumstances that I need not now detail. Their ages vary from about six to ten, as nearly as I can guess. A few day-scholars come, but the number will not be large.

Sabathu—The Hill States as a Missionary field—Encouraging fruits of former labours.

I have just read Bro. Newton's description of Sabathu, published in the March number of the Record, and fully agree with him as to the desirableness of re-occupying it as a missionary station. But out of so many invalids, whom shall we appoint to occupy it, and who can be spared from our other stations? One remark I make from experience: A man to labour on the hills must have muscular strength. A broken down man would be of very little use. The people must be visited in their villages perched on the tops of almost perpendicular mountains, and buried in dells whose depth seems beyond the reach of man. To do this requires no little nerve. He must also be a man of faith, patience, and perseverance. I laboured some eight or nine years in this place without fruit, but I now see my labour was not in vain. Five of my old disciples have, since I left, been baptized, two of whom were the Sikhs. Bro. Porter baptized them about a year ago in Lodiáná, and there are still some in and about Sabathu who confess the truth; some also have died expressing hope in Christ. Many of my school-boys have grown up to be bearded men, and still hail me as their gúrú; one of them, near Sabathu, is the brother of a chief and acting as regent to his son.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. J. H MORRISON. AMBALLA, JUNE 23, 1852.

More labourers needed—Bazár labours—Prayer all-important.

After stating the interruption to his work by reason of serious illness, and then referring to the school, which "was never in a better state, or presented a better prospect of usefulness than it does at present," Mr. Morrison proceeds as follows:

We want more help. Indeed, unless we are reinforced soon, I fear, in a year or two, we shall be compelled to discuss the question as to which station shall be given up or suspended. Even now we labour at a very great disadvantage for want of a full complement of men, but if one or two more of our number should be laid aside, I can see no alternative but we must either give up some of our stations, or give up important operations at the stations thus weakened.

Our bazár work with all its discouragements offers much to encourage. The clique that long annoyed us, has been completely driven from the ground, and now no educated Musalmán ever pretends to contest the point with us. We are sometimes annoyed by ignorant fellows, of the baser sort, who know nothing of their own religion; but as to discussion of the great points at issue, we have it all to ourselves. Still their opposition is not the less determined or effective. For as sure as any man listens to us with interest, or takes a book, or makes an inquiry that shows a disposition to seek for the truth, he becomes a marked man, and influences are exerted on him, which soon compel him to desist. When once marked, they dare not be seen walking with us or our native Christians, or speaking civilly to us. Indeed we are beginning to avoid, in the city, those who show a disposition to listen and inquire, lest it should be the means of marking them for this sort of persecution. We have also heard of threats that all the Musalmán boys were to be taken from the school lest they should be made Christians. Indeed there has been no little effort made, by force or fraud, to produce that result.

All this shows that our influence is felt and feared as well as hated. It shows that the leaven is at work. In this state of things we need nothing so much as the prayers of the people of God, until he grant us an outpouring of the Spirit, which will cause the seed sown to spring up and bring forth an abundant harvest unto eternal life. But, I fear, such appeals have been made so often, that Christians at home are beginning practically to regard them as merely a part of the necessary form of a missionary letter or journal, not intended to exert any practical influence on the reader. None but a missionary knows how discouraging this is. None but he knows how the heart, as it were, faints and sinks within him, at every fresh indication of this state of things in the church. Yet if they could only see what we see, and hear what we hear, and feel what we feel—in other words were it possible for us to give them a true picture of the state of things here, in its native colours, I am certain no impression would be deeper than that we must all pray more and pray differently.

THE OPPOSITION OF THE HINDUS TO THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION AND ITS CAUSES: BY THE REV. J. L. SCOTT.

It cannot be doubted that the inhabitants of Hindustan generally entertain a peculiar, and most virulent dislike to the Christian religion. This dislike is natural to fallen man, and no doubt exists in all countries, and in the hearts of all ungodly men; for "the carnal heart is enmity against God," and cannot but hate the things of God. But there seems to be something beyond this in Hindustan. It is not merely that Christianity is an embodiment of the purity of God that it is abhorred by the Hindus. There are other causes at work, and it is proper that Christians at home should know what these are, in order that they may understand the difficulties with which we have to contend, and pray the more earnestly for our success. Let the truth be told. It will always, in the end, be beneficial.

[The feeling of dislike to Christianity has been strongly displayed in Calcutta by events of no remote date. Public meetings were held, and violent resolutions adopted, to secure the repeal of the law by which those who renounce caste should no longer be subject to the loss of property. A leading inducement to these measures was the apprehension that many might become Christians.] In most other places besides Calcutta—and I speak especially of the north-west—the dislike to Christianity is not less real; but it is not so well organized, and partakes more largely of the elements of ignorance and prejudice. The great mass of the people know but very little of what it is. Their idea of a Christian I believe is about this: that he is one who wears English clothes, drinks brandy, and eats beef and all kinds of abominable things. They see us pay no attention to external forms and ceremonies, on which they place so much reliance, and they think that we have very little regard to religion of any kind. We are in a religious point of view, the unclean. Even the Mohammedans, though beef-eaters, and thoroughly hated as religionists, have a regard to what is clean and unclean, and have far more external religion than we have. The term Christiyán (Christian) is a term of reproach, or at least it conveys so unpleasant an idea, that if a Hindu wishes to be respectful he will not use it. It is applied by the people entirely to native Christians, and I believe the idea generally conveyed by it, is that of a worthless vagabond, who from motives of gain has renounced the religion of his fathers, and who is now at liberty to do all kinds of abominable things. Those who have had more intercourse with the world, of course have their ideas somewhat modified, but they are not mitigated. It is not dislike to us as foreigners. We, as belonging to the ruling class, are generally respected, and treated with a high degree of deference. It is considered natural and proper that we should be Christians. If they find us just, kind, generous, and religious after our own way; if they see us earnestly engaged in efforts for their good, they will only respect us the more. They generally listen to our preaching with deference. When we urge the moral doctrines of the gospel, they approve with apparent cordiality. For the cross of Christ they have no relish, but they will generally listen, and admit that Jesus Christ was as true an incarnation as their own Ram or Krishna. It is only when you ask them to renounce Hinduism and become Christians, that their whole soul revolts at the idea. It implies so much that is abhorrent to their feelings, and wakes up such a train of revolting images, that they turn from it with disgust.

Whence this exceeding dislike?

Much might be said in answer to this question. I shall only mention those causes which I conceive to be in some measure peculiar to Hindustan.

1. The influence of caste. It is not in the power of language to portray the full evil of this dreadful system. Imagine society cut up into numerous divisions, all the parts closely united in the bonds of brotherhood; depending upon each other for most of the enjoyments and amenities of life; forbidden to eat or drink with any one not in their own circle; unable to marry or give their children in marriage out of the prescribed bounds; and above all, the conduct of every member subjected to the scrutiny of an eldership of their own; and it will not be hard to perceive the strength of the chain which binds them. The Hindu is a slave; a willing slave to his caste. If he offend his brethren or break the rules of caste, they meet and punish him. Most likely he is interdicted from eating and drinking with them, until he restore himself by giving them a feast; a contingency which a poor man will avoid as he would an adder. If this crime should be of a nature not to be forgiven, he is irretrievably cast out; and who can tell the horror of that event? Father, mother, brother, sister, wife, child, friend, companion, he has none. No one to pity him, no one to sympathize with him, no one to help him. He sinks down into the dregs of society—drags out a weary life, and becomes a miserable outcast. Christianity is a direct antagonist of caste. Christians all eat and drink together at the Lord's supper. To a Hindu the very first idea of Christianity is the giving up of caste. These societies therefore guard themselves and their members against the danger of contamination. If any one is disposed to listen to our instructions, he must be careful that he does not go too far, lest he should bring down upon himself the wrath of the council. Thus, caste is a lion guarding the way to the tree of life, and ready to spring upon the too daring adventurer. Unless a man is already a vagabond, and so has nothing to lose, or unless he can satisfy his brethren that he has some other object in view, or unless perchance he be a sincere inquirer, and ready to hazard every thing, he dare not come too frequently to us for instruction. The consequence of all this is that a man must not inquire; he must not open his mind to the light; he must remain ignorant and prejudiced, and look upon Christianity as a deadly evil to be avoided and detested.

2. The peculiar prejudices of the country in reference to the sacredness of animal life, and especially that of the cow, is another cause of the dislike of the Hindus to Christianity. Many of the Hindus kill various kinds of animals, and eat them too, but no one ever dares to lay violent hands upon the cow; and it is more holy to abstain from all animal food, and protect all animal life. The idea is that in killing an animal you may perhaps be killing your own father or mother, for they all believe in the doctrine of transmigration, and make no difference between the soul of a man and that of an animal. The cow is sacred, and is exceedingly dear to a Hindu's heart. She understands his language. I have heard a cow-herd talking to his cow as if she were a reasonable being, and he seemed to think she understood every thing he said, only she did not answer. Gow-hatiya, cow-murder, as the killing of the cow is called, is the very summit of crime, a murder infinitely more heinous than that of a human being. In this respect we outrage their prejudices dreadfully. We kill, and eat every day, our religion allows us to do so; but it must be a bad religion in the estimation of the ignorant and prejudiced Hindu, that will grant such an unholy and detestable indulgence. They cannot think of it without abhorrence.

On this point their prejudices are aroused sooner than in any other way. There was a wicked native Christian in Futtehgurh, supported for a time as a catechist by an officer in the army, but who did every thing he could to hinder us in our work. There was a village close by, where we were in the habit of going to preach, and where the people listened to us with much respect. This emissary of Satan, when he learnt how it was, followed us up. Collecting the people together, he said that he had something very important to tell them. Do the Sahibs come here to preach? Yes. Well then let me warn you. Listen to them ten times, and they will get an order from the Governor-General, and make you all Christians. They will make you eat beef. So it was with me. They made me drunk, put a piece of beef into my mouth, and I became a Christian. I have had my tail cut off, but I do not, like the fox, wish to see you in the same plight, I have therefore come to you as a friend to warn you. This was enough. The next time one of our number went to the village he was pelted with stones, and for a long time the people were afraid to listen to us.

3. Another cause of this dislike is, that Christianity has in this country been sadly betrayed, misrepresented, and shorn of her beauty by her professed friends. Among the English, formerly there was scarcely any sign of religion, not even the external appearance of it. Things are much better now. There is, here and there, a goodly number of truly pious people. But the great majority still know nothing of the spirit of Christianity, and do not recommend it in their lives. Among the native Christians, on whom much more depends in this case, we hope there are many of God's people, but it cannot be denied that many of them also are exceedingly weak, and that they often bring disgrace upon the cause of Christ. There is especially a pretty large class—most of them Roman Catholics, who go about through the country as beggars. These men are utterly ignorant of Christianity, and are a deeply degraded class. Many of them dress themselves up in old cast-off European clothes, and dirty, and ragged, they go about committing all kinds of iniquity, and wallowing in all kinds of impurity. They present a picture at which respectable Hindus shudder, and no doubt the thought often crosses their minds,—such would we be, if we were to become Christians.

4. I can only mention one more cause:—the influence of government. The officers at the head of affairs are nominally Christians, and some of them, no doubt, truly so. But the government is scarcely worthy of the name of a Christian government, though it is gradually coming round. Formerly idolatry was countenanced in several ways, and even yet, in the southern part of India, the connexion is not entirely dissolved. But the course which government adopted in former times, in reference to the schools and colleges for native education, has not yet been changed, and is most deplorable. We would not ask them directly to patronize Christianity, for that would hardly be right; all we ask is that it should not be prescribed and forbidden, as is the case at present. A teacher in a government school must not open his lips on the subject of Christianity. The Bible must not be brought within the walls of the building. A boy, should he be ever so desirous, must not learn anything about God and heaven. The consequence is, that the natives consider the government as opposed to Christianity, and on their side. No serious Christian will hold a place as teacher in these institutions. The situations are filled by worldly minded men—often by infidels. The boys who are instructed in these schools come out of them thorough infidels, both as regards Hinduism and Christianity, knowing nothing of the Bible, but often armed with the arguments of Paine and Volney.

What I have said above is not to discourage. The gospel can triumph over all this, and much, much more. "Who art thou, O mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain." Let us not be discouraged, but only arm ourselves more fully for the conflict. Let the missionary be more zealous and laborious, let the church be more instant and earnest in prayer, and even India will be vanquished. Her gods will be forsaken, and her temples will be brought down to the dust, or converted into temples for the worship of Jehovah.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. J. E. FREEMAN.

Incidents by the way.

After leaving Calcutta, we came in a few hours to a city long noted as the mount from whence has flowed in various and increasingly multiplied streams, the word of the Lord. Dark, very dark were the days when the altar was here first erected, but brighter days have passed, and brighter still are in prospect. Vast changes have taken place among the heathen, since Dr. Carey could hold up the word of life and cry, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters" of eternal life. There are many events constantly recurring which show the change wrought upon the heart of the people, insomuch that even those who have stood unmoved by changes, and least impressed by them, are now compelled to yield to the surrounding pressure, and to act according to these outward movements. One of these events at this place, strikingly shows the power of truth, and its effect upon the religious guides and rulers of the people. In one of the missionary institutions, a young man of high brahmanical birth, connections, and standing, was led by the Spirit of God to renounce idolatry, and to become a follower of the despised Nazarene. He was united in marriage to a high brahmanical family of this place. After his conversion, he felt a strong desire that his wife should become a partaker with him in the joys of salvation. To attain this, he often by letter or otherwise, related to her "what the Lord had done for his soul," and urged her to cast in her lot with the people of God. She saw his happiness and designed to share it with him. This could not be done, except by forsaking all for Christ. Even this she was willing to do, for she longed to know more of that gospel which had brought such love and joy to the heart of her husband. Months passed away, and this longing kindled into resolves to give up all for Christ. The parents were asked to allow her to join her husband, that she might live the life of a Christian among his Christian friends. The parents could not, and would not if they could, consent to bring disgrace upon themselves and upon their brahmanical relatives and friends, by permitting their daughter to become a Christian. They chose rather to imprison her, and thus quench the fire of Christian love. Love for Jesus and her partner, his disciple, crept through the bars, and leapt over the walls of her prison, and heart was still joined to heart by various tokens and epistles. At length a plan was laid for an escape to, and union with her husband. The plan was scented by some of the leading brahmans. They went to the parents, and talked the whole case over, and others too, which had occurred in Calcutta, and stated that although violently opposed the cause of Christ had triumphed, and greater disgrace was entailed upon the families offering opposition—said they, you cannot prevent her from embracing Christianity, except by taking her life, or by imprisonment for life—better far, let her take the responsibility—let her be brought out in the presence of all, and then and there allow her to make choice of what she will do. This most unexpected and unusual advice was in due time followed. The family, relatives, friends, and distinguished brahmans were assembled, and among them one whose eye was clear and whose face shone, for hope was the light thereof. He knew from the past that there would be no faltering in the hour of trial. The assembly stood in silence, breathless, yet moved with deep emotion. The question was put "Will you go with this man?" and she said, "I will go." Amazement and confusion veiled every face save two, that never shone brighter or appeared more lovely. Whatever might have been the feelings of the multitude, the happy pair felt as none can describe, a burthen that none can estimate had been suddenly removed. Joys that few can realize were theirs for ever, if they were the children of God. Together they journeyed to his home among the people of God. There they live in happy union, witnessing a good profession, and living epistles, read of all men. This event gladdened many hearts that have borne the burden and heat of the day. Christians at home can not realize the change which has been wrought by truth, when an assembly of brahmans can willingly assent that one of their own number shall be allowed to embrace Christianity, and that freely, openly, and publicly. The moral effect too of such an act, will reach far down the stream of time. It is the Lord's doing, and marvellous in our eyes.

Bible at the writing-desk.

On the eleventh day after leaving Calcutta, and about one hundred and seventy miles from the same, we came to anchor on the Jallinghi, at the town of Karímpúr. There we spent the Sabbath. Early in the morning I went up to preach the gospel and distribute the word of life to the people. As I drew near the centre of the town, my eye caught a large well-known book lying beside a portable writing-desk, and the owner was sitting beside them with a number of well-dressed natives around him, and all very busy in settling accounts. The counting houses of merchants in this country are generally an open portico, or some open room put up for the purpose. With deeply interested feelings I approached the portico, to inquire into the history of said book and its possessor. I learned that the owner of the book was the head clerk of a rich native merchant. The book was a copy of the New Testament in Bengalee. The reason of its presence here, was that it might be studied at leisure moments. Upon inquiry I found that the young man had been educated in one of the Presbyterian Mission schools of Calcutta. After completing his education he entered the house of the merchant here as head clerk, and having read the Bible in school, and learned something of its valuable precepts, he preferred it above all books. He believed its truths, and would prefer to be with Christians to learn more of it, but his "parents had put a bridle upon his mouth," lest he should confess Christ to their disgrace. Said he, I love them and must obey them. I read, or quoted several passages in reference to our duty to God, and our love for him and his service, which should at all times surpass any duty rendered, or love given to any other object, and that while we were required to believe with the heart, we were equally bound with the tongue to confess Christ before all men. He admitted the full claims of the gospel, but felt the parental "bridle" and said that it alone prevented him from publicly avowing his attachment to Christ. The incident was cheering and instructive. There was seen the power of truth in dispelling darkness, removing prejudice, inclining the heart to good, implanting a desire for clearer light, and giving a relish for truth, as in itself more to be desired than gold. Here was public testimony given to truth as found in the Bible. Here was taught the important lesson of improving spare moments by searching after knowledge, and that the best knowledge is found in the word of God. This young man confessed to me that it was daily his delight, and by making it his companion at the desk he testified the same to all who might see it. It will be a bright and cheering day for India when every clerk and every clerk's room shall be adorned with the Bible, and its precepts become the rule of action. We have reason to believe that there are many such youths who have been enlightened by the word of God in mission schools, and are now spreading the leaven of truth in all parts of the land. A number of influential men were present that morning from different country villages, and heard the history of that precious book, and witnessed its power upon its possessor, and listened to our long conversation in reference to the purity of heart which it requires, and the high hope which the man of God has, that it will yet enlighten every house of India. Will they go home and forget the Testament at the writing-desk? I went anew to our work in the strength and spirit of our Master, with greater zeal, constancy, fervency and hope, believing that the whole land will yet be leavened.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. H. V. RANKIN.

Itinerating; facilities for reaching the villages and preaching to the people.

January 16th, 1852.—In company with two brethren made an excursion into the country for the purpose of itinerating. As yet we are hardly prepared to spend much strength in this kind of labour, chiefly from the fact that not enough of the Scripture is as yet translated into the Ningpo language (as distinct from the written language of China) to read to the people the word of eternal life. Without a settled rendering of the more important parts of Scripture, we can, when asked upon this subject, only give the general sense of the word of God; and hence are obliged to confine ourselves to addressing the people, without being able to hold up the word as the revelation of God to man. Thus we can "warn every man," but we cannot "teach every man in all wisdom." This difficulty however is being gradually removed by the prosecution of a work already referred to, viz. the translation of the Gospel of Luke into the Ningpo Colloquial. Yet, even without this, itinerating is a very profitable employment. The simple-minded villagers seem so much more ready to listen to the strange doctrine of Jesus and the resurrection than the people in the city. We have far greater access to the women in the country, who, wherever we preached to-day, formed perhaps the largest part of our audiences, and in almost every instance listened with marked attention. Whatever village we entered, one of our number at least tarried for a while to unfold the blessed truths of the gospel, and to distribute books to whoever could read; and I can but hope that some good impression will be left. We have our Saviour's own example to encourage us in this kind of labour, and our general experience seems to be, that every day passed in the country is a profitable and pleasant one. The people generally are at leisure, and their hearts, the world over, are much more open than those in the city. It strikes me that this is eventually to be one of the most successful modes of propagating the gospel in China. The facilities for itinerating in this land are remarkable. Perhaps there is no village in the whole circuit of country about Ningpo which may not be reached by boat, either on the river or the numerous canals which interlace this vast plain. For the sum of twenty-five or thirty cents we can hire a boat to be absent an entire day, and which is capable of holding several individuals. Thus we can be transported with our books, &c., from village to village in the most convenient manner. Our families can also readily accompany us, and in these boats, which are quite comfortable, we can pass as many days as we please. Nor is the physical advantage to the missionary to be overlooked.

Surrender of pirates to the authorities—Corruption of the officers—Ningpo "Vigilance Committee"—Scene in a Budhist monastery.

January 21.—To-day we hear that the pirates, who have been such a cause of alarm to the government, have surrendered some of their vessels and have submitted to the rightful authorities, upon the consideration of a large sum of money which has been paid them by the mandarins, who, for this purpose, have imposed a heavy tax upon the landholders in Ningpo. Part of this tax they will undoubtedly retain themselves, for none are greater pirates among the people than their own officers. This is readily acknowledged by the people. It is an established law in China that no mandarin can govern in the province in which he was brought up, so that they are virtually foreigners, speaking a different language, and having nothing in common with the people whom they are set over. Our oldest missionary in some cases has been called upon to interpret between a Ningpo man and his officer! It is further reported that some of the more notable of the pirates have been promised offices in consequence of submission!

Thursday, January 22d.—An immense excitement prevailed yesterday in the city. Bishop Smith, in his "Researches in China," refers in his 15th chapter (p. 184) to a visit to the flower-garden of a wealthy gentleman named Mr. Kang. This garden has hitherto been to foreigners one of the most attractive places of resort in Ningpo. The old gentleman died a year or two since, but the family have continued to retain the monopoly of salt, which has been a source of great revenue to them. It has, however, brought them into frequent collisions with the people, especially in the country, where they have endeavoured unjustly to extend this monopoly. So frequently had they been threatened with violence by the people, that two of our mission were offered, six years ago, rooms in their house, in order that they might be a safeguard against any attack. Frequent outbreaks have occurred between their own underlings and the smugglers of salt out of Ningpo, which has resulted in more or less sacrifice of human life. The people have also complained that the price of salt has been raised beyond its legitimate value. Within a few days, however, they became fully exasperated upon the occasion of the imprisonment of a popular man among them on the ground of smuggling salt. Notice was immediately sent to the city on Tuesday, that a large band of men might be expected yesterday at a given time, for the purpose of avenging their wrongs. The shop-keepers were, however, told that it would be unnecessary to close their shops, as no violence might be expected by them. At the time appointed they came—an army, according to the calculation of some, of twenty thousand men, drawn from sixty temple districts, with their banners flying, and their protecting idols carried among them. After resting a while in the large parade ground outside the city, they marched orderly along to the office of the city prefect, when, after some little trouble, they released the prisoner and obliged the prefect to flee. Thence they proceeded to the house of Mr. Kang and immediately set fire to his premises, which in a few hours were totally consumed. Here too they acted with all the decorum of a "Vigilance Committee." The females of the house were suffered to escape without any ill treatment, though they were not allowed to carry off any of their valuables. The gates were most carefully guarded, so as to prevent a single act of thieving. Every thing was destroyed by the flames. At the same time they succeeded in preventing any of the neighbouring houses from taking fire, and guarded them against any improper intrusion. When the destruction was completed, they retired in the same orderly manner; and before many hours that vast throng were quietly settled in their respective homes, as if nothing had happened! The mandarins, with a handful of soldiers, I noticed late in the evening making a feint of pursuing them, but of course it was all for effect. Probably nothing will be done in behalf of the family thus suddenly bereft of their worldly goods, and the whole matter will pass over in silence. How utterly weak is such a government!

The literary men in the city are also greatly excited in consequence of the ill-treatment of one of the higher order of scholars, by the priests of one of the Budhist monasteries, with whom he had been for some time at variance. It was supposed that these priests had recently introduced some females into their monastery—a sin with them of a most heinous nature—and from actual observation, he discovered this to be a fact. The priests took the alarm, and hurried off the women into boats to go into the country. At this juncture, the scholar met the priests with a company of men, but in the encounter he was badly injured. He immediately appealed to the prefect, who had however already received a large bribe from the priests, so that he could get no redress. This produces great indignation. The whole affair is not yet fully known.

January 23d. The report reaches us that on the island of Chusan the people have risen against the Roman Catholics, and driven some of them from the island, and burned their places of worship. They have been exasperated by the impositions of the Papists, who have retained some Budhist temples, which they had at first unlawfully taken possession of, and where they had set up their own rites. In my journal of last August, I referred to the condition of Romanism upon this island. No foreigner has been continuously residing there, though Bishop Danicourt has looked well to the interests of his faith, and has been seconded in his efforts by the French Consul at Shangbae. To-day these two dignitaries called upon the Taou-tae, probably to obtain, if possible, some redress. We learn that the pirates have broken faith with the authorities, and are plundering at Chinhai. A government fleet is now in our river, too secure probably to risk an engagement. Their most reliable vessel is an old Baltimore clipper, the "Boxer," which was purchased a few years since by the Chinese.

Preaching on the Sabbath—Monthly Concert—Death of Dr. Alexander.

Sabbath 25th. What a different class of people we meet with upon different Sabbaths. Sometimes I have gone to my preaching places and the rooms have been quite full of attentive hearers, and again only a few have entered in. To-day, at both the services which I conducted, the audiences were good, and they listened with evident interest. Upon the whole, so far as I can discover, the truth is gaining upon the minds, if not the hearts, of the people.

February 2d. Our monthly concert-day is always a profitable one. The services in the afternoon are always conducted by the brethren of all the missions here, in alphabetical succession, and are oftentimes full of interest. To-day, letters were read from Amoy, giving accounts of a pleasing work of grace among that people, which for many months has been progressive. How pleasing the reflection, that one day in every month is thus set apart by Christians all over the world to pray for this blessed object with which we are so nearly identified.

February 14th. The overland mail reached us, bringing tidings of the death of Dr. Alexander. As may well be supposed, this sad event brought grief to many hearts in China, and we all felt that a great man had fallen in Israel. Doubtless every one of the 1600 ministers who have been taught from his lips could relate incidents respecting this patriarch, all of which would tend to illustrate those wonderful traits of character which were so peculiarly his. Blessed be God, for the long continuance upon this earth of such a holy man!

Trip into the Country—Numerous Villages—Encouraging fields of labour.

February 23d. With two brethren took a trip into the country. We were led a little out of the way we had purposed to go, and to our surprise found ourselves on the road to Ling-fong, a famous temple some fifteen miles off among the hills. We noticed the providence of this in finding ourselves in company with an immense throng of pilgrims, chiefly women, who were just returning from worship on this one of the "high days" of the year. We had not been previously aware of this circumstance, but of course improved it to the best of our ability, so that very many of these poor idolaters heard the gospel of Jesus Christ. We spoke to every company that passed by, and when there were any capable of reading, we distributed books. We afterwards went to the village which we had previously purposed to visit, and there again had good audiences. One can hardly imagine how numerous and populous are the villages in our immediate vicinity. Wherever we turn our eyes a cluster of houses may be seen, in each of which, according to their patriarchal mode of life, several families related together would be found. In a single day we may visit several of these villages, but when the day's work is over we find that we have necessarily neglected many on our right hand and on our left—in fact, that we have done almost nothing. It is impossible to be out of the sight of a village, and it would be difficult to place ourselves in any position where we would be distant from one a quarter of a mile. What a teeming population, all open to the efforts of the missionary of the cross. I have never yet heard an impudent remark made to me at any place that I have visited, but, on the contrary, the people generally listen to us with some degree at least of attention. They do not, it is true, appreciate the objects for which we go among them, but this we hope they will do, when they shall learn more of our character and of the doctrines which we teach. How comforting to plant ourselves upon, not the mere signs of the times, but the immutable promises of God, and reflect that we are taking possession now of this land in the name of our prince Immanuel, to whom this people are yet to be subject. The missionary work, even in the darkest hours, can in no respect be properly called a discouraging work, for it is emphatically the work of God. "The word has gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, that unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear." To this glorious consummation the eye of faith looks with most cheerful confidence. Hasten it, Lord, in thine own time!

Visit from a class-mate—Missions at Fuh-Chau.

February 26th. We were permitted to welcome today, a fellow-labourer from Fuh-Chau, who was a class-mate in the Seminary at Princeton, the Rev. Mr. Baldwin, who has come on a short visit with his family. He has been obliged to leave his post for a while, on account of ill health.

Monday, March 1st. At the monthly concert, this P. M., Mr. Baldwin gave some account of the aspect of affairs at Fuh-Chau. There are at present three Societies represented at that post, (1) The American Board, which has five married missionaries. (2) The American Methodist Church, which has four married missionaries. (3) The Church Missionary Society, which is represented by one missionary physician. Excepting the last named, none of them have as yet succeeded in getting either houses or chapels within the city, and they have from the outset met with much resistance on the part of the officers. Yet they have there a still wider field, so far as population is concerned, than here. It is estimated that in the city and immediate suburbs of Fuh-Chau, there are a million of inhabitants, and in the seven hundred circumjacent villages, all of which are within a day's journey, there are half a million more. The language is as entirely different from that spoken here as it is possible to conceive. This is generally polysyllabic, whereas that is composed chiefly of monosyllables. Here we employ many more letters in the Roman alphabet than they—so that while all their initials and finals amount only to forty-eight, there are nearly ninety here. Hence the greater necessity of the use of the tones with them than with us.

March 4th. The cold weather still continues. This has proved to be the coldest and longest winter yet experienced by foreigners at Ningpo. We have had a good deal of ice and snow, so that our trees and the tops of our houses have often brought to mind a February at home. A good deal of wet weather has also prevailed. Yet, in the kind providence of God, we are now all quite well.

EUROPE: MISSIONS IN FRANCE.

REPORT ON EVANGELIZATION IN ISERE.

Labours of Mr. C—.—Violent Opposition.

No change has taken place in the position of our evangelist, C—. He continues to reside principally at G—, the capital of the department. Conjointly with the minister of that city, he labours there among the Protestants and Catholics; but the greater portion of his time is devoted to evangelization in the country, to a considerable distance around G—. He visits more particularly the boroughs of A— and V—, the former in the mountains that separate France from the Savoy, the latter on the road to G—. Of all the localities within the range of his evangelization, A— is that which stands foremost as affording satisfaction. A small knot of Christians has been formed there, simple, but firm and decided, producing manifest proofs of the reality of their faith, amidst the opprobrium and persecution they are enduring from a population over which the popish clergy are exercising a greater influence than in most other places; and where, therefore, the Bible Christian must encounter the most violent opposition, of which several proofs have been reported in our preceding papers. "Our friend J.," writes Mr. C—, "has a son twenty-four years of age. For a month past the Curé and two bigoted families have been exciting the young man, and irritating him against his father to such a degree, that the unhappy child has threatened to kill him as a heretic. J. himself related this to me with tears. 'What would have become of me,' he added, 'had not faith in our Lord Jesus Christ sustained me!' The priest has made unheard of efforts to draw me back to mass, saying, 'you are a renegade,' &c.; to which I answered, 'I know one thing, namely, that you have never taught me what I have learnt through Mr. C—, to know Christ as a perfect and sufficient Savour, and this is my happiness.' 'Take heed, unhappy man,' replied the Vicar, 'you are bringing famine on yourself, your wife and family,' &c." Mr. C—, visiting a family to whom he had furnished a New Testament, inquired if they read it. "Alas," replied a lad of thirteen, "it is gone. The priest came a few days ago, and perceiving my New Testament, he was very angry, and said if I did not throw the book into the fire, I should not be admitted to first communion, (confirmation,) then snatching the volume out of my hand, he threw it into the oven himself."

What the villagers think of the mass, and of worship in Latin.—Intolerance overruled for good.

The following conversation will show what the villagers think of the mass and divine service in Latin. I accompanied Mr. F., the pastor, to B—, where we found some persons from the neighbourhood. We addressed them concerning the things of God. A female, affiliated to the congregation of the Holy Rosary, remarked that it would be well if the priests were to give instruction like our's, instead of mass, which teaches men nothing. Whereupon a man, belonging to the Brotherhood of Penitents, addressing the woman, said, "This is a pretty way, indeed, to speak of mass and our good priests, be quiet, at least, in the presence of these gentlemen. We must never speak ill of our religion." "I don't speak ill of my religion; only I know from experience, that there is so little to interest in the mass, that during its performance, I am incapable of banishing from my mind all sorts of thoughts. I think it is my not understanding Latin which makes me so inattentive; and my evil heart tells me that all others do like myself, because they too do not understand it." The poor Penitent strove in vain to reduce the woman to silence, and, fixing her eyes steadfastly on him, she continued, "I will further say it is hurtful to one's faith; is it not certain that the priests desire nothing except our money?" She then related facts well known in support of her argument, and, by degrees, the Penitent, who knew these things as well as she did, became pacified, and at last acknowledged that the woman's assertions were but too true; indeed, he himself cited other facts in addition.

We are anxious to state the following instance of intolerance, which turned out profitably to the cause of truth. A fortnight before the Christian death of our young friend B., the Curé went to inform her that, unless she returned to the church of her fathers he should not permit her to be buried in the churchyard. And, indeed, after her decease he refused that permission; but, on application being made to the Mayor, that functionary allowed the grave to be dug. The church stands in the middle of the cemetery, so that the priest could distinctly hear the address of Mr. F., the pastor officiating at the burial, at which service the whole village attended, in spite of the snow and cold. They listened with earnest attention to the powerful appeal the Lord was addressing to them through the instrumentality of his servant. Several were moved to tears, and I was enabled to effect a large distribution of tracts, &c.

All sorts of people addressed: soldiers and Jansenists.—A Jansenist lady's remarks.

Mr. C—, is well known in his missionary excursions to address himself to all sorts of persons, Protestants, Catholics, men of science, custom-house officers, labouring men, and, in short, to any one he may meet on the road; yet there are two classes of persons in the locality he inhabits, that have become, as we have noticed in former reports, the particular objects of his attention, viz., military men and Jansenists. We have already seen several of these military characters, visited by our friend in the hospital, and in prisons, led to embrace the doctrine of grace through Christ, acknowledging their sinfulness, and afterwards proving the sincerity of their faith by their lives. Mr. C— wrote to us this winter: "I am visiting a light-horseman from Vincennes, who honours the gospel by his Christian conduct in his difficult position as a soldier. He wrote to his sister, 'I cannot express how happy I feel in being in garrison at G—, for it is here I found true liberty.'" This good soldier," adds Mr. L— "in spite of the difficulties he frequently experiences, of leaving the barracks, sorely misses our Thursday evening meeting, and moreover comes to see me every week. He has made me acquainted with two other soldiers who have thankfully accepted some pamphlets. He said that if he received his dismissal at G—, he should greatly like to attempt colporting the Bible."

Among the Jansenists visited at G— by our evangelist, there are some sincere Christians, loving the Bible and the Saviour, yet not feeling as yet the duty of leaving a church whose errors and infidelities they have (in part at least) discerned. "Mrs. F— and Miss A—, the Jansenists," he writes, "receive me with their accustomed kindness, and disseminate copies of the sacred Scriptures. These dear friends have just notions on several portions of Scripture. Mrs. F— I found to take pleasure in meditating with me on these words, 'The time is at hand.' These things, she said, strengthen our faith and do good to the soul, but what good can one expect, she added, from things like the following, which I have read in a book of my servant's: 'When Jesus Christ, in his severity will not permit poor sinners to enter heaven, his kind mother, ever full of tender sympathy, opens another door for them, so that they, notwithstanding, may come in!' Sometimes I have interesting discussions with these friends, upon various doctrines of the Romish Church, to which they are still belonging, although they show me much attachment and receive me as a brother. May the Lord accomplish his work."

In a letter of the 30th March, Mr. C— further says: "Mrs. F— told me that two very devout Catholic ladies have felt scandalized at seeing me visit her, but I have made them blush, she added, by bringing into comparison their own frivolous talk and the edifying intercourse we hold. The more, she continued, I advance, the happier I feel with my two little girls, whom I am striving to bring up for heaven. We are living, as it were, in a convent, conversing about God and his gospel. Not long since Mr. C—, she said, addressing me, the most devout woman of A— attempted to ridicule your labours, and the persons who follow your instructions, taking for her basis the old maxim—Without the church there is no salvation." I replied to her, "Do you wish to know my opinion as to the good people you are thus thrusting out? Well I believe they are better instructed in the Bible than you or I, and they are putting it better into practice than we do, so that they are proved to be within and not without the church."

Notice of Christians at A—; Conversation with a Priest—A pastor's testimony to the faithful labours of these Evangelists.

We add a few extracts more, concerning the Christians of A—. "We have had a happy religious festival at A—. Mr. F—, the pastor, came up with me to baptize an infant in one of our Christian families, and on this occasion we had an excellent sermon, followed by the celebration of the communion. It was touching to see with what eagerness our friends came to chapel, some from a distance of several leagues, notwithstanding the snow. After Mr. F—'s departure, I presided over a meeting at which the Lord manifested his presence. One of the brethren told me with the seriousness that characterizes him, 'I think that although all the Christians at A— were to fall back into the Church of Rome, the Lord would grant me strength to remain alone to confess the Holy name.' His brother said that the friar meeting him the other day, had told him he would be lost if he continued his connection with those foolish Protestants. "Happily for me you are not my judge." "Ask your Mr. C— where his Pope holds his residence?" "I will tell you, Mr. le Curé, his Pope and mine is at the right hand of God. Jesus Christ, unlike your Pope, dies not." "My poor young friend, you are losing yourself more and more, and I would wish to save you, for I have admitted you to your first communion (confirmation), and I love you." "Since you say you have instructed me, why have you not taught me to know that Jesus Christ has died for me on the cross? Why have you never spoken to me about the gospel, &c?"

In conclusion, we transcribe a few lines from one of Mr. F—'s letters, (the pastor of G—.) "I am happy to be able to announce to you that the most harmonious relations exist between Messrs. G—, C—, and myself. Every day I see increasing reasons for appreciating the devotedness of these two brethren. The cause of the gospel in our department, though humble in its manifestation and but little known by outward show, is nevertheless making sensible progress, both as to number and quality. When I reflect on the difficulties of all kinds that your agents have to encounter, called, as they are, (particularly Mr. C—) to labour in the midst of the most fanatical of Romish populations, which is moreover excited by the inimical priests, I am constrained to exclaim, "The finger of God is there." I have several times visited the neighbourhood of A—, and have never returned home without cause to bless the Lord. In spite of all opposition Mr. C— is exercising an influence both salutary and extensive. He is respected and beloved; he is welcomed by all he approaches. I esteem his mission therefore worthy your sympathy, for he is indeed well qualified for the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard. V— presents itself also under a very interesting aspect. Mr. G— has not to fight in that town against such ardent fanaticism as that of A—. The work is prospering and encouraging; the agent an indefatigable labourer." We rejoice to be able to produce such a testimony as this from the pen of a witness so well able to appreciate the case.

MISCELLANEOUS.

UNEVANGELIZED MAN.

Shall we pass in brief review before us some few of the many sections into which the human family is subdivided, and which, however dissimilar in other respects, in this prevalence of sin are found to be identical?

We may commence with the more civilized, such as the Chinese and the Japanese; and these are not the least painful to consider. In no part of the world do we find astuteness in worldly matters, and blindness as to every thing of a spiritual nature, more strangely combined than in the character of the Chinese. In their mind, unbelief as to the great realities of unseen things, and a ready reception of idolatrous tenets, and superstitions the most puerile and contemptibly ludicrous, meet together. When we observe a barbarous race like the Indians of America, or the wild Australian tribes, and find that —in the utter ignorance of the one true God in whom they "live, and move, and have their being," they believe only in evil spirits, whom they regard with superstitious dread, this, however painful, is not more than we expected. But when we find the intelligent Chinese, dexterous in the affairs of this life, men of courtly demeanour and polished manners, utterly blind as to the existence of Him whose "eternal power and godhead" are inscribed with the finger of light on the heavens above and the earth beneath; when we find, that throughout the vast extent of the Chinese empire the true God is ignored; that He who gives "rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling men's hearts with food and gladness," is unknown and unacknowledged; that no prayer is offered to him, no knee bends to him, no heart offers its service of affection; that he is sanctified in no remembrance, honoured in no life; a scene is presented most painful to contemplate.

And if, with rapid transition passing over the various tribes and nations that might be classified between the two extremes, we select a people in the lowest grade of barbarism, and furthest removed from every thing bordering on civilization, what shall we find there?

Shall we glance at the fine group of the Feejee islands, consisting of two large islands—Viti Levu, 85 miles long by 40 broad, and Vanua Levu, 95 miles long by 20 or 30 broad—besides numerous, perhaps not fewer than 100 smaller islands, the whole group containing a population of at least 200,000? Shall we bear to investigate their moral state? To do so would be to leave the fresh air and bright sunshine, and go down into a dark and gloomy cavern, full of loathsome sights, where cannibals have been living in the increasing practice of all that is most revolting. Here, in these isles, you have the same unsparing expenditure of all that is beautiful and luxuriant on the part of Him who assigned them their deposition in the mighty deep. "The tree, the shrub, the flower, the leaf, are all fresh, strong, and brought to perfection. New and beautiful varieties meet the eye at every turn. Fruits and flowers teem by the wayside: the fruit is good for food, and the odours of the flowers defy description." But the moral phenomena, which are of man's production, are hideous, and the mere relation of them more than can be well endured. The cannibal mother rubs a portion of the horrid repast on her infant's lips, that it may grow up in similar practices. It is indeed with them a great sensual indulgence, and the only term they have for the human body when deprived of life is the word "bakola," which in its meaning is inclusive of the thought of cannibalism. But we must draw a veil over the abominations of Feejee.

Such is unevangelized man: the rest may be imagined from the specimens we have given. We would only add, that, for generations, sin has been increasing in its intensity of action amongst the heathen, until at length it has attained a degree of virulence of the most deadly and destructive character. We are justified in concluding, that, so long as any remnant of that traditionary knowledge of the true God transmitted from Noah and his immediate descendants lingered amongst them, that knowledge exercised upon them a proportionate degree of restraining influence; and that, as it was lost, they became more depraved, more vile, more miserable; until at length, in our own day, we find them in a condition melancholy beyond all description; in which the leprosy of sin in its most malignant form appears to have completely covered them, so that "from the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in them; but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores:—they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment." Even amongst the Feejee islanders it is alleged that cannibalism, although a very ancient custom, did not formerly obtain to the same extent which it has latterly done; and that the present overflowing of this tide of blood, this abounding of iniquity, is of recent growth. The precise period when the various forms of sin, which have acquired power over the heathen, became marked by a greater intensity of action, appears to have been contemporaneous with the discovery to Christendom of these distant tribes; as if "the god of this world," aware that the era of his iron rule over them was drawing to its close, and that his supremacy would soon be disputed, desired to load them with additional chains, and so render them more hopelessly his own.

It is difficult to conceive an individual so destitute of the common feelings of humanity as to entertain no compassion for nations in so pitiable a condition. —Ch. Miss. Intell.

THE CAUSE OF MISSIONS.

The cause of missions is the cause of God. The diffusion of the gospel among the heathen nations is the course of conduct which many explicit precepts enjoin, on which numerous promises shed an encouraging light, and in respect to which the Divine presence and faithfulness are pledged. There can be no doubt as to the propriety of the missionary enterprise. We may question the purity of our motives for engaging in it, the proper character of our agency, or the adequacy of the means used, as compared with our ability; but with regard to the dutifulness of the work itself there can be no hesitation. Should the measure of success, therefore, which attends our efforts not correspond to that which the Word of God warrants us to expect, the line of conduct which we are to adopt is not to pause in our exertions, to relax them, far less to cease from them altogether. This would be sinful disobedience.

It would be to trample under foot all our spiritual obligations. The exercise to which, at such a time, we are summoned, is to review our motives, our machinery, and our modes of operation. It is always a matter of thankfulness to God, when in condescension to our weakness he favours us with tangible proofs of success; but the fact is, it is extremely difficult, where so many operations are being conducted, to estimate the precise character of any one missionary year, and to say whether it is prosperous or otherwise. There may be little outwardly to excite attention, or to startle the onlooker, while in reality there may be going on in the minds of all classes belonging to our stations, great and gracious processes, which will ere long issue in ample clusters of the best fruit; and there may be seasons when visible success fills all hearts with joy, and yet that success may be the consequence of those very years, when we sowed in tears, and mourned the seeming absence of all symptoms of life. Often the kingdom of God does not come with observation. The seed germinates unseen. Let us, then, bless God for the tokens of good with which we have been favoured; let us humble ourselves under his outstretched and correcting hand, cleaving more closely to him as our all-sufficient helper; and let us dedicate ourselves, and all that we have, more entirely to his service, esteeming it our privilege and our honour that we are allowed to do anything, however small, in preparing for that time when all men shall be blessed in Christ, and shall call him blessed.—Miss. Record, United Presb. Church of Scotland.

JAMAICA:—THE TRIUMPHS OF GRACE.

The following notice is contained in a letter of the Rev. Peter Anderson, dated Bellevue, 23d October:—

The happy death of an Elder.—The church at Bellevue, amid its recent numerous losses through means of the pestilence, has suffered another heavy loss in the death of one of its elders. His constitution, not naturally strong, was rendered less so by an attack of cholera, from which he recovered, but which left behind it effects tending to an early grave. Consequently, it was not long till a rapid consumption, produced by a severe cold, seized upon, and extinguished the vital spark of life. The deceased, although a Creole, or one born in the land, was nevertheless a complete African in mind, and body, and language. Moreover, prior to his connection with the Mission, he was without the knowledge of a single letter, yea, even without the notion of a soul to be saved or a God to be honoured. But that God who is rich in mercy, for the great love wherewith he loved sinners, let in upon his mind and heart the light and love of heaven, which changed this Ethiopian's character and destiny. Dedicated to the Lord, and devoted to his cause, he joined the fellowship of the church, and was, after years of trial and training, called by unanimous consent to the honourable office of the eldership. As a member and elder of the church he was a fine example of the Christian and the office-bearer. Consistent in domestic and social life; attentive to private and public duty; fearless in his opposition to the immoral customs of his fellow-countrymen; bent upon their reformation; and earnest in spirit for the honour of the Sabbath and the prosperity of the church; his strong mind and stronger Christian principles never yielded to times, and seasons, and circumstances, so that the enemies of the gospel never had it in their power to point the finger of scorn, and to say, "Lo, the church and the world are alike." Beginning at an early period with the simplest lessons of English learning, he persevered till he could read, with considerable ease, any part of the word of God; and this acquired talent he laid out for the good of others as opportunity offered. His death is a great loss to the station; but our loss is assuredly his gain. During his illness he read the word of God for himself and prayed; and others read and prayed with him. His faith in the Saviour was simple and confiding, and therefore his mind was tranquil. I tried him every way in relation to the ground of his hope; but still it was Jesus, and only Jesus. On one occasion, indeed, when a few verses in the 40th chapter of Isaiah were read, he replied, "That is good, I was getting into the dark, but now I am in the light again." On another occasion, when the 12th chapter of Luke was read, he answered, "That is comforting, even the hairs of the head numbered;" and then added, in the way of advice to his wife, that she must not have overmuch care, but must remember the flowers and the grass, and remember that the Saviour orders it so. On the Sabbath morning, near the hour he used to leave his cottage and repair to the church, his redeemed spirit left its earthly tabernacle to engage in the services of the triumphant Church. "Then I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labour: and their works do follow them."

On the Jamaica mission much money has been expended and life sacrificed; and on a field where the outlay has been so great and the return so small, the interest of the Christian Church is every moment ready to give way; but however this be, on the day when things will be viewed in their true light, the deliverance of one soul from sin, its restoration to the favour of God, and its preparation for the heavenly glory, will be accounted a work exceeding in value the combined efforts both of the society and its agents since the commencement of the mission. The return of a sinner to God, my blackamoor elder, if you please, washed in the blood of the Lamb, and blessed and beautified by the operation of the Eternal Spirit, and fitted for heaven at death, calls forth the plaudits of the glorified who encircle the throne of a redeeming God.—Ibid.

SABBATH-SCHOOL VISITOR.

We have the gratification of announcing that our little periodical has now attained a circulation of nearly 40,000. Its success hitherto will be an inducement to make it still more worthy of patronage. We continue to receive the most encouraging assurances of its acceptableness and usefulness. To those who receive it in packages from our agents, or in small packages containing less than ten copies, the terms will continue to be,

For a single copy,	$ 25
" 6 copies to one address,	1 00
" 20 " " "	3 00
" 40 " " "	5 00

And any number upwards at the same rate. But by the new postage act of August 1852, it is enacted that the postage on small papers, to whatever distance, "when sent in single packages, weighing at least eight ounces, to one address, and prepaid by affixing stamps thereto, shall be charged only one half of a cent for an ounce, or fraction of an ounce, notwithstanding the postage calculation on each separate article of such package would exceed that amount." This is a uniform postage of about five cents per annum on each copy; and for the benefit of those who wish to take advantage of this provision of the act, we will affix stamps and supply the paper, after the first of October, at the rates in the following table:

For $2, 10 copies.	For $7, 40 copies.	For $12, 70 copies.
" 3, 15 "	" 8, 46 "	" 13, 76 "
" 4, 20 "	" 9, 52 "	" 14, 82 "
" 5, 26 "	" 10, 60 "	" 15, 88 "
" 6, 32 "	" 11, 65 "	" 17,100 "

RETURN TO OLD-FASHIONED ORTHODOXY.

One of the Colporteurs of the Board in one of the New England States, remarks:

"As to intelligence, many of them are intelligent, but far too many lamentably ignorant, and many more disregard religion. Some are open scoffers, many Universalists, and a large number have imbibed the modern isms, which are rooting out all genuine piety from those who profess to believe the Bible, but pervert its sacred truth, and in some places are even making sad havoc in the orthodox churches; so that the orthodox ministers are waking up to the subject, and are beginning to teach the old Calvinistic doctrines in all their 'hydra-headed' forms. They see the dangerous tendency of all New School-isms, Parkisms, Bushnellisms, &c., and are taking a dead stand against them, regarding the Old School as possessing the only tenable ground, the only Bible ground; hence they commended our books as the best and the safest; as second to none save the first of all books—the Bible."

The same Colporteur thus acknowledges the efficient aid afforded by a benevolent individual:

"I met with one man whose example is worthy of imitation, and who should be commended to every Christian as a pattern of good works. He was in comfortable circumstances, in respect to this world's goods; but was richer in faith and love to his Saviour, and ardently desired to see the extension of his Master's kingdom in the world." He was especially a devoted patron of the colporteur system, believing that it is God's appointed mode of conveying to the destitute the means of grace. He felt very solicitous about the spiritual welfare of the people of his neighbourhood, and desired to do something for them in such a way as not in the least to excite a suspicion as to the purity of his motives. Many of the people of that neighbourhood were professors of religion, yet it was very doubtful whether they possessed it. The Christian Baptists held occasional meetings there, in a school-house, and a few years ago had what they call a reformation, during which many became excited, were immersed, and received into the church. When the excitement subsided, a lifeless state ensued; many becoming hardened in sin, reckless as to the future, and finally settling down, as a last resort, in infidelity or Universalism. Such is generally the result of all their boasted reformations, doing more harm than good. To them good books had no attractions. They were abundantly able to purchase, but wanted the disposition. This Christian brother was very desirous that I should leave some of my good orthodox books among them, hoping that they might be the means of effecting a reformation approved of God. But being aware that they would not purchase, he gave me five dollars to distribute among them, pointing out the character of each family to direct me in donating a book adapted to it. I sold, in connection with the donations, about one and a half dollars' worth of books. May these books be blessed to their salvation, and may that brother see his neighbours walking in the ways of the Lord. Would that many more such men might be found to aid and encourage the colporteur in his wearisome labours, and bless their wicked neighbours."

THE "WEE BOOK."

A Colporteur in Wisconsin gives the following interesting account:

"Our books and tracts are almost universally admired, and I am received everywhere with all the kindness and attention that I could expect; and the 2296 books, and 13,846 pages of tracts, which we have distributed through the country, may give comfort to many souls, shed much light on the whole community, and do much to build up the cause of Jesus Christ in this rising commonwealth. But the influence is not confined to our own State, or nation. 'O,' said a pious old Scotch lady; 'O, how I did love the dear wee book ye gied me. I read it, and read it; and my old man read it, and all the family read it:' (it was a large family,) 'and then I sent it, I had nothing else to send—so I sent my dear wee book to my daughter, a thousand miles off, in Canada; and she will read it, and love it; and she will love it the more because it came from her mother.' So the little book has gone on a foreign mission. Such expressions of interest and gratitude are an ample reward for a little fatigue."

INSTRUCTIONS TO COLPORTEURS.

Each Colporteur of the Board has a small volume of Instructions handed to him with his commission, by which he is expected to regulate his course. One item of these Instructions, as it relates to a subject of peculiar delicacy, we think fit to quote:

"Your primary errand is, undoubtedly, to Presbyterians in our own connection, and to the destitute; but inasmuch as there are other branches of the Presbyterian family to whom most, if not all the Board's publications are acceptable, and as some of these books are valued by all evangelical Christians, and a portion of them are published no where else in this country, it may not unfrequently be advisable to call on the pastors of other churches, and ascertain whether your labours would be desired or acceptable among their people. In some regions of the country, Colporteurs of our books call upon every family without reference to denomination, and are well received; but this course would not be equally acceptable everywhere, and any thing like efforts to proselyte, or improper interference with Christians of other denominations, should be carefully avoided."

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

Mr. Orlando Clark has been licensed by the Presbytery of Indianapolis.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

The Rev. Alexander T. McGill, D. D., has tendered his resignation as Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Church Government in the Western Theological Seminary, with a view to accept a similar appointment in the Theological Seminary at Columbia, South Carolina.

The Rev. Dr. Humphrey, although he has signified his wish to decline the appointment to the Princeton Theological Seminary, has not yet given his final decision.

Varieties.

Christian Colonists for Palestine.—Philip D. Dickson, practical farmer, and his wife, from Groton, Massachusets, sailed on the 22d July, from Boston, by way of Smyrna, for Palestine, for the purpose of joining the Agricultural Mission for the Jews, under the superintendence of John Meshullam, near Bethlehem of Judea. They took with them a supply of agricultural tools and seed.

Queen of Tahiti.—It is gratifying to learn that the Queen of Tahiti maintains her Christian character amid the difficulties that surround her, and that neither French usurpation nor Romish idolatry has prevailed to seduce her from her fidelity to the British Protestant missionaries. Many youthful converts have been added to the Tahitian churches recently, and four well trained native pastors have been ordained, in parts of the island not yet subjected to French control, over native churches.

Presbyterian Church in Ireland.—The Irish Presbyterian Church comprises about 500 congregations, and 522 ministers; these sustain four missionaries among the Jews, fifteen in Canada, besides furnishing aid to thirty-one congregations at home. The Protestant County of Ulster contains one-third of the population of Ireland, and has but one-eighth of the crime and pauperism of the country.

Liberal.—William Rankin, Esq., of Newark, N. J. has erected a building in that city, at his own cost for a Sabbath-school. The chapel is a neat and tasteful structure, 42 feet by 28, capable of accommodating over 200 persons. By the side a vacant lot has been appropriated for a church, which will undoubtedly be required in a few years.

Parliament.—The Globe states, that the only Roman Catholic who has been returned throughout England, Scotland, and Wales, is Lord E. Howard, the nominee of the protestant Duke of Norfolk, and husband of Miss Talbot.

A Romish Editor in Parliament.—While there is but one Romanist returned to the new Parliament of England from England, Scotland, and Wales, there are enough to supply the deficiency from Ireland. And among these, is the editor of The Tablet, the organ of British Romanism, Mr. Lucas. He was formerly a Quaker, and since his conversion, he has brought his Quaker shrewdness and zeal to bear for the promotion of Romanism through the press.

Converts from Popery.—Of the clergymen of the Established Church at present officiating in Ireland, 64 have been either Roman Catholic priests or laymen.

Thessalonica.—The mission to the Jews, heretofore a department of the mission to the Armenians, was organized into a distinct mission, June 9. Its members ask, that captive Zion may have a special remembrance with those who pray, and that themselves, who are standing amid the dry bones of the prophet's field, may have the benefit of their faith, of their intercessions at the throne of grace. Mr. Morgan conducted the service in the Sefardee—the colloquial language of the Jews of Thessalonica—performing all the services, reading, singing, praying and preaching, in about two months after his arrival.

Dr. Bushnell.—The Puritan Recorder says, Dr. Bushnell's Unitarianism is more palpable than Dr. Channing's was when the separation between Congregationalists and Unitarians occurred in Massachusetts; and yet he has, it is affirmed, many admirers among the young ministers of Connecticut.

New Zealand.—Of the 800,000 inhabitants of New Zealand, 65,000 may be considered Protestants, of whom 45,000 are under the care of the Church Missionary Society. The Wesleyans have under their care about 18,000; not more than 5000 are Romanists, and 10,000, perhaps, are still Pagans. Wars have almost entirely ceased. The people, instead of being shut up, as they were formerly, in fortified villages, are scattered over the country, busily employed, many of them, in agricultural pursuits. English clothing has taken the place of the native garment. They are erecting water-mills to grind their wheat, and procuring small vessels to take their produce to the towns.

Silver Ware for the Sandwich Islands.—Specimens of silver ware intended for exportation to the Sandwich Islands were lately shown in Boston. They consist of vases, pitchers, goblets, cups, medals, &c., and in design and finish equal the productions of the most celebrated establishments of the country. There are in all some eight hundred peices, and they have been ordered, we understand, by the directors of the Hawaiian Agricultural Society, who intend to distribute them as premiums to the producers at the next Annual Fair of the Society, which takes place in December, we believe.

A Travelling Sunday-school.—A number of families from the capital of Winconsin, recently passed through Iowa, bound for California. Before starting, they organized themselves into a Sunday-school, embracing twenty-five scholars and five or six teachers. They furnished themselves with Bibles, a library, question books, &c., &c. During each Sabbath they camp under the broad canopy of heaven, and engage in the interesting and profitable duties of the school. They are truly a "bright and shining light" along that dark trail. And the influence of their example will most emphatically rebuke the guilt of an utter neglect of all religious duties—Sabbath desecration and dissipation so lamentable and so universal in that thronged highway to the Pacific. May they never cease to demonstrate a due appreciation of wisdom, the merchandise of which is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold.

What a Revival in a College does.—At the revival in Princeton College, in 1815, there were thirty converts. McIlvaine, Bishop of Ohio; Johns, Bishop of Virginia; McLean and Hodge, Professors of Princeton; and Armstrong, late Secretary of the American Board, were among the number.

Cost of Chinese Books.—A Chinese novel in 21 volumes, and estimated to contain from one-sixth to one-fourth more characters than Dr. Morrison's version of the Bible, is sold in the shops for 60 cents. Mr. Williams sees no reason why the Bible in Chinese should not be afforded for half a dollar.

Chinese Literary Enterprise.—A family in Canton has engaged to have a set of blocks cut for a new edition of the national historians of China, a series of classical works called the Twenty-four Histories, which will involve an outlay of more than $100,000. It is done to show their regard to letters, rather than with the hope of gain.

Comparative Expenditures.—It is stated on good authority, that not more than fourteen millions of pounds have been expended by all religious societies in Great Britain, in the last fifty years; while sixty millions are every year spent on strong drink! And twelve hundred millions have been spent in war, in that half century.

THE MISSIONARY CORN-FIELD.

I remember when I was a boy there began to be a good deal said about Foreign Missions, and most good people began to think it was time for them to be doing something to aid in sending missionaries to the heathen; so some that were able gave money, and others said that if there were any way in which they could work for the cause they would gladly do so. Whereupon certain members in a church in one of the pretty towns up in New York, contrived a plan by which they hoped to engage the labours of most of the society, and to realize a large sum of money for the Foreign Missionary cause. The plan was this, to hire a field, and have it ploughed, planted, hoed, gathered, and thrashed, all by the combined labour of those men in the society who "could not pay money, but would work cheerfully." The business was brought up in a pretty full meeting, and the proposal "agreed to" by a loud and strong "AYE." Then a committee was chosen whose business should be to hire the ground and warn out the men to do the work: and the men all agreed that when notified they would come right on, and do the necessary work, promptly. Accordingly, the committee when ploughing time arrived were prompt in notifying their men. Mr. A. was called on. But Mr. A's teams and hired men were all just as busy as they could be, getting his corn-land ready; it was such a pity to break off just then, but in a few days the hurry would be over, then he would come, and nobody should say he had not done his "proper proportion." The committee next went to deacon B. "Well, deacon, you remember our resolution in society meeting about the missionary corn-field. The ground is engaged and now waits to be ploughed, and we've no time to lose if we expect to get a respectable crop." "Yes, yes, I remember; and just as you say, that ground ought to be ploughed right away, and we must have it good and mellow, for I count that the Lord's field, and we must do as well for the Lord as we do for ourselves. I take care, you see, to have my ground ploughed early, and well harrowed, and the seed in in good season, and good order—but, brother ——, you see how I'm situated—nobody but this boy to help me—work all to do ourselves—but we'll hurry and come on in time to do our share." "Why, deacon, that's the 'Lord's field' you say, then why not do the Lord's work first, and your own afterwards?" "Yes, yes, but, but—you see how I am situated; there's brother C. and brother D.—nothing in the world to hinder their going to work for you to-morrow." So our committee went on to brother C's, somewhat fearful that he also might have a field of his own to plough as well as Mr. A. and deacon B., and sure enough, he met them with the same excuses, and nearly the same expressions of interest in the "good work." And brother D. was not much better, and so on down the alphabet, and the committee saw there was no hope of getting the missionary field put in planting order till after all other fields were prepared. The consequence was, it was very late in the season before our field was ploughed, and then it was hurriedly and imperfectly done; the grass which had got a rank growth was not properly covered. Our field now had to lie a long time before the men could be brought together to plant it. At hoeing time again the mission field fared as bad as before. The tender blades of corn in the "Lord's field," as deacon B. called it, were left to struggle on as best they could, till the weeds and grass, which had the start in the commencement, now both sucked up the moisture of the earth, thus starving the roots of the young corn, and by a luxuriant growth above almost entirely cut off from them the rays of the sun, by whose influence only they could breathe and thrive. When at last the hoers came they found the field in such a state they were nearly all discouraged; the boys and young men thought that if working for missions was hard like that, they would'nt like to have much to do in that line; and the older men predicted that there would not be a sufficient crop to pay the outlay.

The summer months slipped by, then autumn came, and when autumn came, it brought its frosty nights; but most of the corn-fields in the town were uninjured, for they had been started in season; but in the missionary field much of the corn was still unripe, and all such was destroyed by the frost.

By and by the farmers began to gather the golden ears, and to fill corn-houses and cribs. Mr. A. might have been seen complacently stroking his chin as he was calculating how many hogs he could fatten, and how many bushels of corn he might sell, and then how many dollars he would have to lend to merchant S. and get his note on interest; for as to reserving anything for benevolent purposes, that could'nt be this year, because there had been so much work in the missionary field—"paid my missionary tax in labour this year." Deacon B. and brother C. and brother D. and all others secured their crops in good season and good order, and nothing had yet been said about the missionary field, for the committee had become disheartened, and moreover they concluded that it might possibly be as well to leave the whole to perish on the stocks rather than insult the Most High, who requires first-fruits, by offering to him in this way the blasted and the frost-bitten. After a while, however, the deacons began to think more seriously about the "Lord's field," and betook themselves to calling on the brethren. They generally introduced the subject by allusions to their "garners being now filled;" and "now we ought," they would say, "to think about doing something for the Lord." Some unamiable things might be dropped respecting the committee. "Sorry they have been so slack—could we only have had the right men to manage matters what a noble crop of corn we would have got there—such a grand piece of land! But may be there was a providence in it." After much consultation and delay, a day was fixed upon when the brethren should all turn in with their teams, and boys, and hired men, and "make short work of it." I remember when that day came; what a snow storm! and cold as winter. And I remember how the men looked when they came home from picking missionary corn in a snow storm; and I remember how they talked about it.

A great many times since those days I have thought of that corn-field. Sometimes I have been reminded of it when reading such passages as these in the Bible. "Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar. Ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering." Sometimes in a church whose seats were trimmed in the most expensive and luxurious manner, where the minister preached from a pulpit that cost perhaps $3000; and an organ that cost as much discoursed their music; and when again I have found little or almost nothing accredited to them by the treasurer of the Foreign Missionary Board, then too, I have thought of that corn field.

But when I have seen ladies—both matrons and misses—giving cheerfully a good half-day in every week to work, and work actively for missionary purposes, I have thought, "This is not at all the way work was done in that corn-field." * * *

Translated for the Home and Foreign Record.

ELOQUENCE OF BRIDAINE.

"They crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.—HEB. vi. 6.

The following spirited allusion to this passage was taken down from the lips of Bridaine, a celebrated French missionary preacher in the eighteenth century.

"A man accused of a crime of which he was innocent, was condemned to death by the iniquity of his judges. They led him to the place of execution, but it was found that no gallows had been erected, nor was there any executioner there. The people, touched with compassion, hoped that the miserable man would escape death, when suddenly a man raised his voice and said, I will erect a gallows, and I will be executioner! You tremble with indignation. Ah! my brethren, each of you is that inhuman man. There are no Jews here to-day to crucify Jesus Christ; you yourselves rise and say, It is I who will crucify him."

"I myself," says Marmontel, "heard Bridaine, with a voice the most piercing and heart-rending; with a figure as venerable as an apostle, quite young as he was; with an air of compunction that no other preacher ever equalled; I heard him pronounce this passage, and I venture to say that eloquence never produced a more sensible effect—nothing was heard but sobs."

Queries for Ministers.—Has the Home and Foreign Record, as the organ of the Boards of our Church, any claims upon my attention? Are all the members of my church who would feel an interest in such reading as it furnishes, provided with a copy? Is it taken and read by all our elders? These queries are respectfully submitted to pastors. The subscription price is too small to allow of the employment of any agencies to increase its circulation, or to collect subscriptions due—for this work the Boards look to our ministers and elders.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.
Corresponding Secretary—Rev. C. C. Jones.
Assistant Secretary—Rev. R. Happersett.
Treasurer—Samuel D. Powel.
Address, Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut st. Philadelphia.

A STATEMENT OF FACTS RESPECTING THE BOARD OF MISSIONS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, AND ITS OPERATIONS IN THE WEST.

We insert in this number of the Record the remainder of the interesting and valuable "statement of facts," recently published by the Western Executive Committee in Louisville, and commend it to the readers of the Record. Pastors will find the whole "statement" of value in presenting the claims of the Board to their people.

VI. COMPARATIVE VIEW OF RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

Note. The Table "showing the amount of money contributed to the Board at the office in Louisville from May 1, 1851, to April 1, 1852, by various Presbyteries and Synods, and the amount paid in return to them for the same time for the support of their ministers and missionaries," was published in full in the Home and Foreign Record in May last, and consequently is now passed over.

VII. TOPICS OF IMMEDIATE IMPORTANCE IN RELATION TO DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

1. The better support of Missionaries.—Hitherto the work has owed more of its success to the self-denial and voluntary sacrifices of the Missionaries than to any other human instrumentality. They have struggled with sickness and poverty and many sore trials. The church at large has but a faint conception of the burden laid upon many of these brethren. It deserves to be widely known that one of the reasons why it is so difficult to supply our destitutions is the inadequate support of missionaries. This, too, is one of the causes of the decrease of candidates for the ministry.

2. The supply of vacant Churches.—The following, from the Presbyterian Herald of Aug. 19, shows the number of vacant Churches in the Western Synods: "A glance through the Minutes of the General Assembly reveals the fact, that there are in the West two hundred and ninety-one Presbyterian Churches which have neither pastors nor stated supplies. They are distributed as follows. In the Synod of Kentucky, thirty-five; the Synod of Cincinnati, twenty-one; the Synod of Northern Indiana, thirty-three; the Synod of Illinois, forty-six; the Synod of Missouri, forty-one; the Synod of Nashville, twelve; the Synod of Memphis, twenty-two; the Synod of Mississippi, twenty-two; the Synod of Alabama, twenty-four, and the Synod of Texas, eight. In these Synods we find one hundred Ministers marked as not engaged in the regular and stated work of the Ministry. This number embraces the superannuated, the infirm and out of health, and those who are engaged in secular pursuits, together with such as are out of a place for stated preaching. The number of unemployed Ministers, by this statement, is shown to be very small."

3. The foreign emigration to the north-western States, its already large and its constantly swelling number, its spiritual condition and its prospective influence on the religious character of the West.

4. The spiritual condition of our coloured population in the south-western States, the means of reaching them by the Gospel, the peculiar obligation resting upon our church with respect to them, and the encouragements to labour for their salvation.

The following table exhibits the number of coloured persons within the several States of the south-west:

Kentucky,	222,436
Tennessee,	246,732
Missouri,	89,966
Arkansas,	47,569
Mississippi,	301,317
Louisiana,	245,493
Alabama,	345,114
Texas,	54,272
	1,552,929

The whole number of coloured communicants in our Church within this district in April 1852 was only 2406, or only one in nearly seven hundred.

5. The demands made on the Church by the new towns and cities fast rising to importance in all parts of the country.

6. The new rural settlements expanding in all directions outrunning the means of grace.

7. The condition of some of the most important States of the Union, as Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, &c., which have just begun to be occupied by the Board.

8. In every State in the West there are whole counties, and in some, groups of counties, from five to twenty in number, where there is no minister of our Church.

VIII. THE WEST SHOULD SUSTAIN ITS OWN MISSIONS.

The Board, in its last report, expresses the opinion that the time has come in which our church in the West should sustain its missions from its own resources. In this opinion we fully concur. During last year we drew nearly $8000 from the Treasury at Philadelphia. This should no longer be. A vigorous, united, hearty effort on the part of all our churches and ministers would enable the West to sustain amply and generously all the missionaries labouring within our bounds. To this result the efforts of the Committee will be, henceforth, steadily directed, in the confidence that they will herein enjoy the approval and co-operation of their brethren.

IX. HOW CHURCHES CAN HELP THE BOARD.

1. The churches now aided by the Board are reminded that the missionaries are expected to take up an annual collection for the Board and report the result. This will not only assist the Board, but train the new churches, from the beginning, to benevolent action.

2. Churches which have been aided by the Board, but are now self-sustaining, may assist in preaching the gospel in regions beyond.

3. Other churches now aided by the Board may become self-sustaining. During eleven months, ending April 1st, of the present year, the support of twenty-five missionaries in the West, formerly assisted by the Board, was wholly assumed by the churches which they were serving in the gospel. This noble work should go on, enabling the Board to extend its operations.

X. HOW PRESBYTERIES CAN HELP THE BOARD.

1. By aiding, encouraging and superintending the missionaries labouring within their bounds. A large and most essential part of the work of supervision belongs, constitutionally, to the Presbyteries, and cannot be attempted, even by the Committee or by the Board.

2. By urging churches now aided to assume, from year to year, a larger part of the support of the gospel, until they become independent of the Board. The Presbytery is in a position to ascertain, minutely, the condition of each church; and its advice and authority will be most influential in securing an end so vital to the progress of the Board and to the success of the congregations now aided. The efforts of the Committee will be nearly powerless unless sustained by the Presbyteries. The Synod of Virginia, at its meeting in 1851, resolved, "That for a church to consent to receive aid from the Board of Missions, which it might be properly expected to furnish itself, is a sin against God and his people, and a wrong done to the missionary work. Our Presbyteries are hereby admonished of the duty and necessity of a close inspection of this matter within their respective bounds."

3. By making arrangements at their approaching stated meetings, by which the cause of Missions may be presented, and a collection taken up in all their churches.

4. By resolutely withstanding all applications for aid which are not legitimate and necessary. There have been cases where the committee have granted aid at the recommendation of a Presbytery or its committee, and have afterwards learned that churches in that very Presbytery threatened to withhold contributions from our treasury, on the ground that the funds have been improperly applied.

5. By uniting contiguous congregations into a single missionary circuit, where one preacher can do the work now divided between two or more.

6. By discouraging the formation of feeble churches through their bounds, where there is no prospect of permanence and growth.

XI. PRINCIPLES ON WHICH THE BOARD PROCEEDS.

The following important resolutions were adopted by the last General Assembly.

Resolved, That the great work undertaken for so long a time by the Assembly, is the expansion and full establishment of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, by his own Spirit and power, over all our vast country. And it is purely a missionary work; missionary in this respect, that ministers are sent out by the Assembly, and means furnished for their support, in whole or in part, while they are preaching the gospel, and gathering and establishing churches. So soon as individual churches, or groups of churches are established, and are able to support all the institutions of the gospel for themselves, they are no longer missionary in character, but immediately cease their connection with the Board, and fall into line with the great body of self-sustaining and contributing churches, and go to add to the solid material and power of the Presbyterian Church. Now, the principles upon which the General Assembly conducts its domestic missionary work are these: 1st. It is in the sense defined, a missionary work. 2d. The funds contributed for it are missionary funds. 3d. The men employed in preaching the gospel are, in their fields missionary men. 4th. All the churches and fields aided and supplied, are missionary churches and fields. 5th. The funds supplied are funds for temporary assistance, and not for entire nor permanent support. The people aided are to help themselves, be it ever so little, from the beginning, and are to go on to independence. 6th. The grand end and aim of the Assembly is to establish self-sustaining churches and fields, as fast and as far as possible, and so to increase the solid material and power of the Church, and accumulate strength to go forward expanding. 7th. Ministers and means are to be distributed according to the relative importance and promise of different fields, and in view of the necessities of the whole field, that there may be equality and no partiality. 8th. The Assembly conducts this work through a Committee or Board, responsible to itself alone, under its advice and control, and which Board is required to exercise its sound discretion and judgment in deciding upon, and in conducting the business intrusted to it. 9th. No debt to be incurred in carrying forward the missionary work. The Assembly always acted upon this just and only safe principle, and a principle which has always been adhered to by our Church, and in the Assembly of 1803, the following resolution was passed: "That there ought to be no anticipation of the funds in future; or, in other words, that appropriations ought not to be made in any year, beyond the amount which the funds arising in that year will be sufficient to satisfy."—p. 280. 10th. And finally, agents for visiting the churches, and collecting funds for the work, may be employed by the Board.

Resolved, That the Board be directed to go forward and conduct the work intrusted to its care on these principles, as heretofore, and that they be commended to the attention and observance of all Presbyteries and churches in their applications for aid, and that the Board be also instructed to pay, as heretofore, due regard to the recommendations of Presbyteries. That all pastors and stated supplies be requested to take pains to circulate the Report when published, and diffuse more information on the subject of Domestic Missions among their people.

XII. THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE BOARD.

1. The debt of the Board on the 1st of April, is stated in the report (p. 11) at $4900 49.

2. The General Assembly has ordered the Board, in the positive, so to conduct its operations as to be free from debt at the end of each year.

3. The Western Committee is now in debt to its missionaries, for labour actually done and reported, of about $1600.

It is indispensable, therefore, that immediate exertions be made to replenish our Treasury. The Committee lay the whole matter before their brethren, praying that the Great Head of the Church will give grace to his servants, to enable them to do his whole will in this great work.

Remittances should be made to Andrew Davidson, Treasurer, Third street, Louisville, Kentucky.

CHURCHES GOING OFF THE BOARD.

"That those which preach the gospel should live of the gospel," is the ordination of the Lord. But how can they obtain their living by preaching the gospel? Only in one way, and that is the ordination of the Lord also. When preachers of the gospel are employed for the purpose, and devote all their time and energy to the spiritual and the eternal interests of any people, that people are to take care of their temporal interests, and to give them a competent worldly support. It is a fair, just, reasonable and godly contract, and the Lord holds both the parties to a faithful performance of their mutual duties.—1 Cor. ix. 1—14.

The General Assembly, in conducting its Domestic

Missions, has always kept this ordination of God before its eyes, and required the missionaries to devote themselves to the preaching of the gospel; and the people to contribute to their support, and as soon as possible take the entire support of their ministers upon themselves. By so doing self-sustaining churches are built up (they have been built up by fifties and by hundreds) and become contributing churches, and the great church goes on occupying new fields and expanding over all our land. This is the only way to carry on our Domestic missionary work. It is the only way that we can live as a church. Every member of the church, male and female, must do his and her duty, and every particular church must do its duty in supporting the ministry. And it is a sin to throw off this duty and take advantage of the greater kindness, charity, and piety of sister churches, by putting it upon them. If churches will not do their duty when abundantly able, then it is no sin in others not to do it for them, and it is no sin in ministers to wipe off the dust of their feet against them, as having refused to receive Christ; and depart out of their coasts. All this is plain gospel doctrine. But you should take care to distinguish between those able and those unable. Be assured, the Board is doing so, under all the light, and help, and instruction it receives from the churches and Presbyteries. How is the self-sustentation principle of the General Assembly working? Well, excellently well. Letters from brethren high in standing and old in years and influence, as well as from others not so prominent in the church, approve it most cordially. Presbyteries are vigorously carrying it out; and we have the successful efforts of churches to sustain themselves, and draw no longer from the Board. How many churches have reported themselves as off the Board, since April 1, 1852, the beginning of the present ecclesiastical year? Twenty-two in the office in Philadelphia. How many in the office in Louisville, we have not yet heard. And others give us intimation that this is the last year they expect to be on the Board. Do they go off happily? Most happily. A good Presbyterian church knows how to be grateful, and how to rejoice in the mercy of the Lord, and how to enjoy the happiness of being able to support its own ministry.

Let us give a few, out of many pleasant specimens.

"As my connection with the Board closes this day, I make through you, to them, my last quarterly report. Since my last report, the churches under my charge have made such arrangements as will enable them to become self-supporting.

The churches are in a good condition at present. Union and harmony prevail among the members. Prayer-meetings and Sabbath-schools are kept up and well attended. With these remarks, I take an affectionate leave of the Board of Domestic Missions, as their missionary, and thank them, through you, for the kindness I have received at their hand. I trust they shall ever have a place in my prayers and contributions. Your affectionate brother in Christ,

K."

"The most interesting news that I can communicate at this time is the fact, that judging from present indications, this is the last Report for pecuniary aid. The Board certainly will not be more rejoiced in being relieved of us, than we are, in becoming 'free and independent.' From this time forward, by the blessing of God, instead of receiving aid from our Board, we hope to contribute statedly to its funds, in some degree at least, according to our ability, in enabling it to assist others who are also struggling for an existence amid great difficulties.

Thanking the Board for their fostering care over this church in the trials of its infancy, and the officers in particular with whom I have had the pleasure of correspondence, for their uniform courtesy in the prompt discharge of duty, I take my leave, by subscribing myself,

With Christian regard and much esteem, &c. W."

"The continual increase of population in this vicinity affords ground of hope, that this congregation may gradually acquire strength, and may yet be able to sustain itself and have something to contribute to the general fund for Church Extension. In this expectation, as your views expressed in Synod and the General Assembly on the subject of Domestic Missions, are in entire accordance with my own, I have suggested to our Session my unwillingness to continue longer on the Board. No further application has therefore been made for assistance.

Praying that your Board will be greatly encouraged by past success as well as by the gospel promises, to labour with renewed and patient zeal in the very great cause in which you are engaged. I remain with fraternal respect, Yours, &c. P."

"The present prospect is so encouraging for my future support by this church, as to induce the belief that after the 1st of October, no further aid will be necessary from the Board of Missions. Efforts are now being made to that effect here, and they are successful. Considering the amount this church will raise the next year for Domestic Missions, this field will more than sustain itself. When I look back six years, and think of the small amount then raised by the people, the discouraging aspect of things, and the difficulties we have had since to encounter, including those attending the building of our beautiful little church, we feel encouraged and know that God is true to his promise.

In Christian regard, I remain yours, W."

"Three years ago when I was appointed to this field as a place where it was thought a Presbyterian church might be built up, I had not the most distant idea that in three years we could have built and paid for a handsome house (38 by 48,) and gathered a church of fifty-four members. But so it is. God has blessed the Board of Missions, and they gave us the start. We now leave you, to stand alone.

May the Lord continue to bless the Board of Missions, and enable it to extend the borders of his own kingdom. The favours our little church has received from you, will, we trust, never be forgotten.

To you, we all, as Pastor, Session, and People, bid an affectionate farewell. F."

FLORIDA COMING UP.

The State of Florida has been one of our missionary fields, and various causes have operated against its occupation until within some two years past. With great gratification we observe now a steady, and as we trust, a permanent increase and establishment of our Church in the State. Valuable accessions have been made to the Presbytery of Florida. If our information be correct, the following is the list of its ministers: Rev. J. W. Hume, Tallahassee, Rev. Mr. McElroy, Tallahassee, missionary to the negroes, Rev. William Neil, Iomania, Rev. W. E. Hamilton, Monticello, Rev. D. J. Auld, Madison, Rev. H. Hendee, Quincy, Rev. Edmund Lee, Tampa Bay, and Rev. Messrs. Joel S. and Eli S. Graves, in Thomas county, Georgia, near the Florida line: and Rev. William H. Crane, Bainbridge, Georgia. Mr. Samuel J. Milliken, licentiate. A member of the Presbytery of Georgia, Rev. James Stacy, from the Seminary in Columbia, may labour in Jacksonville and vicinity; and we have recently been in communication with a graduate from the same Seminary, who we hope will go and occupy a very promising field in Middle Florida. Rev. J. Y. Alexander, in a recent letter, says, "while in Florida, I visited ten churches. These churches have never been more encouraged since their existence than now. Three ministers took charges, or were about to do so, when I was there. Can any young men of talents be found willing to go into Florida? Being far south, and in a very warm climate, many may conclude that it is sickly. Every evidence of health I saw there. People looked well; children were ruddy and robust. Were I a young minister seeking a new field, I would go to Florida with the prospect of being useful, sooner than I would to any part of our country known to me. The people moving into Florida are generally the intelligent, and there is displayed true southern hospitality."

The heat of the climate is greatly mitigated by the regular and delightful sea-breezes, and for persons of weak lungs or throat affections, there are few finer countries. Many ministers, by a timely removal South, would add years of comfort and of usefulness to their lives; but the misfortune to them, and to their families, and to the Church, is that they wait until consumption lays its strong hand upon them, and then they make the experiment of a change! Too late of course.

There are vacant fields in Florida, and to all ministers who desire to preach the gospel to the coloured population, an open door. A High School for boys has been projected in Tallahassee, under Presbyterian influence, and a similar school should be established for girls. This will come in time. The finest agricultural districts will soon be laid open, and much vacant and valuable land brought into market by the railroad which is to connect Pensacola with the sea-board of Georgia, at Brunswick or Savannah, or at both points. It will not be long before our Church will gain a strong foot-hold in Florida. In the progress of things, it cannot be otherwise. May our ministers and members be encouraged! The Board of Missions stands ready to do all in its power to aid them, whenever that aid may be required.

TABLE OF RECEIPTS FOR DOMESTIC MISSIONS AS CONDUCTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, FROM 1802 TO APRIL 1, 1852, A PERIOD OF FIFTY YEARS.

The following Table has been carefully prepared from the Treasurer's Books of the Trustees of the General Assembly, and from the Treasurer's Books of the Board of Missions, and it may be relied on as a correct Table; and as a table for reference is of great value. We propose, when time permits, to throw the whole domestic missionary operations of the General Assembly, from the beginning to the present time, into a condensed tabular view. This tabular view will embrace not only the receipts, but the missionaries and missionary churches, general expansion of the field and progress of Domestic Missions, and will form a condensed history of the whole work.

The first Synod of the Presbyterian Church in our country came into being in 1717, and at its first meeting a fund for "pious uses" was moved, which once commenced was never lost sight of, and was the foundation of funds for missionary and other purposes. The invested permanent funds of the General Assembly grew out of this movement.

The funds collected for Missions were placed in the hands of the Treasurer of the Synod of Philadelphia; then, after the division, in the hands of the Treasurer of the Synods of Philadelphia and New York; then, after the union, in the hands of the Treasurer of the Synod of New York and Philadelphia; and on the constitution of the General Assembly, in 1789, in the hands of the Treasurer of the General Assembly, until 1829. From 1706 to 1789, the Domestic Missions of the Church were conducted by the Synods; from 1789 by the General Assembly, to the present time.

In 1802 the business was committed by the Assembly to a "Standing Committee of Missions." In 1816 this committee was changed into what the Assembly called a Board, under the title of "Board of Missions, acting under the authority of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States:" and it was not until 1829 that a separate Treasury for the Domestic Missionary fund was formed, and Mr. Solomon Allen was appointed Treasurer. He was succeeded in 1834 by Mr. William Nassau, senior; he in 1841 by Rev. Thomas Hoge; and he in 1846 by Mr. William D. Snyder; and he in 1851 by the present Treasurer, Mr. S. D. Powel.

For the first 5 years—from 1802 to 1807—there is a gradual, though, comparing one year with another, an unequal increase in the funds. For the succeeding 12 years, 1808 to 1819, the same fact is observable: and for the next 9 years, 1820—1828, there is a decrease, and in 1828 the receipts were almost identical with those in 1807—$1.34 being the difference in favour of 1807! Since the establishment of a separate Treasury in 1829, and the projection of new and more enlarged efforts, the receipts have continued gradually, though unequally, to increase, comparing one year with another, until the present year, 1852. This, from the great increase of our Church, is nothing more than what should be expected. The increase has, however, fallen far short of the necessities of the work.

The total of contributions to the Domestic Missions of the Church for the 50 years, is $1,004,706.91. One million and four thousand, seven hundred and six dollars, and ninety-one cents: or an average of $20,094.14 annually.

The sum looks large, but distributed year by year among our Church members as it comes in, the average per church member is small, ranging from 13 cents to 38 cents! At this rate of contribution our denomination has not been impoverished. And what has the Assembly accomplished by its Domestic Missions? An amount of good which it is impossible for our Church ever to know or to estimate. Presbyteries and Synods have been formed in no inconsiderable numbers, overspreading our land; several hundred missionaries have been kept in the field annually for years past, hundreds of churches organized, and houses of worship erected, tens of thousands of Sabbath-school children trained up—wilderness places have been made to blossom as the rose: and, to go no further back than 22 years, above 44,000 immortal souls have been, in the judgment of the church, converted and added to our communion. Let the church rejoice in this great and growing work. Fifty years hence, and our present operations, which look so large in comparison with what they were fifty years ago, will, to those who shall then conduct them, be as the day of small things. We must keep our eyes upon the growth and vastness of the field which we are endeavouring to occupy, and our hearts affected with its spiritual wants, and then what our hands find to do for the supply of those wants, do it with our might. "The night cometh in which no man can work."

NOTE.—From the commencement of our missionary operations, until 1829, the Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly kept the account of missionary funds received. In July 1829, Mr. Solomon Allen entered upon his duties as Treasurer of the Board of Missions; at which time, the Treasurer of the Trustees of the General Assembly had advanced the Board over $4,500. The Annual interest money due the contingent missionary fund, from the Permanent Missionary Fund of the General Assembly, was in part retained by him, from year to year, with the consent of the Board, to pay this advance; and although this interest money was an actual receipt for missions, it has not appeared in any previous statement of receipts, so far as we have been able to discover. This interest, with some other small sums, has now been added in; and hence this statement will show larger receipts for missions, than have heretofore been published in the annual receipts of the Board from 1829 to 1840.

SYNOD OF OHIO AND CHURCH EXTENSION.

Shortly after the issue of the September number of the Home and Foreign Record, containing the Church Extension Table, Mr. Moodie, Treasurer of the Synod of Ohio, called our attention to the fact that but a very small portion of the contributions of that Synod had been acknowledged in the Table; only $10.62 out of $361.42. The reason of the omission was made known to Mr. Moodie subsequently. He had, previously to our coming into the office, and once since, correctly reported the funds for Church Extension paid into his hands, but not forwarding the funds, they were not entered in the Treasurer's book, and, consequently, did not appear in the Table. His impression was, that the Church Extension Funds in his hands would be drawn for when needed, in like manner as the missionary funds in his hands are drawn for. But a very small sum of the $361.42 has been contributed since we came into the office, say $53.70. There is but one Treasury for Church Extension, and hereafter the moneys contributed, we trust, will come into it, and all receipts be regularly entered. This incident demonstrates the value of the Tables as published in the Record. They show the churches the exact state of their accounts with the Board, and give them opportunity of correcting anything that may be erroneous. We thank Mr. Moodie. The receipts of the Synod are now published in this number of the Record. We wish we could give the Synod of Ohio credit for ten times the amount. The whole contribution from 1846—6 years, is but $361.42, off expenses, $2.50—$358.92: an average of but $60 a year; and the Synod this year reports in its seven Presbyteries 10,891 members. What is past is past. The scheme of Church Extension is advancing throughout all our Synods, so we will thank God and take courage, and cherish the belief that we shall be aided more and more every year.

Account of money contributed within the bounds of the Synod of Ohio, for the General Assembly's Church Extension Fund, and received by the Treasurer of Synod, to April, 1852.

A HIGH AND VARIOUS STANDARD OF ATTAINMENT IN THE MINISTRY.

We present to our readers some valuable remarks of the DUKE OF ARGYLE, extracted from an address delivered by him at his installation as Chancellor of the University of St. Andrews. The Duke of Argyle is one of the ablest men in the Upper House of the British Parliament.

I entertain, gentlemen, a very strong conviction—I wish I could impress it as deeply upon you—that in no previous period in the history of the Christian Church has a high and various standard of attainment in its ministry been more indispensably required. (Hear, hear.) One of the earliest assaults to which Christianity was exposed, was from those vague but often grand philosophies which were the offspring of the ceaseless activities of Grecian intellect; which at one time threatened to throw a new galvanic life into the dying forms of Pagan worship; and from which, long after that danger had passed away, a large proportion of the heresies and distractions of the early Church were derived. This, as well as all other dangers of an intellectual kind, could not, of course, appear during the ages when intellect remained asleep; but with the scholastic theology and metaphysics it re-appeared under the sanction of the Church; and it is a remarkable fact, that soon after the founding of this University, during the brilliant period of the Medici at Florence, the admiration of Platonism was far more sincere than the belief in Christianity.

The engrossing contests of the Reformation, and the renewed life it imparted to the Christian faith, put a stop to the progress of this kind of mischief. I need hardly remind you that it has reappeared in the present day; and that, under the name of transcendentalism and some others, it numbers amongst its disciples some eminent men and some very popular writers, whilst the influence of their views is perceptible where no hostility to Christianity is declared and sometimes where none is really felt. (Hear, hear.) You cannot deal with those men on the ordinary grounds of dogmatic theology. That theology they do not cease to attack—they think they already know all that it can teach them, and infinitely more besides. Neither, gentlemen, are we called upon to deal with them as you are called upon to deal with so many others. You have not to rouse them to a sense of spiritual things from too great engrossment in things which are seen and temporal. They habitually live in a spiritual world, though it be one, for the most part, of their own fancy. Their difficulty is not a difficulty of believing, but of combining their beliefs within the limits of a definite revelation. There is room for much wise and careful dealing with this philosophizing school—much room for the exercise of the highest faculties of a mind well trained, both in the knowledge of its own powers, and not less well trained in the many phases through which the human intellect has gone in its search after a spiritual world, which, as has been profoundly remarked by Bacon, can become known only by inspiration of the same Being who is the Creator of the mind itself.

Then, gentlemen, passing from this danger, I need not dwell on that strange revival which we have lately seen of opinions over which we had hoped that, in this country at least, the victory had been final.* It is the less needful to say much on this point, because this is the ground on which the theology of Scotland has been well practised, and on which I feel sure the present generation will renew the battle of their fathers with energy and effect. (Applause.)

Allow me, however, to point to the students of divinity another field on which it is most important that they should be prepared to fight. I allude to that hyper-Biblical criticism which has had its principal source in Germany. Hitherto our insular position in respect to language and ideas has been as complete a defence against some dangers of opinion as the same position in respect to geography has been against the attacks of hostile armies. We cannot reckon, however, on a continuance of this insecurity, and the increase of communication is rapidly bringing the mind of Europe into one common connection, exposed more or less every where to the same influences and the same currents of opinion. (Applause.) An intimate and accurate knowledge of the language and history of the sacred books, and a high range of scholarship in this important work, is of essential and increasing importance in the present day.

Lastly, let me entreat the earnest attention of those who have a view to the Christian ministry, to the rapid advance and influence of the physical sciences. One great error was committed in former times with regard to these. The allusions made in the Bible, for the purpose of illustration, to the various appearances of the external world, were held to be authoritative declarations on questions of physical science; and some of the noblest discoveries of the human intellect were pronounced to be heretical on religious grounds. We all know the result of an attempt to denounce as false what conclusive reasoning could demonstrate to be true. This error is now almost universally abandoned. (Applause.) I am not sure, gentlemen, that an opposite error, almost as dangerous, has not succeeded in its place. An absolute separation has been declared between science and religion; and the theologian and philosopher have entered into a sort of tacit agreement that each is to be left free and unimpeded by the other within his own walk and province. And, so far as the intentions of men of science are concerned, this understanding is often adhered to where it would be safer that it should not be taken. Generally men of refined and highly educated minds avoid, where it is possible to do so, any direct collision with popular beliefs; whilst, at the same time, the conclusions to which they point are frequently absolutely incompatible with the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith. They may not wish to point this incompatibility out, and may even keep it as much as possible in abeyance, but it will still be felt and seen by all who thoroughly accept those conclusions and enter into their spirit.

The truth is, that no such separation between science and religion as that which is often attempted is possible. Every outward visible thing has some inward and spiritual meaning; and if the true one be not seen, a false one will be invented. The same desire of knowing the mysteries of one Being, and of the being of the world around us, which leads the metaphysician beyond the borders of Christian belief, will, in like manner, lead beyond it the man of physical research—only that his philosophy will be apt to degenerate into a low materialism, instead of evaporating into the haze of the idealistic school. No, gentlemen, it is neither a confounding a physical with religious truth, nor yet is it a total separation, which is unnatural and impossible, but a true idea of the nature of their connection, which is wanted now. (Applause.) The Christian minister must never, indeed, interfere with the man of science on his own walk; he must show no ignorant jealousy of any fact which the physical world may reveal to the activities of modern research. But he may be jealous, and he must be watchful of the interpretation which is put on those facts; whilst, in order to correct that interpretation, he must know them, and know them in their true connection. (Applause.) One of the great works to be done in our time is to keep the immortal analogy of Bishop Butler abreast of the science and discoveries of the day. (Renewed applause.) Looking, then, gentlemen, to the number and variety of the directions from which influences hostile to Christianity may be expected in the present age, we must be deeply impressed with the arduous nature of the duties of the Christian ministry; we must see how various must be the weapons, how complete the armour, of those who would enlist in our day as soldiers of the cross.

MINISTERS' CHILDREN.

In the families of 35 ministers, there are 141 children, fifteen years old and upwards—of these 89 are professors of religion—15 are hopefully pious, but have not made a profession; and 19 are ministers, or preparing for the ministry. Four sons are intemperate—the mother of one of them is not a pious woman. The remaining 33 sustain a good moral character.

In the families of 172 deacons, there are 796 children, fifteen years old and upwards, of whom 450 are professors of religion—46 hopefully pious, but have not made a profession, and 17 ministers. Sixteen are intemperate; three of these were excommunicated from the church for this crime. The fathers of three of them use strong drink, and the fathers of two others are strongly opposed to temperance societies. The mother of one was excommunicated for this sin. The remaining 284, with very few exceptions, are respectable, useful citizens.

In the families of 42 ministers, there are 99 children, between 5 and 15 years of age, of whom 7 are professors, and 2 are hopefully pious, but not professors.

In the families of 85 deacons, are 199 children, between the ages of 5 and 15, of whom 17 are professors, and 17 are pious, but not professors.

In view of these facts, Mr. Grosvenor asks, Will any one still maintain that this proverb is true "that ministers' children are the worst children in the world," in its general application to the families of ministers and deacons? If so, let him select in the several towns in this State, 207 families, embracing 937 children over 15 years of age, of whom 539 are professors of religion—61 pious, and not professors, and 36 ministers, and among whom there are but 20 who are intemperate. But when he has done this, his point is not proved—for he must show that these 937 are more respectable, more moral, and more religious than the same number among the children of ministers and deacons.—*N. PRAYER FOR CANDIDATES.

Should the churches pray for their candidates for the ministry?

Or the question might be shaped thus: Should the churches pray for their own members, who are in circumstances of special responsibility, difficulty, and danger? It is scarcely necessary to show that candidates for the ministry need to be prayed for. The Church has always felt her obligations to pray for her ministers, since an inspired apostle enjoined prayer for him and for the success of his ministry. And when we consider that in the great majority of cases the ministerial character is for the most part formed while the candidate is in training for the office, it seems not unreasonable to extend the apostle's exhortation, and claim the almost direct injunction of the Scriptures, to pray for those who are to be set over us in the Lord. And indeed, the Church does pray for this, at least in general terms, whenever she prays the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into his harvest. The prayer for the men includes a prayer for qualifications which God alone can give. It is for labourers she prays, not drones. It is for reapers, who with wisdom and care shall gather in the precious harvest, and not for those who through lack of suitable acquirements, or prudence, or still more necessary qualifications, shall waste or destroy the ripening grain.

But might not what is done in general terms be done to greater advantage, if done in a more particular manner? When the Christian prays for the thousands who are pressing forward to fill the posts of responsibility in the universal church militant, or for the hundreds who are preparing to lead in his own division, he is praying for a grand object; but his thoughts are apt to be very indefinite, and his feelings but little interested. If he should first have fixed his thoughts upon some one, or some few with whose character and difficulties he may be somewhat acquainted, and in whom he may thus feel in some degree interested, his prayer would doubtless be prompted by livelier feeling; and then, passing from the particular to the general, he would be prepared to add to the freshness and vigour of his feeling the solemn elevation that springs from extended views.

The question, What shall enter into the minister's public prayer? is an important and difficult one. The prayer must not be too long, or it becomes wearisome; it must not be too much condensed, or the undisciplined mind cannot follow; not too general, or it fails to awaken feeling in the worshippers. The objects must be important, must be such as the people are or can be interested in, and such as are proper to be made public. With diffidence as to wiser, better, and for the most part older heads, we would suggest the question, whether the welfare of each particular candidate is not an object of sufficient importance to engage at times the public prayers of his own church; whether it is not an object in which the people could be easily interested, if they be not so already; and whether it would be injudicious thus to make private interests public. This last point seems the most open to question, and the minister would decide it according to his own judgment of the circumstances of the case. It is supposable that there might be cases where the candidate's knowing that he was publicly prayed for (it is assumed that this public prayer is in his absence) might tend to foster vanity and self-conceit. But just so does the church pray at the request of parents for a son who has gone on a distant voyage, or a daughter who may be dangerously ill. If the candidate be truly pious, it is not easy to imagine anything that would tend more naturally to work humility of mind and solemnity of deportment than this very thing. And if, though pious, he be so incorrigibly self-important as to be injured by this, he is not well fitted for introduction to an office which, most of all, involves temptation to self-conceit, and in which self-conceit is most injurious to usefulness.

We would suggest the question to those who lead in the devotions of the weekly prayer meeting—the little band that have often been led in prayer by the fervent supplications of the candidate, and perhaps oftener than others think of him, though they may think seldomer of his need of grace than of their own, unless reminded of it. And at the family altar, whence prayer goes up for the coming of the kingdom as well as for daily bread, might not this important interest of God's kingdom be remembered? and would not the parent whose high ambition for his children is that they may be ambassadors of God, be using a valuable means to this end as he brings this subject before their minds in connection with persons whom they know, and in the solemn acts of family worship? And the private Christian, whose prayers go beyond the circle of his personal wants, can find few points where circumstances of local interest so blend with considerations of general importance as in his prayers for the well known one or few who are preparing to win souls. ELISHA.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Pope is hard at work in getting the Scriptures out of the common schools. Many of these schools, indeed, do not admit the Bible at all; and where it is admitted, the reading of a chapter or of a few verses does not supply the want of religious instruction. The difficulty of obtaining even the reading of the Bible in the common schools is becoming more and more difficult. Whilst the Papists claim the Douay version as the only suitable one, some of our Baptist brethren are becoming interested in their new version and have already shown a disposition, as in a late Kentucky convention, to press its claims.

The following account of the Romanist movement in Cincinnati will be interesting to our readers.

The School Trustees of our city have been engaged in a discussion for some time past, as to the use of the Bible in our schools. The Romanists here have assumed the position that, as the schools are supported by a tax on the whole community, and they pay their share of it, that their children shall not be required to read the Bible. They hold that it is sectarian. The School Board cannot, however, be induced to forbid the use of the Bible, and now they demand that the Douay version shall be the one which is read by their children. We are informed that the subject will come up for discussion next Friday evening, and that there is a great probability that the Board will yield to this requirement. It is time Protestants were awake to this subject. The opposition of Romanism to Free Schools and to the Bible is well known, for both are unfavourable to its despotic assumptions. The Douay version is not a correct translation of the original Scriptures, and can not be read any where properly as the word of God. And this movement is not from a sincere desire to have their children instructed in the Bible, but it is calculated to produce dissatisfaction and trouble, and bring about the exclusion of the Bible altogether. We are glad to see our neighbour, Dr. Rice, in the field on this subject. Always ready to battle against what he considers error, he has delivered a lecture showing the difference between the popular translation of the Scriptures and the Douay version. At the request of several gentleman, he will repeat the lecture in Wesley Chapel, and follow it with three others: 1. The comparative effects of Romanism, without the Bible, and Protestantism with the Bible, upon public morals; 2. The comparative effects of these two systems upon the wealth and prosperity of the country; 3. Their comparative effects upon civil and religious liberty. The importance of the subject, and the well-known ability of the lecturer, render it unnecessary for us to urge a large attendance. We have been also glad to know that the Daily Times has taken high and right ground on this subject, while our other dailies have been silent. It is a topic on which every patriot should speak out frequently and fearlessly.—Central Christian Herald.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF THE YOUNG.

WORDS OF THE WISE.

The following extract is from the special prolegomena of URSINUS, the principal author of, and able commentator on, the Heidelberg Catechism. He may be regarded as the father of the German Reformed Church.

In the new translation of his commentary are these words: Since from the very beginning of the world, God has been the God not only of those of adult age, but also of those of young and tender years, according to the covenant which He made with Abraham, saying, "I will be a God unto thee and thy seed after thee," he has also ordained that both classes should be instructed in the doctrine of salvation according to their capacity; the adults by the public voice of the ministry, and the children, by being catechised in the family and school. * * *

"Under the Old Testament dispensation, children were taught in the family by their parents, and in the schools by the teachers of religion, the principal things contained in the prophets, viz: such as respects God, the law, the promise of the gospel, the use of the sacraments and sacrifices, which were types of the Messiah that was to come, and of the benefits which he was to purchase; for there can be no doubt but that the schools of the prophets Elijah, Elisha, &c. were established for this very purpose. * *

"That the catechization of children was diligently attended to in the times of the apostles, is evident from the example of Timothy, of whom it is said that he knew the Holy Scriptures from a little child; and from what is said in the Epistle to the Hebrews, where mention is made of some of the principal heads included in the catechism of the apostles, such as repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptism, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection from the dead, and of eternal judgment, which the apostle terms milk for babes. * * *

"So likewise the fathers wrote short summaries of doctrine, some fragments of which may still be seen in the Papal church. Eusebius writes of Origen, that he restored the custom of catechizing in Alexandria, which had been suffered to grow out of use during the times of persecution. Socrates writes thus in relation to the system of catechizing in the primitive church: 'Our form of catechizing,' says he, 'is in accordance with the mode which we have received from the bishops who have preceded us, and according as we were taught when we laid the foundation of faith and were baptized, and according as we have learned from the Scriptures, &c. Pope Gregory caused images and idols to be placed in the churches, that they might serve as books for the laity and children. After this period, the doctrine of the church, through the negligence of the bishops and the subtlety of the Romish priests, became gradually more and more corrupt, and the custom of catechizing grew more and more into disuse,' (until at length it was changed into the ridiculous ceremony which to this day they call confirmation.)

The next is an extract from MARTIN LUTHER.

COLLEGE EDUCATION.

"I fear much that the universities may prove but great gates to hell, if sedulous attention be not given to the explaining of Holy Scriptures, and engraving it on the hearts of the youths who attend them. I would advise no one to send his child where Holy Scripture does not hold the chief place. All must be corrupt where increasing attention is not paid to the word of God."—Luther.

BARDSTOWN ACADEMY.

The Presbyterians of Kentucky have been foremost in the work of establishing religious institutions of education under the care of the Church. Dr. RICE of Cincinnati had a prominent agency in laying the foundations of the Bardstown Academy; and the following notice, taken from "the Presbyterian of the West," of which he is Editor, gives an interesting account of a late visit to the institution, together with some historical notices.

BARDSTOWN FEMALE ACADEMY.

We invite attention to the circular of this Institution. We feel a deep interest in it—having, with great labour and sacrifice, in connection with faithful friends, founded it, some eighteen years ago. At that time the common opinion both of ministers and people was, that female education might be safely left to individual enterprise. We were then pastor of the Presbyterian church in Bardstown. At that place—a handsome and healthy town of some fifteen hundred inhabitants—was located the Roman Cathedral, St. Joseph's College, then the most celebrated Roman College in the west; Nazareth Nunnery, where for many years there have been, on an average, from one hundred to one hundred and fifty young ladies, many of them of Protestant families, receiving their education; and in the vicinity several other less celebrated schools of the same general character. There we saw the wisdom of Rome in founding so many permanent female institutions, and the folly of Protestants in leaving female education to take care of itself. The Roman clergy know, that if the mother of a family is a Papist, the children's minds will be early imbued with the superstitions of Rome, no matter what may be the faith of the father; and as their schools are intended to be proselyting establishments, they have wisely multiplied those designed for females. We then contended, as we still contend, that female education, whether the interests of Church or of State are considered, is no less important, than the education of the other sex; and that it is of the utmost importance that there should be permanent institutions fitted to impart thorough education to the females of our country. We rejoice to find these views now becoming prevalent in the Presbyterian churches.

The Bardstown Female Academy was placed under the care of the Louisville Presbytery, and is, if we mistake not, the first institution of the kind in our Church. It is now under the control of the Presbyterian church of Bardstown, the Presbytery having given it up to that church.

It has passed through many trials, and has been bitterly assailed by the Romish clergy. But it has educated a very large number of young ladies, many of whom have become pious, and quite a number of whom have gone to their eternal reward.

This Academy still lives and prospers. It is beautifully situated on a lot of two acres, ornamented with shrubbery of different kinds; and the buildings are very spacious, as well as handsome—admirably calculated for the purpose. It is now under the care of Rev. Mr. Cosby and Lady, who possess rare qualifications for the important work they have undertaken.

We had the pleasure, a short time since, of paying a visit to our first pastoral charge, and with the pleasure of visiting once more very dear friends, we had the additional happiness of finding the Academy in a flourishing condition. Amongst the most pleasant recollections of this visit, we shall long cherish that of the presentation to us of a handsome family Bible by the young ladies, in consequence of our early connection with the Institution.

We take pleasure in bringing this Institution to the notice of our readers, and in recommending it to the patronage of those who have daughters to educate. We know no Institution of the kind which we can more safely recommend.

A NEW SCHOOL AT LEXINGTON, MISSOURI.

A Christian school is a great addition to the evangelical resources of a congregation. Care and effort, employed every where else except upon the daily training of the young, will be comparatively inefficacious. If we want an intelligent and Christian generation, we must "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

The following is the prospectus of a parochial school recently established by the pastor and elders of the Presbyterian church in Lexington, Missouri.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL,

Lexington, Missouri.

The first session of the Parochial School, in connection with the Presbyterian church in Lexington, will commence on the first Monday (6th) in September. Miss J. D. Vaughn, Principal.

The first design of the school is for the benefit of the congregation. Yet others who may desire it, will be received as pupils.

The regular course of study is comprised in the following four divisions:

PRIMARY DIVISION.

Orthography, Reading, Penmanship, Colburn's First Lessons, Paley's Geography, Written Arithmetic, commenced.

JUNIOR DIVISION.

History, Mitchell's Geography, Grammar, Arithmetic, Physiology, Ancient Geography, Watts on the Mind, Burritt's Geography of the Heavens, Composition.

MIDDLE DIVISION.

Natural Philosophy, Algebra, Rhetoric, Botany, Astronomy, Marsh's Ecclesiastical History, Grammar, Composition.

SENIOR DIVISION.

Geometry, Algebra, Mansfield's Political Grammar, English Grammar, Logic, Chemistry, Moral and Intellectual Philosophy, Geology, Evidences of Christianity, Butler's Analogy, Kaimes' Elements of Criticism, Composition.

The Bible and Shorter Catechism will be considered as indispensable parts of the exercises of the School.

Bills payable in advance.

The scholastic year, commencing on the first Monday in September, will consist of two sessions of twenty-one weeks each, without any intervening vacation.

The terms for tuition, in each division, will be as follows, viz:

Primary,	$ 8 00
Junior,	10 00
Middle,	12 00
Senior,	15 00

No extra charges of any kind.

Those at a distance from Lexington, who may wish to send their daughters to this school, can place them under the care of the session, or of any member of it who may be designated, who will provide boarding accommodations, and promote their comfort and interest as much as possible.

Pupils will be received at any time, and charged from the date of their entrance to the close of the session.

No deduction will be made for absence, except on account of prolonged sickness.

THE CHURCH AND THE SCHOOL.

There is a natural and somewhat intimate connexion between the Church and the School. No one can doubt that they are, or can be made, mutually helpful—that the kind of instruction imparted at the school may be made to fortify and enlarge the Church, and that the Church is the grand instrumentality by which schools are fostered and maintained. This connection subsists both in churches which are true and those which are false. The false church maintains itself by maintaining schools in which its own falsehoods and superstitions are ineffaceably engraved upon the youthful mind. Even Popery institutes schools, in self-defence, and to keep its miserable victims from partaking of the light, and Puseyism employs them as one of its most efficient instruments of propagandism.

The instrumentality which untruth finds so efficient, is doubtless available for maintaining and promoting the truth. The school is one of the most important and influential formative powers. What a man shall be, or do, depends very much on his school training. In school he acquires habits of attention or of idleness; he is trained to think or to be merely passive; acquires knowledge, and learns principles which may ultimately save or destroy him. Hence the acknowledged importance of having schools which are really good, and an education which is pervaded by religion. If the man is expected to be religious, the boy should be under the lessons and influences of religion in the school, in which his mind and habits are, or ought to be, in process of formation and development.

A religious education, in all ordinary circumstances, implies, or presupposes, a church connexion. We are not aware, indeed, of any examples in which, on an extensive scale, a religious education has been attempted or successfully carried out apart from the watchful superintendence and fostering care of the church. The church is the heaven-appointed instrumentality for preserving and propagating religion in the world. It is the pillar and ground of the truth; and whatever is religious in the world must be more or less intimately associated with the church. To separate education from the church, will be found practically to separate it from religion.

In a country such as ours, in which the children of church members are, by profession, Christians, and receive in baptism the seal of that profession, it appears both natural and dutiful that the Church should exercise a watchful superintendence over their education, and, so far as she can, provide that it be such as is fitted to form, not only intelligent citizens, but intelligent and consistent church members. On the one hand, the repeated visits of the minister to the school, in his recognized and official capacity, are fitted to maintain the religious character of the school; and, on the other hand, such visits form a mutual bond of attachment and recognition between the pupils and the minister, which cannot fail to fortify and to preserve the Church.—Free Church Record.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, October 13, 1852.

India.—Letters have been received from Allahabad to July 31; Futtehgurh to July 31; Mynpurie, July 30; Agra, to July 29; Saharanpur, July 15; Sabathu, July 22; Lodiana, July 23; Lahor, July 24.

One of the native female members of the church at Allahabad had died, in the enjoyment of great peace and a good hope through grace. Yunas Singh and Thomas Janvier, native assistants, had been stationed at Phulpur, some twenty miles from Allahabad, to form a branch school. This measure was looked upon as a hopeful experiment, and was regarded with much interest.

The Rev. J. J. Walsh at Futtehgurh writes, "We have lately been cheered by the conversion of two respectable and educated Hindus at Delhi. One is a sub-assistant surgeon, and the other a mathematical teacher in the Government College at that city. It is very cheering to us to see these young men, after they have left our schools, still continuing to think on the great subject. I have no doubt that the influence exerted in our schools over intelligent young men, is extended through them to many others, and that this leaven will work till the whole mass is leavened."

The Rev. J. E. Freeman, at Mynpurie, speaks of the increased interest among the people on the subject of education. This is owing largely to the enlightened policy of the government. Hereafter, in the government of the upper provinces, a preference is to be given in all appointments, even those of the lowest grades, to those who are able to read. In consequence of this, a number of natives now in office, but unable to read, had applied at the mission station to purchase Hindi spelling-books. In view of this movement, Mr. Freeman adds, "We see a wider door opening for the preaching of the gospel, and the distribution of the word of God." He also makes a request for funds to erect a school building at Mynpurie.

At Agra, the brethren are quite encouraged in the new efforts for the education of East Indian youth; forty-two boys and fifteen girls were receiving instruction. Several of the latter were thus saved from going into a school taught by Romanist nuns, two of them having been sent to Agra for that purpose, from a station three hundred miles distant. A few of the boys were not of the East India class, including four who are the sons of native gentlemen high in office. About two thousand dollars had been contributed by English friends towards the purchase of a suitable building.

From Saharanpur, the Rev. J. R. Campbell writes of the encouraging progress of their work, and gives a very pleasing account concerning one of the native catechists, who was in an advanced stage of consumption, but enjoyed the abundant support and consolation of the gospel, "wishing to depart and to be with Christ." Mr. Campbell adds, "I have had several delightful conversations with him, and have felt well repaid by what I had witnessed for all the little trials I have endured in India." A native woman was admitted to the church by baptism in June.

A very urgent request is made for more men at Ambala. The station is becoming one of the largest and most important in the upper provinces. Our missionary work there is well commenced, with buildings in a most eligible location. But Mr. Morrison's health has been much injured, and Mr. Jamieson will eventually have to remove to the hills, if not to return to this country, on account of his wife's health. The station, however, is not at all an unhealthy one, for those who can stand the India climate. We trust the Lord will raise up some of his servants to occupy this and other stations in that field, which is so white unto the harvest.

China.—Letters have been received from Canton, July 22d, Shanghai, July 17th, Ningpo, to July 2. The church session at Ningpo had agreed to receive into the church Mr. Wong, an aged man, who has been mentioned in letters formerly published, as an inquirer. Four others, three of them in the boys' school, had applied for baptism. The heat had been excessive at Shanghai and Ningpo, the thermometer rising to 100° in the shade. Much apprehension was felt by the natives for the rice crops. Sickness also aggravated their distress, and the mandarins and the people were all praying to their gods for rain. They know not Him who sendeth rain on the just and the unjust.

Seminole Mission.—Mr. J. Lilley mentions that on the 22d of August the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered at the mission station, by the Rev. W. H. Templeton, of the Creek Mission. Two persons were then admitted to the church by baptism.

Departure of Missionaries.—On the 2d October, the Rev. George McQueen, Jr., sailed for Corisco, Africa, in the brig Lowder, Captain Brown. Mr. McQueen is the son of a respected elder in our church, Judge McQueen, of Schenectady, New York. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Albany, a few days before he sailed.

On the 5th of October, the Rev. William Speer, formerly of the Canton Mission, and Mrs. Speer, sailed in the Georgia for the new mission among the Chinese in California. Our readers will learn with pleasure that the excitement against the Chinese in that State has subsided. Large numbers of them continue to arrive at San Francisco, some of whom remain at that city, while others proceed into the interior, mostly to the southern mining sections of that State.

On the 7th of October, Mr. Reuben Lowrie, licentiate preacher, son of Walter Lowrie, Esq., Sec'y., left this city for the Choctaw mission. It being doubtful whether his health will stand the summer in the South-west, his appointment is a temporary one, to meet the present wants of the mission. Two teachers are greatly needed at Spencer Academy, one of the most important missionary establishments in the Indian country.

We ask for these brethren and their respective missions, the prayers of the churches.

THE REV. J. R. CAMPBELL'S BOOK.

Mr. Campbell, of the Lodiana Mission, has prepared for the press the substance of the Lectures delivered by him, when on a visit to this country, a few years ago. These have been published under the title of "Missions in Hindustan," by Mr. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, in a handsome volume, with engravings. Our readers will find in this book much information about the Hindus, deeply affecting views of their spiritual condition, and encouraging accounts of the missionary work amongst them. We hope this little volume will be extensively circulated.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. J. H. MORRISON.

Hindu legends and credulity.

March 24th, Bhunareri.—On my arrival at the encampment ground, I saw two or three persons loitering about, to whom I spoke, and soon a few others gathered around and listened, until the carts arrived. Among them was a Brahman pilgrim, who made some inquiries, and some slight attempts at a defence of his system. As soon as the native brethren arrived, I called one of them to continue the work, which he did for some time. This place is on one of the great roads leading to Pahoe, the place of pilgrimage to which I am now going. Pahoe is on the Saraswatí river, which is in Hindú mythology, the daughter of Brahmá the creator, who lived in a state of adultery with her for 1000 years of the Deotas (one of whose days is equal to 100 years of mortals), and afterwards married her to his son. The mythological name of Pahoe is Prathudak, from Rájá Prathu, who instead of going on the usual pilgrimage to perform the Kríyá for his father, who had been excessively wicked, concentrated the merit of all the previously established pilgrimages at this place, and then performed the Kríyá, or masses, for the release of his father's soul. When that Rájá existed, or how he concentrated the merits of all other pilgrimages at that place, or if that be true, why the people proceed immediately from that to other places of pilgrimage, are questions which Hindus never think of asking. To the first two questions, when put by any one else, they think it perfectly satisfactory to reply that they know nothing about it except that it has been so handed down from their ancestors, and to the latter the only and universal answer one can get is, that so the world goes, and they go with the rest!

'Apagatí' deaths—Sad superstitions.

Pahoe is the place where the people of all this region must perform the Kríyá for the release of their deceased relations, but especially in the case of apagatí death. There are various circumstances which render the death of an individual apagatí, i. e. evil, or such as involves the soul in misery, until some relative or friend perform the Kríyá Karm for them. Of this class are almost all accidental deaths, or deaths by disease within three days after being taken ill, dying on the house-top or in bed. When a person is evidently dying, if he is on a bedstead or house-top, he is tumbled down on the ground floor, or out of doors; but should they not be sufficiently watchful, and let him die on his cot, some one must go to Pahoe to perform the prescribed ceremonies, and pay the Brahmans for masses to get his soul out of this purgatory.

To-day numbers passed this on their way to Pahoe, with their little bags containing the ashes, nails, and teeth of some deceased relative. They all appeared to feel that they were engaged in a most important work, and few could be induced to stop at all, and they only for a few minutes. I was particularly impressed with their apparent earnestness; nothing could turn them aside form their purpose. I felt that they were administering a solemn reproof to the majority of those who have named the name of Christ, their manner indicating so much more decidedly that they felt they were engaged in business of vast importance. One man stopped a while who was on his return. He had been there to perform the Kríyá Karm for his father and mother. I asked him what sort of apagatí they had died. One of them, he said, had died on a cot! The conversation then took such a turn that I forgot to pursue my inquiries about the other. I asked him, Now, is their salvation secured? Yes, he replied. Now then, said I, have you nothing further ever to do for them? O yes, said he, I must perform the shrád, i. e. feast the Brahmans for their benefit every year. Thus these poor, deluded beings are never released from the talons of these harpies, the Brahmans. While alive they are kept constantly spending all they can earn in pilgrimages and dues to Brahmans, and after their death their children, as long as they live, must do the same both for parents and themselves, and when all is done, they are gravely told they must notwithstanding all suffer for all their sins, their merited punishment! Yet when we expose all this absurdity and villany, they open their eyes with astonishment, say, Yes, this is all certainly true, but what can we do? This is the way of the world, and we cannot leave the old track, bad as it is! Oh! how awfully enslaved are these miserable beings! How securely Satan has bound, and how awfully has he degraded his liege vassals! Come, O thou blessed Spirit of light, life, and liberty, break these heavy chains, and let the oppressed of Satan, the world, and the flesh go free.

Conversation with Pilgrims—Ignorant Mohammedan devotees.

25*th Karám.*—On the road this morning overtook a company of pilgrims on their way to Pahoe and Hardwár. They proved to be a Prohit (priest) and his Jagmáns, (those whose offerings are his right by inheritance,) from Jálandhar. I alighted from my horse and walked with them for the purpose of pointing them to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, without requiring long, expensive, wearisome, and dangerous pilgrimages. At first, all seemed delighted, and I could hear them expressing their surprise to each other, that I could talk with them in their own language. I had not proceeded far before the Prohit began to show signs of uneasiness, and a wish to get rid of my company. He was obliged to admit the truth of what I said, but were he to practise it, his gains would be gone. So he managed to drop behind after I had exposed his ignorance pretty effectually, and left me to proceed with my instructions to his Jagmáns, which I did until I became fatigued with walking, when I again mounted my horse and left them.

This place is almost all a mass of ruins, a few miserably poor-looking beings living in patched up ruins. Its principal importance seems to be derived from some old mausoleums occupied by faqirs, who live on the offerings of the people made to the tombs of these ancient saints of Islamism. They are a lazy, idle, ignorant, and bigoted set, the latter quality indurated in them by the support it affords them without labour. In order to disarm prejudice, I endeavoured to give them some instruction, taking my text from the Korán, the passage that declares that Christ was the Spirit of God, and given as a pattern for the world. From this I argued the divinity of Christ, the duty of all to follow his example, and worship God through him. They would not believe their Koran contained such a passage, and there was not one among them that knew enough to tell whether I had the Koran or not. At length a young upstart from one of the other tombs came up, who professed to be able to read the Koran. I tried him, and found the amount of his learning was, that he could rattle over a little at the beginning without understanding a word he read. On turning over a few leaves, he could not read a word even in that way, nor even the translation in his own mother tongue. Such is the ignorance of their own religion, into which I suppose more than 99–100 of this people are involved.

Theft—Lodging in a Faqir's house—Call of priests—Another theft.

26*th, Pahoe.*—Last night I had a practical exemplification of the villanous character of the people where I was. I got three watchmen from the police to guard the baggage, but instead of guarding they were leagued with thieves, who came and stole five or six rupees' worth of property, principally from the servants. In consequence of this, I was delayed so late that I was obliged to stop to get breakfast on the road, and did not reach this until late in the afternoon. To save the trouble of pitching a tent, I went into a small native house which I found empty by the road side, under the shade of a large pipul tree. It had been occupied by a faqír, but being now empty, was used by travellers. At one end of it was a small throne for his idols, ascended by three steps. During one tour I made, attending melas, some three years ago, I lived with these faqírs two or three weeks, and found it pretty comfortable, except that the amount of filth was rather more than I had been accustomed to.

Shortly after my arrival, quite a number of the Prohits of this place, who recollected my visit last year, called to make their salám, with whom I had some little discussion, in which I managed to set forth the gospel plan of salvation, and the character of Christ as the only immaculate incarnation. One man stood forward as a disputant, but after I had exposed several of his errors and self-contradictions, he raised a noise and went off.

27*th.*—Last night was awaked and kept awake for a long time by the noise in consequence of a theft—two of our oxen being taken off. And to-day a good deal of our time was taken up in ineffectual efforts for their recovery. I was surprised at the way in which the police officers tracked them to two neighbouring villages, through grain and grass. They then seized several of the villagers, and after exacting a promise of them to bring back the stolen property, let them go to search for them. Very few people have as yet arrived, consequently have had but little to do. The catechists went into the city, but the Brahmans would not let them do any thing, for the noise they kept up about them.

Stolen property recovered—Labours at the Mela.

28*th.*—Succeeded to-day in recovering the value of the property stolen from Karám, and have some hopes of recovering the oxen stolen from this place. The number of pilgrims arriving somewhat increased to-day, and we found more to do, but the Brahmans are so much afraid of our influence on their gains, that they avoid us, and do all they can to keep others away, and when they do come, very seldom any of them will listen to instruction, or even discuss any question. They will ask a question, and as soon as I begin to answer, two or three will start some other questions, or before I get out a single sentence, attempt to give their various answers to what they suppose I am about to say. Any thing to make a noise, and keep the people from receiving the truth.

29*th.*—This morning went out along the bank of the stream among the pilgrims, and addressed a good number of them, exposing the sin and folly of their course, and pointing them to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world. The Brahmans, seeing me at this work, came and interrupted several times.

The water here is not half as deep as it was last year. I observed people wading across not knee deep, and even at that they sunk ankle deep in the mud. At the bridge, the deepest place, the water is black with filth, and the stench is quite offensive, crossing the bridge, some thirty feet above it! This filthy place is the spot where the greatest amount of bathing takes place. I was occupied all day in various labours, until obliged from fatigue to desist, and walk out to take the evening air. During this walk was drawn into discussion two or three times, at each of which quite a crowd gathered around to listen.

30*th, Sabbath.*—The crowd still continues to increase, though it is nothing like what it was last year. A company from the mountains arrived, and learning I was here, came and encamped close by me, because they said they were afraid of thieves elsewhere, but by me felt safe. I took occasion from this to remind them that if their holy place had so little efficacy in reclaiming its inhabitants from gross sin, it was not likely to do much for them.

We were all very fully occupied to-day in private conversation, discussion, and preaching and distributing books; but our companies were generally small, and our discussion conversational and unsatisfactory.

31*st.*—This morning had the largest congregation and the best opportunity to preach. I have, during the whole mela, addressed them on the all-sufficiency of the plan of salvation by Christ, and the utter worthlessness of the absurd and wicked superstitions to which they were trusting.

On the proofs of the existence of God, independent of matter—A man drowned.

An Udasí Faqír has been here regularly every day for four days, to listen and propose questions. To-day he came twice and listened for a long time, but interposed no questions or objections. Apparently, however, he had one to discuss his difficulty for him, i. e. the proof of the existence of God independent of the material universe. Paley's argument from the evidences of design in creation was of no use in satisfying them. They took the ground of the eternity of matter, and that God was not separate from, or independent of, matter.

After exhausting the usual arguments without satisfying them, I appealed to the Word of God; but, replied they, first show that there is a God to give a revelation. I then referred to several of the prophecies and their circumstantial fulfilment, after a lapse of several centuries, and argued from this that they must have been written by the instruction of some being superior to any finite creature, and that being we call God. But, said they, how do we know that all this is true? I replied, if we reject these facts we must reject all the histories of every country in the world, for none are better authenticated than those which testify to the fulfilment of the prophecies, centuries after they were written. Therefore, if we reject them, we must reject all that has been written before us, and plunge ourselves into primeval darkness, and go to work to investigate anew every subject, without any previous experience to guide or assist us. This answer ended the discussion. The Faqír looked delighted, and his friend assented and yielded the point.

This evening the people were busy lighting little lamps and setting them afloat, to give light to their ancestors. One person was drowned at the principal bathing-place, and no effort was made to rescue him. He never arose to the top after he went under the water. It is possible he had jewels on his person, and some covetous Brahman dived and drowned him for his jewels, for this is a common trick at Benares, and the Brahmáns here are bad enough for that or anything else.

Brahmans suspected of murder; their bad character attested by pilgrims—Advice to these pilgrims—Concluding notices.

April 1st.—Learned to-day that the young man drowned last night had on a considerable quantity of jewels, and that the Brahmans told his mother not to cry about him, for his salvation was now secure, notwithstanding they number drowning among the cases of apagatí death! I am satisfied in my own mind, that my first suspicions were correct. The violence, fraud, oppression, and robbery practised by Brahmans, villains of all descriptions, and police-officers is beyond description.

The company of pilgrims from the mountains, mentioned on Sabbath, came up with me this evening and encamped beside me. I asked them what they had gained by their pilgrimage? The one who was most forward in defence of the Brahmans, said, in reply: "Blistered feet, hunger, thirst, an empty purse, and a light burthen to take home," for the Brahmans had robbed them of almost every thing. One of the women said they were not now afraid of thieves, for the Brahmans had left them nothing to steal, they were now almost naked. I told them they had gained one thing more than they enumerated, and that was a good lesson from the Brahmans, as to their character and religion, a lesson they might have learned from me had they only listened to me when I visited them in their villages, or when they arrived at the melá. I further advised them to go home and burn up their idols, give up Brahmans, and pilgrimages, and spend the money that would be thus saved in making their families comfortable, and educating their children. They expressed themselves delighted with the idea, and promised to adopt it, saying that would make them men and not mere animals. Still, I fear, they have not decision enough to do what they know to be right and best for themselves and for their children.

Was too hoarse from yesterday's labours to do much to-day, besides the wind and dust and constant noise and confusion of the people returning from the melá, rendered it almost impossible to do anything. Had a few to listen. Distributed a few books. Just before sundown, the Sardár or chief of an adjoining district called; urging me to call at his residence to-morrow, which I promised to do.

2*d. Naggar.*—Called on the Sardar on my way this morning, according to promise, but found him utterly ignorant of every thing except what might minister to the animal part of the man. After talking with him a long time, endeavouring to raise his thoughts to something higher than the gratification of mere sensual desires, and excite in him some desires after knowledge which might benefit his children, if not himself, I left him and proceeded to this place.

The Thánadár (head police-officer,) a respectable and gentlemanly young man, called on me this morning with some of his attendants, to whom, after a long conversation, I gave a supply of such Urdú books as I have left. Proceeded, after the heat of the day, to Ambála, and found all in usual health.

INDIA: AGRA MISSION.

STATISTICS OF THE CITY OF AGRA.

In a paper dated October 30, 1851, the Rev. J. L. Scott presents some interesting and valuable statistics of the population of Agra, drawn from the official returns.

The statistics of the city of Agra, which I am now about to present, may afford matter for much reflection, and if carefully studied will give a better idea of the state of an eastern city than many pages of general description. You will see from it the different classes into which society is cut up, and the proportion which those classes bear to each other. I have no doubt that the same proportion, with certain allowances for particular causes, will be found in other large cities. Of course it would not be the same in the country. I add a short description of each of the different occupations.

Sonár.—Goldsmiths, work also in silver; a caste of Hindus, respectable but not high; generally pretty well off in the world; some of them make very pretty ornaments in gold, such as breast-pins, earrings, &c.—They number 1104.

Lohár.—Blacksmiths, and iron-mongers; a caste of Hindus, rather low, but respectable; work slow but make some things very nicely. Some of them work also in brass, and I have had very pretty mathematical instruments made quite as well as the pattern. Many of them have now got English tools.—1194.

Thathere.—Braziers; Hindus; generally make brass and copper vessels for cooking and drinking. The Hindus always use brass or copper for these purposes, or if they cannot afford this, earth.—423.

Sikligar.—Burnishers, Musalmáns; engaged in polishing brass and iron tools generally. The Hindus always scour their own vessels with earth or sand, but have no employment in this way for the Sikligar.—92.

Barhái.—Carpenters; a Hindu caste; about equal to blacksmiths. They work very slowly, but some of them well. Their trade extends to all kinds of work in wood, labour not being so much subdivided here as at home. As joiners, they can make very respectable furniture, always however from a pattern. Always sit at their work, as where is the Hindu who does not, if he possibly can? The general price of a day's labour is what amounts to 8½ cents, which appears to be very cheap, but on account of the slowness of the work, it is I think about as dear as labour would be at home.—1507.

Kalaigar.—Tinkers; Musalmáns, mostly engaged in washing brazen and iron pots with a composition of pewter to prevent rust. All our cooking vessels are thus washed once a month. If this were not done the brass would poison the food.—89.

Chumárs.—Tanners, curriers, shoemakers, cobblers, and workers in leather generally. A caste of Hindus, the very lowest in the ranks of caste. These people eat all kinds of food, and are much despised by the other classes of Hindus. Still, though so very low, they have their own rules of caste, and are as careful as the others to preserve them.—2699.

Musawar.—Painters; both Hindus and Musalmán. Generally make pictures of the curiosities of Agra; the old buildings, such as the fort and Taj, and the different classes and occupations of the people. Also paint pictures of the gods in the temples, and in the houses of the wealthy.—189.

Glaziers.—Workers in glass. Not a caste. These people make a very inferior kind of bottles, very thin, and of a green cast. This is about the extent to which the art of glass-making has been carried in India.—21.

Teli.—Oil-men. A very low caste of Hindus. By the highest classes of Hindus it is considered unfortunate to see one before breakfast. The way in which they extract oil from various kinds of seeds, is by digging a conical shaped hole in the end of a large block firmly fixed in the ground. Into this hole a heavy beam, pointed at the lower end, with a shoulder to prevent it from falling out, is placed, and this beam is drawn round by an ox or cow, thus pressing the seed from which the oil is extracted against the sides of the hole in which it is thrown. The oil runs down through a little hole made below. This is the way in which sugar-cane also is pressed. It is hard to believe that this process will extract more oil than the most powerful presses, and yet it is so. Of course it is not so clean, and the process is slow, but time in this country is cheap. Most common oil is made from mustard seed. It sells at about the rate of 14 lbs. for fifty cts.—890.

Atash-báz.—Firework-makers—literally fire-players. These are generally Musalmáns. The people of this country are attached to exhibitions of this kind, and the works of the Atashbázies are much in demand. I have seen magnificent displays of fireworks, but they have not so many kinds as in America.—50.

Chúriwálás.—Makers of lac ornaments; a caste of Hindus. The lac is a gum exuded from the pípal tree (ficus Indica,) and is that from which sealing-wax is made. These ornaments are sealing-wax rings of various kinds and colours, worn on the wrist and ankles by the poorer classes of native women.—295.

Gold and silver lace-makers, and wire-drawers.—2435.

Nánbái.—Bakers and cooks. Hindus at home always cook in their own houses, but travellers sometimes buy from the shops. Of course the baker must be of a high caste. It is probable the most of this class are engaged in baking for the Europeans and East Indians of the station.—330.

Qasái.—Butchers—always Musalmáns. No Hindu would dare to engage in such an employment. Meat of a very inferior description is sold in the markets, and is bought by Musalmáns, and (except beef) by many of the Hindus. Good meat (beef and mutton) is fed for the Christian community, and may be had every day.—1304.

Durzi.—Tailors—Hindus and Musalmáns.—1604.

Kori.—Weavers—a caste of Hindus. The loom with which they weave is a very primitive thing. A hole is dug in the earth for the treadles and feet of the weaver. The warp is wrapped round a beam at the end, and tied to a stick at the other. No shuttle is used, but the woof is pushed with the hand from side to side. A good weaver cannot weave more than three yards a day. Yet in this way all the finest Indian fabrics have been woven. In the present day many of this class are turning to other occupations, on account of the superior cheapness of English and American goods. The latter is called Markeen—a corruption of American.—8702.

Dhuniyáns.—Cotton-teazers.—Cotton and wool are cleansed, not by cards, but by a large bow, the string of which is made to fly with great rapidity against the cotton.—452.

Ghariwálás.—Watch-makers, or rather menders. These are of course taught by Europeans.—8.

Saddlers and wapping-makers.—44.

Nái.—Barbers. A Hindu caste. Those who shave Englishmen are generally Musalmáns, who have taken up the trade. The Hindu barber, operating on a Hindu, washes the head and beard with cold water, and then with a broad blade, something like a razor, hacks away, shaving the beard and the head except the locks and a tuft of hair on the crown. After this is done he cleans and pares the nails of the fingers and toes.—1893.

Dhobi.—Washermen. A caste of Hindus; very low. They wash on the edge of the river, or tank, beating the clothes on a board raised at an angle of about 35°. The vast majority of Hindus have very little washing, never hardly changing their clothes until they are worn out.—1560.

Kasbi.—Dancers; women of ill-fame. These form a large class. They are employed at festivals, and great public gatherings, to dance and sing, and receive large sums of money for these services.—1317.

Banyán, Mahaján, Bizáj.—Banyans, merchants, cloth-merchants. The banyáns are a Hindu caste; the others are composed of all classes of people. Under this head shops of all kinds are included, from the highest to the lowest. Shops in this country are not like the splendid ones you have in New York or Philadelphia. They seldom look better than a cow-house would at home, and generally not half so well.—18,512.

Nálband.—Farriers. Mostly employed by the Christian community. They do not make the horse shoes, which is done by the blacksmiths, their trade being merely to put them on.—74.

Ragoogar.—Shawl-menders.—99.

Patwás.—Workers in silk. These men can make an humble imitation of fringe, and tassels, but their silk is not good.—703.

Nechiband.—Hookah-snake makers. The hookah-snake is the long tube through which the tobacco smoke is drawn. It is made by wrapping wire over a round stick, then covering it with strips of a large leaf of very firm texture, and lastly with silk. Almost all natives smoke the hookah, but only the rich are able to afford any thing more than a long wooden stem. These hookah-snakes are made for the richer natives, and for the English and East Indians, the latter of whom are much addicted to smoking the hookah. Dinner or tea is scarcely over before they are brought in by the servants, and placed behind their masters, when the gurgling sound of bubbling water, through which the smoke is made to pass, immediately commences. It would be an amusing sight to people in America.—166.

Draughtsmen and miniature painters.—165.

Thread-makers.—37.

Kumhár.—Potters; a Hindu caste. The art of pottery is in a very primitive state in India. A stone wheel, about two feet in diameter, running on a pivot is the only instrument required. The potter places a lump of mud duly prepared upon it, and whirls it round, forming the vessel with his fingers. The art of glazing is not known.—1529.

Chhípi.—Chintz printers. A wooden stamp with the pattern carved on it, is the only machinery used. This chintz is used for garments in the cold weather, for lining tents, for carpets, &c.—386.

Ráj.—Masons and stone-cutters; a Hindu caste. These men can do their work well, and some of them are skilful. They work slowly, and receive 3 annas, or about 8½ cents a day.—3608.

Bamboo basket-makers.—790.

Paper makers.—The material for the paper is washed, soaked, and pounded into a pulp. It is then taken on to a seive, from which it is removed, and stuck up on the side of the house to dry.—220.

Chandlers, soap makers, &c.—Soap is never used by the Hindus, as it contains the fat of the cow or hog. They always use sand or mud in their cleansing operations. But with strange inconsistency, they do not scruple to use the hide of the cow for their shoes.—59.

Poulterers.—These are sweepers, and the lowest class of Musalmáns.—159.

Engravers and lapidaries.—These men make very beautiful mosaic work in marble. The Táj, perhaps the prettiest building in the world, is extensively covered with this work.—61.

All others,—50,066.—Total 104,636.

Add for five years since the census was taken. The Deputy Collector, who was the principal person engaged in taking the census, thinks that the city has increased not less than this sum, 10,000.

Servants in gentlemen's compounds estimated at 5000.

East Indians estimated at 1000.

Englishmen, European soldiers, sepoys, and inhabitants of the bazars, in the civil and military lines, of which bazars there are twelve, 7000.

Grand total—127,636.

The above may be considered a pretty fair estimate of the population of Agra. What a field for missionary labour! Would that we had forty or fifty missionaries continually acting upon this population, by preaching, by schools, and by all the means in our power!

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

VIEWS AND STATISTICS CONCERNING INDIA AS A MISSIONARY FIELD.

The subjugation of the whole of Hindustan by a Christian nation more than 15,000 miles distant, is one of the most wonderful facts of modern times. No part of history shows more clearly the hand of God, or in a more striking manner fulfils the prophetic declarations of his holy word in reference to the progress of the Redeemer's kingdom. The stone which was cut out of the mountains without hands, is smiting the kingdoms of the earth.

By this overruling Providence, one of the largest, most populous, and wealthy portions of heathenism has been opened to the gospel. Never before has the Church had so extensive a field for her efforts of benevolence.

This vast empire extends from Peshawer to Cape Comorin, near 2000 miles, and from the Indus to the Brahmanputr, more than 1500, containing 1,287,000 square miles, an area as large as the whole of Europe, omitting Russia, and as large as the six Eastern, four Middle, nine Southern, and the Western States of America. Besides, it contains nearly three times the number of inhabitants found in the whole of North and South America.

In whatever light the mind contemplates India, it is filled with astonishment. Her history extends into an unknown antiquity, her civilization is the most ancient the world has known; her literature and science, for ages equal to if not surpassing that of any other nation; her systems of philosophy and religion are monuments of the subtlety, acumen, and industry of their founders, and are conveyed to us in one of the most refined languages of the earth. Still, notwithstanding all this, the millions of India are the victims of the most debasing superstitions. Their civilization or their philosophy, either, has not saved them from the worship of stocks and stones, of beasts and reptiles, and with all their claims for wisdom, they do not fail, in a moral sense, to put light for darkness, and darkness for light, to call sweet bitter, and bitter sweet, to call good evil, and evil good.

However interesting the study of India may be to the worldly and curious, the chief interest with which the Christian views her has reference to her spiritual welfare. He looks upon her past history and present condition with sorrow, but forward with hope. The signs of the times speak a language which every one who is interested in her evangelization should not fail to understand. The field is open and white for the harvest; the people are eager to read and to hear; schools have been established in which thousands of young men are trained in the literature, science, and religion of Christian nations; Bible and tract societies have been organized; the Bible and religious books have been translated into most of the native languages, and extensively distributed; a spirit of inquiry has been awakened, and we have good reason to believe that the truth has taken deep root, and that, in proportion to the labour expended, the fruit has been as great as the Church could reasonably expect. But oh! how few the labourers, how entirely inadequate to the wants of this country, the following tables, taken from authentic sources,* will show.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.

Divisions of Country.	Sq. Miles.	Population.	Missionaries.
Bengal Presidency,	173,000	35,000,000	102
N. W. Provinces,	170,210	28,000,000	59
Madras Presidency,	126,000	18,000,000	145
Bombay Presidency,	68,000	8,000,000	26
Panjab,	65,000	4,000,000	4
Scinde,	50,000	1,500,000	1
		94,500,000	337

Taking the parts best supplied with missionaries, we have but 337 labourers to a population of 94,500,000; this will give more than 281,000 souls for each labourer; in this proportion there would be not more than two for the city of New York, three for the State of Massachusetts, not two for Connecticut, and about seven for the entire State of Pennsylvania. In the Presbyteries of Elizabethtown and New Brunswick, there are 83 ministers and 23 candidates; these make a greater number than all the missionaries in the Bengal Presidency, which contains 35,000,000 of souls, and almost double the number in the N. W. Provinces, containing 28,000,000. This is a glance at those portions of India which are the best supplied with missionaries, but there are large districts where there are none, as the following table will show.

TRIBUTARY OR ALLIED STATES.

Names.	Square Miles.	Population.	Missionaries.
Oude,	24,000	6,000,000	None.
Sikim,	4,000	500,000	None.
Rajpoot, Jaypoor, Indore, Bhopal,	120,000	17,000,000	None.
Gwalior,	33,000	4,000,000	None.
Hydrabad,	89,000	10,000,000	None.
Nagpore,	57,000	3,000,000	2
		40,500,000	2

Here are vast districts containing 13,000,000 of inhabitants more than the whole British empire, and almost double the number found in the United States, without a single missionary, except in the province of Nagpore. All these are under British influence and British protection, and open to the gospel. What great destitution is here! Can the Church shut her eyes and do nothing for these perishing millions? Has God opened these regions for no purpose? I believe not. The Church will rise and do her duty, But why delay? Time is precious, and souls are perishing. Now is the time to send the gospel to India.

I will subjoin a table presenting the subject in a new form, of the cities and towns of India, with their population and the number of missionaries provided for them.

Some of the cities and towns.

Names.	Population.	Missionaries.
Calcutta and suburbs,	800,000	37
Madras,	700,000	25
Bombay,	230,000	13
Dacca,	200,000	2
Benares,	300,000	11

North-Western Districts.

Again, let us look at the North-Western provinces, the field which our Church has undertaken to cultivate, and see what yet remains to be done.

Districts.	Population.	Missionaries.
Paneeput, Hurreeanah, Delhi, Rohtuck, Gorgaon,	1,567,501	None.
Saharunpur, Mozuffernagger, Meerut, Bolundshahur, Allyghur,	3,384,432	4
Bijnore, Moradabad, Badaon, Bareilly, Shajehanpore,	4,399,865	None.
Mattra and Agra, Furrukhabad, Mirzapur, Etawah,	3,505,740	19
Cawnpore, Futtehpore, Calpee, Baroda, Allahabad,	3,219,042	7
Gorruckpore, Azimghur, Jaunpore, Benares, Ghazepore,	7,121,087	19

From this it will be seen that "some of the finest, and some of the most populous parts of Northern India are altogether neglected, or supplied at the rate of one missionary to 1,500,000 people."

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

THE RELIGIONS OF CHINA, BY THE REV. A. W. LOOMIS: NO. V.

Worship of Ancestors—Chinese reverence for parents and grand-parents.

The worship of ancestors forms so considerable a part of the religion of the Chinese, and is, as it will probably long continue to be, in the mind of a Chinaman, so prominent a difficulty in the way of his receiving the Christian religion, that it is needful to say something about it. In the letters to Sabbath-school children, by Mr. Walter M. Lowrie, already referred to, you will find much information on this subject, and there is therefore less need of my saying much in this place.

The rites for the dead, or the service rendered by the Chinese to the spirits of their deceased parents and ancestors, is of a religious character: it is of the same kind as that rendered to their gods, and to heaven and earth. From their earliest years Chinese children are taught to reverence their parents, to obey them implicitly, to address them in the most respectful language, to rise when they approach and give them the most honourable place, to wait upon them and help them to the best of whatever they have. They are taught, by precept and example, the necessity of being willing to endure the greatest self-denial for the relief and comfort of their parents; even to sell themselves into slavery, if need be, in order to procure funds for the relief of a parent's necessities. To grand-parents they are still more attentive and respectful. At the new year's holydays, especially, they must go to see them, and bow down before them, striking the head to the earth, in the same manner as is done at the graves, and before the tablets of those parents and ancestors that are dead. Parents require their children, the sons especially, to do these things, and to refuse is considered the greatest possible act of disobedience and disrespect.

Ancestral tablets, "halls of ancestors," and temples.

Ancestral worship is performed before the ancestral tablets, and at the tomb. The Chinese believe that every person has three souls, of which, at death, one goes immediately to appear before the king of the infernal regions, to receive its sentence; one resides in and about the tomb, and the other resides in the tablet.

The tablet is a piece of board from six to fifteen inches in length, two or three inches wide, set on a pedestal. In the back of the tablet is usually a box, or place hollowed out, in which may be put a paper containing the names of ancestors for generations back. On the front of the tablet are carved the name, title, and date of the birth and death of the person for whom it is intended. And this little piece of wood is called the "house of the spirit." It is supposed that the spirit passes from the body of the deceased into the tablet, as they are placed near each other on the ground, while the priest is chanting prayers over it, and the mourners are wailing. These tablets are found in every family. The poor place them in a little shrine which occupies some prominent position in the principal room of their dwelling; usually at the upper part of the back wall, or partition of the middle room.

Some families have one room especially appropriated as the "hall of ancestors," and a niche built into the wall for these household divinities. Where a number of families of sons and sons' sons live on the same premises, on the patriarchal principle, as is common in China, the ancestral hall is in the part of the house occupied by the father; and after his death, of the oldest surviving brother. It is the duty of some member of the family daily to place burning incense-sticks, and to bow down before this shrine. Wealthy families build temples expressly for the honour and repose of the spirits of their ancestors; in these the tablets are placed, and the ancestral worship is performed here. Many branches of a family, the sons of the same father, may have a common interest in these temples, many of which are large, with extensive courts, and with many halls, all adorned with carving, gilding, and sculptured stones. In these halls are placed, for preservation and observation, all honorary tablets which any members of the family may have received from the emperor, obtained either by merit or by money, and the tablets which serve as diplomas for the literary degrees. Before the gates of many of these ancestral temples are raised those long poles, so common in China, the privilege to erect which is granted by the emperor in consideration of a large sum of money. They insure to the person possessing them a title of some importance, with certain privileges and immunities.

How this worship is often supported.

Many of the ancestral temples are endowed with lands, the proceeds of which are appropriated to the support of the temple, such as furnishing things requisite for the offerings, for the pay of priests who may officiate at the stated seasons of worship, and for theatrical exhibitions designed for the entertainment of the spirits of the departed. Properly, the whole income from such lands should be used in offerings, and in other ways for the supposed benefit and entertainment of the deceased, whose spirits are, as they think, residing here; but even so superstitious as the Chinese are, in this most important part of their religion, they are brought by the necessities of poverty, or demands of avarice, to rob their ancestors of part of this portion, which they had settled upon their own manes, and those of their posterity for ever. They divide amongst the living members of the family at the end of every year, all that has not been consumed in the services of the temple. This dividend often gives many hundred pounds of rice to each branch of the family. But should a person become a convert to Christianity, he of course refuses to take part in the ancestral worship, and as a consequence, he is cut off from the privilege of sharing in the proceeds of this property. Here is one instance where interest must be sacrificed by many among the Chinese should they become converts to Christianity.

Ancestral temples serve as convenient places for family meetings on festival days, and other occasions for family gatherings.

The worship of ancestors costs the Chinese much of their time, and very much of their money. A stranger is impressed with the frequency and the size of the buildings devoted to this purpose, each being the property of a few individuals. The temple purchased by the Ningpo Mission from the Loo family, was said by them to have cost originally upwards of three thousand dollars. This item, though it is but a part of what the Chinese pay for religious purposes, yet it may be contrasted with all that Christians give for the support of the gospel amongst themselves.

You see what provisions are made for the soul which dwells in the ancestral tablet, such as ancestral halls, incense and adoration daily presented, with plentiful sacrifices, at stated times, of cooked meats, cakes, fruit, wine, tea, &c. &c., and special worship on New Year's day, and on other particular occasions in the family.

Provisions made for the second soul—Reasons for delay of Burials.

I must next describe briefly the attentions which are paid to the soul, which they believe abides by the coffin or tomb. It is often the case that the corpse remains in the house many months; sometimes more than a year, before it is carried out to be buried. Some of the reasons why the corpse is kept in the house so long are the following: One family keeps the corpse in the house because the geomancers, in hope of getting more fees for their services, pretend to have difficulty in finding a "lucky place" for the burial. Another family defers the funeral ceremonies on account of a lack of means for a funeral as expensive and pompous as they suppose the standing of the family, or a proper regard for the deceased requires; for they not only consult their own pride in the matter, but believe also that the deceased is really gratified and benefitted by the attentions shown to the remains. Others, who have removed to a distance from their paternal home, preserve the coffin unburied until they can remove it to the place of their fathers' sepulchres. The coffin being large, of thick plank, and the seams made tight with cement, there is seldom any offensive odour from it.

While the coffin remains in the house, a small table is usually kept before it, on which are an incense-pot, and a pair of candlesticks. Some small offerings and incense are daily presented. In many cases paper images are placed between the table and coffin; these are representations of a man-servant, and of a female servant; one in the act of presenting a pipe with tobacco to his master, the other holding a server with tea and fruits. Also, near the coffin, may be paper boxes to represent trunks of clothing, sedan-chairs, &c. Eventually these images and paper furniture are burned, and in this way transmitted to the land of spirits, for the use of him who is dead. . . When the burial takes place, a small hole is left in the mason-work which incloses the coffin, to allow the spirit a place at which to go in and out.

Worship at the Tombs.

Care is taken that the tomb shall be in a pleasant situation, and where the occupant may enjoy an agreeable prospect. There is much to be said about the manner of selecting a place for burial, the manner of constructing the tombs, funeral ceremonies, &c., but leaving that for the present, I will give you a brief account of the annual, and, with some, semi-annual worshipping at the tombs. This worship is called pai shan, or worshipping the hills, because, where the hills are not too far distant, they are chosen as more suitable for burying-places. The season for this worship occurs at Tsing Ming, about the month of April; and many observe the same ceremonies again in September. The universal Chinese nation, both high and low, old and young, male and female, regard the duty of worshipping at the tombs of their ancestors, at least once a year, as indispensable. Sons absent from home return at the season of Tsing Ming, or as near to it as possible, to discharge this most important filial duty. With the youthful members of a family, it is a kind of jubilee, when they expect an excursion into the country, a time for visiting with cousins, and plenty of good things to eat. At this season all the pleasure-boats, and many of the sedan-chairs, kept to hire, are in requisition. Whenever we go out, and in whatever direction we go, while the time for these ceremonies continue, we encounter parties going to, or returning from their family sepulchres.

The rich go with pomp, sometimes taking with them a band of musicians, who fill the air, as they proceed, with the doleful sounds produced by their instruments. When the party arrives at the place where their kindred are buried, they arrange tables before the tombs, and lay on the sacrifices prepared, and which they have brought with them; these consist of small hogs, fowl, duck, geese, fish, baked or boiled whole, and are called the "five sacrifices;" also wheaten cakes, boiled rice, fruits and wine. Candles and incense-sticks are lighted and placed on the table. Then all the persons present worship before the tables, kneeling and knocking the forehead many times upon the earth. Each repeats these forms many times before they depart. They pray to the spirits of their kindred, entreating them to come forth and partake of the viands they have spread for their use, and beseeching them to lend their good offices to their surviving descendants. In some cases prayers are written and laid upon the tomb. Gilt and silver-leaf, or tin-foil paper, put up in the form of bars and cakes of gold and silver, are burned near the grave, to be transmitted by this process to their relatives in the other world. Long strips of white, and of yellow paper cut in scollops, are hung about the grave, these are to represent strings of copper coin. Other paper ornaments are burned, or left upon the grave. After some time has been spent in disposing of the offerings, and in worshipping, the provisions on the table upon which, as they suppose, the spirits of the dead have been feeding, are again put into the baskets, libations of wine are poured out in front of the graves, and handfuls of boiled rice are thrown about amongst the graves of infants, and youthful members of the family, and neglected graves, to feed the hungry spirits who have no surviving relatives to care for them. After removing any weeds and rubbish that may be about the tombs, and looking to the shrubbery and flowers with which the place is adorned, they repair to their boats, and return home to feast upon the good things in their baskets.

Concluding Reflections.

I have been sitting a few moments, running over in my mind what I have been writing about the anxiety manifested, and the care which is taken for the welfare of the souls of the dead; and I have been thinking of the practical lessons which these things teach the children of our churches. I conclude my remarks, therefore, at present, with these reflections: Obedience to parents, and respect shown to the aged is well—the Bible commands it; and in this we may learn morals, and good manners from Chinese children: but we should grieve that they carry their good manners to excess, and render divine honours to mortals. It is commendable in children that they do not soon forget their parents and kindred that have died, and that they frequently repair to the grave where profitable reflections should be suggested by the proximity of the dead: but when we know that they visit the grave expecting that the soul of their relative dwells there, and hoping to render it some service, thinking too that it can serve them, we are sorry for them; they are deluded, their friends who have died are beyond the influence of their kind services; and if they lived without God and without Christ in the world, they died without hope. O that they had the gospel which teaches of life and immortality brought to light by our Saviour Jesus Christ. O that they knew the truth, that man has a soul—one soul, which is of more value than worlds; that Jesus only can save the soul, and that all who believe upon him shall not perish, but shall have everlasting life.

A LETTER FROM MR. M. S. COULTER.

The Island of Poo-too—Its Temples—Extensive View—Walk round the Island.

Ningpoo, China, June 8th, 1852.

My Dear Sir,—On the 24th of last month, Mrs. Coulter and myself, in company with several others, started on an excursion to Poo-too. We reached there on the 26th, and remained on the island five days. The weather being fine all the time, we had an opportunity of seeing most of what was to be seen. As you do not hear very often from this peculiar island, I have concluded to give you a brief account of some of the things which come under my observation. If I fail to interest you, please excuse the attempt.

The description of the places visited by your son, is very accurate; the only thing in which I would be inclined to differ from him, is, that the idols do not seem to be in such poor repair as he represents them to be. His visit, however, was made several years ago, and they may have been repaired since. The first day we were on the island we passed over the same road, and visited the same temples, viz., Pih-hwayen, Seen-sz, and How-sz—('Eo-sz.) On the following day we extended our rambles to Veh-ting-sæn, the highest hill on the island—(Veh is an appellation of Budh, and ting-sæn, is the summit of a hill.) We had no means of ascertaining its height, but I would suppose that the road by which we went up was rather more than a mile in length. The ascent was not very difficult: the first half was gradual, the latter quite steep. The road is made of stone slabs as steps. About half way up is a little spring of beautiful water. The 'Eo-sz which lies at the foot of this hill, is furnished with water from this spring; being led down the hill in bamboo pipes. Close by, lives a recluse.

Having reached the summit of the hill, we found there a rough monument. The lower part is about ten feet square, and six feet high. On this, is another elevation of four feet, and about four feet square. As many of us as could find room, climbed to the top of this, and from it we had a view which fully repaid us for our fatiguing journey up the hill.—We could see the outline of the whole island, with its temples and groves on the sides and summits of the hills, and its cultivated fields in the valleys. The sea opened out on all sides. On one side was the magnificent and well-cultivated island of Chusan; turning a little farther round, a vast expanse of sea stretched out before us; still a little farther, and we see the ocean dotted over with hundreds of little islands, some of them looking like mere specs. The scene was a beautiful one. We all united in singing, "Father, whate'er of earthly bliss," and the Missionary Hymn. A little distance down the northern side of this hill, is the Veh-ting-Sæn temple, situated in a beautiful grove. We visited it, but found nothing of note. Returning home, we found the descent of the hill much more difficult than the ascent had been. Although the chairs were good, and the bearers sure-footed, a person could not come down entirely free from anxiety. I here found disadvantage in being large, as on this account I had to walk most of the way both up and down the hill. When we started in the morning, my bearers estimated my weight at 300 lbs., but before we got back they had increased it to 1000! just five times my real weight. They told me I was abundantly large for a mandarin!

The next day, the Rev. E. W. Syle, (of the Episcopal Mission, at Shanghai, who was one of our company,) and myself, walked around the island. We were eight hours in making the circuit, walking at the rate of about one and a half miles per hour. Including two or three promontories, around which we did not walk, we estimated the circumference of the island to be about fifteen miles. In passing around, we found the scenery varied and interesting. Some beautiful valleys opened out towards the sea, all of which were in a high state of cultivation. The farming here is not done by the priests themselves: they rent the ground to farmers from the adjacent islands, who come and plant it. If they plant it with rice, they pay the priests from 200 to 240 catties of rice per acre, as rent. If they plant it with any thing else, they do not pay the rent in kind, but in rice, as before, or the value of that much rice in money. Some of the hill sides, which were too steep or too poor to plant in grain or vegetables, were planted with pines. We saw many fields of them in different degrees of advancement. When they become large enough they are cut down for fuel. Most of the northern side of the island is bleak, and has very few groves and temples. All of the temples that we visited were small, and in a ruinous condition; in one of them, the idols were propped up with old benches to keep them from falling. I believe we never saw more than three priests in any of them; mostly only two. The portions of the island facing towards the east, south, and west, were more fertile, and the groves and temples more numerous. On the south side there are some deep ravines and frightful looking precipices—on this side there is also a beach, called the "beach of a thousand paces"—I would suppose it a mile long. It is perfectly smooth, and when we first saw it, breakers from six to ten feet high were rushing in over it. Not far from this is another smaller beach, where the Rev. Mr. Lowder was drowned. Before reaching home we came to a spring, which was pointed out as a curiosity. It is about ten feet under ground, and we descended to it by steps. The water is clear, cool, and sweet. Besides this, there is nothing at all remarkable about it.

Sabbath Services—The Oldest Priest—"Thousand handed Goddess"—A round Rock—Caves—Monument and Inscription—Temples, Caves, and Priests—Poo-too as a Retreat.

The next day, (Sabbath,) at 10 A. M., Mr. Syle preached from Acts iv. 1–4. At 3 P. M., Mr. Goddard (of the Baptist Mission) preached from Acts xvii. 16: "Now, while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry." Our congregation in the morning consisted of fifteen persons, (all foreigners,) and in the evening twelve. During the day several Chinese services were held, both for the benefit of our own servants, and also for any who might be disposed to listen. Only a few of the priests attended, and they listened with a look of scorn and contempt.

On Monday we visited a temple on the summit of one of the hills, in which the oldest priest on the island lives—he is 73 years old; has a grey beard and pleasant countenance, and is active for a man of his age. He made himself very agreeable; spread out a nice and beautiful tiffin for us, and treated us kindly in every way. In this temple is the "thousand-handed goddess." None of our party attempted to count how many there really were; we were satisfied that if there were not a thousand, there were at least a great many. Eight or ten pairs of those in front were in good proportion; the others came out of the sides of the image, and formed a figure similar to half of an elipse—they were of a proper length, but very small otherwise. Over another goddess we saw the inscription "Yin gyin plh ing,"—"He that seeketh will certainly find an answer."

Close by this temple is a rock, which the Chinese think curious. It is a round bowlder, about twelve feet in diameter, resting on another stone which is nearly flat. So small a portion of it is in contact, that it looks as though one man could move it with ease. But several of us were upon it at one time, and found it perfectly firm. From this, a very extensive view can be had of the ocean and adjacent islands.

We afterwards visited several caves. Two of these had been so evidently changed by art, that they were devoid of interest. They were originally, in all probability, small clefts in the rocks; they have been somewhat enlarged, the irregularities filled up, and to crown the whole, have been plastered and whitewashed! We finally, however, found a group of caves in a state of nature; nothing about them showed that the hand of man had been there, except a god in each one of them, and a little incense pot. These caves are well worth seeing. A visitor is very liable, however, to miss them, for being just as nature formed them; the people never think of pointing them out as curiosities, our party came across them accidentally.

Frequently during our walks we passed the monument mentioned by your son, and supposed to be written in Sanscrit. He mentions but one: there are two, however, side by side. On one, the writing is very distinct. Of this I took a copy, which I herewith send you. The writing on the other is so dimmed with age, that I found it would be very difficult to take a copy, and my time being limited, I did not attempt it. If I should visit Poo-too again, I will try hard to accomplish this.—I should like to hear the opinion of some of the learned ones at home, as to what language this inscription is written in, and what its meaning. The Chinese characters under it, are those which you see in hundreds of places in Poo-too: "Nan woo o-me-to-fuh:" (Hail! Budh.)

There are said to be 72 temples and 36 caves on Poo-too. Of the temples, there are only four large ones, and of these four, the Seen-sz is the largest. There are said to be 100 priests in it. We heard several accounts as to the number of priests on the island; 500, however, better agrees with what we saw, than any higher number. They constitute the greater part of the fixed population. There is, however, quite a number of houses and shops about the Seen-sz, which are occupied by tradesmen. Women are not allowed to live on the island. Of the 500 priests, 200 are said to smoke opium.

Poo-too wants but one thing to make it a desirable and healthy summer retreat; and that is provisions. Nothing but the red rice and a few vegetables can be bought there. However, if it was much frequented by foreigners, it would induce those on the neighbouring islands to bring provisions. Poo-too has not been much frequented by foreigners heretofore, partly because it was formerly a great resort for pirates, and partly owing to the difficulty of communication between it and other parts of China.

It is painful to see so beautiful an island so "wholly given to idolatry;" so entirely given up to the service of the evil one. Images are seen carved on the rocks by the way-side; every grove has its temple; every cave its god; and every spring its presiding deity.

It was an interesting incident to find Chinese paintings of our church building exposed for sale at this place, which is so eminently Satan's seat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE NEW ZEALAND CHIEF.

One day a chief in New Zealand met a missionary and told him that his old heart was gone, and that a new one was come in its place. "Gone! whither?" "It is buried: I have cast it away from me." "How long has it been gone?" "Four days." "What was your old heart like?" "Like a dog; like a deaf man; it would not listen to the missionary nor understand." "How long have you had your old heart?" "Always, till now; but it is now gone." "What is your new heart like?" "It is like yours; it is very good." "Where is its goodness?" "It is altogether good; it tells me to lie down and sleep all day on Sunday, and not to go and fight." "Is that all the goodness of your new heart?" "Yes." "Does it not tell you to pray to Jesus Christ?" "Yes; it tells me that I must pray to him when the sun rises, when the sun stands in the middle of the heavens, and when the sun sets." "When did you pray last?" "This morning." "What did you pray for?" "I said, O Jesus Christ, give me a blanket, in order that I may believe." "I fear your old heart still remains; does it not?" "No; the new one is quite fixed; it is here"—pointing to his throat. "But the new heart, that comes from God, does not pray in that way." "How then?"

In answer to this last question, the missionary went on to tell him what it was to pray, what he should pray for, and how ready God is to hear us, when we ask for heavenly blessings in the name of Christ. But it was hard for him to understand the meaning. Children, who have been taught from their cradle about the Saviour and a new heart, do not know how dark the minds of the heathen are. This story shows you what Paul means, when he says, (2 Cor. iv. 4,) "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." Will you not pray that many such ignorant heathen as this New Zealand chief, may find the way to Jesus Christ, and be truly washed in his blood and made heirs of heaven?—Dayspring, Oct., 1850.

PATIENCE IN DOING GOOD.

When we remember that the missionaries laboured five years in Orissa, fifteen in Greenland, sixteen in Tahiti, and seventeen in New Zealand, before they saw any of the heathen converted to Jesus, and then gathered a rich harvest of precious souls, we need not, and indeed must not, despond. "Behold," says James, "the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath LONG PATIENCE for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient;" for "in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLICATION ROOMS,

No. 265 Chestnut st., Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, colportage, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to the Rev. GEORGE W. MUSGRAVE, D D. Corresponding Secretary and General Agent, No. 265 Chestnut St.

Orders for books, and letters relating to the business of the Depository, to be addressed to Mr. JOSEPH P. ENGLES, Publishing Agent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. ENGLES, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to A. W. MITCHELL, M. D. Treasurer.

Our readers will be gratified to learn that the vacant Secretaryship of the Board of Publication has been filled. The Rev. George W. Musgrave, D. D., pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, Maryland, has been elected their Corresponding Secretary and General Agent. The appointment has been accepted by Dr. Musgrave, and, Providence permitting, he will immediately enter upon the duties of his office. We need scarcely express our appreciation of the qualifications of Dr. Musgrave for this station. His name, character, and influence are well known to the Church at large; and while highly esteemed by the Church which he has served for twenty-one years, for his pastoral fidelity and ministerial success, he has a wider fame as an able preacher and most efficient member of our Church judicatories. Under his superintendence we have reason to hope that the highly interesting and popular Institution which has just expressed its confidence in him, will continue to press forward in a still increasing sphere of usefulness.

"WAYSIDE THOUGHTS."

The Board have lately published a series of two-page tracts, 18mo., done up neatly in a packet, containing 52. Price 5 cents.

They are wholesome and agreeable food for souls, to be partaken of either in the house or by the way.

We subjoin a specimen.

"He that shall endure unto the end the same shall be saved. Matt. xxiv. 13.
Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. 1 Cor. x. 12.

The perseverance of the saints is a glorious doctrine, founded on God's everlasting love, and the continual intercession of our glorious Advocate before the throne. Grace begun will certainly be perfected in glory. Remember the apostle's declaration, "He that hath begun the good work in you will perform it until the day of Christ." Yet we are exhorted to take heed how we stand; and it will be necessary first to examine the foundation on which we stand. If Christ be our foundation, neither earth nor hell can remove the building; but if our hopes of salvation are founded upon our own performances, it is like building upon the sand, and it will certainly fall. To this take heed; and in order that you may stand an honourable member of Jesus Christ, be diligent in the exercise of religious duties. Pray much, read your Bible much, be frequent and serious in your attendance upon public ordinances; be strong in the grace that is in Jesus Christ; look to him for needful supplies, and he that has promised never to leave nor forsake his people, will be found faithful to his work.

And when I reach the realms above,
And view my Saviour's face,
My whole employ will be to sing
Rich, free, and sovereign grace."

A BLESSED WORK.

A theological student in the South, who spent his vacation as a colporteur in North Carolina, thus writes:

"You can hardly imagine the blessed work you are doing from day to day, as you are at work managing the business of preparing and sending off the books of the Board. By your labours many are made happy; many a family circle among the poor spend the quiet hours of evening in reading and re-reading good religious books. And while you spend many days of anxious care about the prosperity and usefulness of the Board, you must occasionally think of the joy and gladness springing up in the hearts of many a family as they receive your books from the hand of the colporteur. Could you but witness some of the interesting scenes that are familiar to the colporteur, you would feel that your labour was light compared with the pleasure you afford. There is much labour to be done in conducting all the operations of the Board, and there is much real pleasure to be enjoyed in the work, for it is a blessed work. The colporteur, though labouring in a more humble sphere, enjoys the more pleasure; for it is his privilege to enter the cottages of the poor, and bring to them sweet messages of truth. He too is permitted to witness the happy influence that religious truth exerts upon the heart, and he cannot but feel that he is engaged in a blessed work—nothing less than the work of bringing souls to heaven.

At places where I have stopped at night in the country, my heart has been cheered in view of my work. As soon as my books were brought in at evening, the family would gather around to look over the books. When they had examined them, the mother or father would say, Come, children, get some of these good books, and read all you can to-night, for we cannot buy all the books, and the man will leave us in the morning. So presently all would be engaged in reading, and the parlour would, till a late hour, have the appearance of a school-room. In the morning, the children would be sure not to let the book-man leave, and carry all his books."

A SUGGESTION.

As a true blue Presbyterian, ardently desiring the welfare and prosperity of our Church, I think that any circumstance, although comparatively slight and unimportant, which is calculated to benefit our cause, should be noted. Particularly anxious we all feel that the younger members of the churches and congregations should love the form of worship held dear by their fathers; and it has seemed to me, from ample opportunities of observation, that there might be much more attention paid to seeming trifles—which, however, are not trifles if they further this end. One item I wish particularly to call attention to, which is the general inattention and indifference exhibited toward the doctrines of our Church as laid down in the Confession of Faith. Would not our young people desire a better acquaintance with the contents of the book were its exterior more attractive? We see every adornment of beautiful binding and gilding lavished on the Episcopal Prayer-book; it is on every young lady's table—and is a book dear to them. If they admire it, they love it too; and does not our sterling book of doctrine deserve more attention to its dress and appearance than it has ever received? I speak what I know, when I say that were our Confession of Faith a more sightly book, three copies would be sold to every one now disposed of. What more beautiful or appropriate present from a father to his son or daughter, than a richly bound copy of this book? It should be made to correspond with a Bible and hymn-book—and no beauties of the book-binder's art could be better bestowed. I have never yet seen this book exalted to its proper position in the Presbyterian's library. May I not hope that this suggestion may find favour in the eyes of those who have the management of these matters, and be the means of doing some little good to our cause? A CONSTANT READER.

We thank our correspondent for the above suggestion. It savours of "zeal according to knowledge." "Apples of gold," though not more valuable, are more attractive when presented "in pictures (baskets) of silver." It is not as well known as it ought to be, that the Board have published an edition of the Confession of Faith on superior paper, in 12mo size, bound in Turkey morocco, at $2.50 a copy. It is a favourable indication of the interest taken in the standards of our Church that the Board have already published 40,000 copies of the Confession, of which 1500 were of the fine edition.

A BOOK FOR MINISTERS AND STUDENTS.

Letters on Clerical Manners and Habits, addressed to a Student in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. By Samuel Miller, D. D. A new edition, revised by the author. 12mo, pp. 384, with a portrait of the author. Price 65 cents.

Every candidate for the ministry, and every minister of the gospel, of whatever denomination, should read carefully, and ponder seriously, the lessons of wisdom contained in this volume. Those who had the happiness to enjoy the instructions or the familiarity of the venerable author, know that his own mind and manners furnished the model which he has here so forcibly and affectionately recommended to others.

We subjoin an extract.

"Be a close student through life. It is as wonderful as it is humiliating, how entirely habits of study are abondoned by many clerical men, almost as soon as what may be called their initiatory course is closed. From that time, they seem to think it sufficient, if they read and think enough, each week, to address their people twice from the pulpit, on the Sabbath, in a common-place way. Thenceforward they make no solid addition to their stock of knowledge. Their minds become lean and inactive. Instead of causing "their profiting to appear unto all," every time they enter the sacred desk they become more and more jejune and uninteresting. With the habit, they lose all taste for study. Their leisure hours are spent in worldly cares, or in gossipping, rather than among their books. They invite premature intellectual torpor and debility. They cease to instruct their hearers, and soon become a dead weight, instead of a comfort and blessing to their congregations. Such is the history of many a minister who had good natural talents; and concerning whom the expectations of his friends were raised; but who could never be persuaded to love study. Rely upon it, no minister will ever be, for any length of time together, really acceptable and popular as a preacher, who is not a constant and diligent student; and who does not "feed his hearers with knowledge and with understanding." Keep up this habit with unabated vigour even to extreme old age, if you shall ever reach it. Strength of mind is promoted and retained by nothing so much as persevering exercise. Many judges, and other secular men, retain their intellectual powers unimpaired to the age of seventy, or even later. But the mass of ministers, after fifty-five, make no more mental efforts; preach over their old sermons, and study little. The consequence is, that, at sixty, they are commonly beginning very perceptibly to decline in intellectual vigour, and sometimes greatly to the injury of the cause of religion.

Make a point, then, of being a "hard student" as long as you live. Keep up the habit of reading much, reflecting much, and writing much, as long as you have strength enough to open a book, or wield a pen. Content not yourself with merely that kind of study which will qualify you to prepare your sermons with success; but let your constant aim be to make rich and solid additions to your stores of professional knowledge. For this purpose constantly keep under perusal some great standard work. And never consider yourself as having gotten through a year well, unless you have carefully read seven or eight such works, in addition to all your other studies. This will render your sermonizing more easy and delightful to yourself, and more profitable to others. It will keep up the activity and tone of your mind. It will avert premature dotage; and better qualify you, in every respect, to do your Master's work.

Do not, however, confine yourself to the perusal of books strictly professional. Endeavour, as far as practicable, to keep pace with the current literature of the day, by reading the most important new books which appear. Be careful, also, to maintain a constant familiarity with your college studies. There is a shameful negligence on the part of many young clergymen as to this matter. If you live, you will probably be, one day, a trustee, or a visitor of some college or academy; and you may often be called upon to examine students on all the branches of knowledge taught in those institutions. And will you not disgrace yourself, if you shall have become so rusty in those studies as to be wholly unable to do it, or to do it in a very bungling and inadequate manner? Besides, you know not to what station

God in his providence may call you. It is the part of a wise man to be prepared for any one. During a considerable part of the eighteenth century, in the days of Dickinson, Burr, Edwards, Davies, Finley, Ewing, Allison, Wilson, Witherspoon, Nisbet, Smith, MacWhorter, and a number of others who might be mentioned, we had a very honourable proportion of ministers in our Church, whose classical and scientific attainments and general literature were so rich and mature, that they were well qualified for the highest literary as well as ecclesiastical stations; and acted as conservators of literature in their respective neighbourhoods. Whether we have as many now, in proportion to our numbers, who are thus qualified, I will not at present decide. But do what in you lies, that the Church may have one such individual in yourself.

Always have some reading, or some other intellectual employment, to fill up the small spaces of time which would otherwise be lost. To the man of real wisdom, every moment is precious. To waste even single minutes, therefore, appears to him unspeakably more foolish than throwing away gold. Yet, in the lives of the most industrious, many minutes will occur, in the course of every day, which must inevitably be wasted, unless some expedient be adopted to furnish means for filling up every vacant moment, however unexpectedly it may occur. For this purpose, I would advise you always to carry a Bible in your pocket, and some other portable book of value, which may be taken up for a few moments, wherever you may happen to be, and laid down again without material disadvantage. And when you go from home, always take with you books enough, and of the proper character, for the profitable employment of your time, while waiting at taverns, or travelling in public conveyances, in which many an hour is lost by the improvident man. If you are only awake to the importance of this subject, and have your attention vigilantly directed to the economical use of time, it is wonderful how much of it may be easily saved from utter waste."

OLD NEW-ENGLAND DIVINITY.

We copy from an exchange paper the following notice. To all such efforts to propagate good, old, Puritan divinity, we heartily bid God-speed.

THE DOCTRINAL TRACT AND BOOK SOCIETY.

This is a society, the corporate and voting members of which all reside in Massachusetts, though its honorary members are more widely scattered. Its object, as stated in its constitution, is, "To procure and circulate such tracts and books as are adapted to explain, prove, vindicate and illustrate, the peculiar and essential doctrines of the Gospel, and to discriminate between genuine and spurious religious affections and experience. All tracts and books published and circulated by this society, shall be in accordance with the doctrines of the Gospel, as professed and defended by our Puritan ancestors in New England, and by the original founders of this society." It is the design of its conductors, to make it for the Congregational Churches what the Presbyterian Board of Publication is to the Presbyterian Churches. It commenced its operations by publishing tracts on the distinguishing doctrines of the Gospel, as held by the Calvinistic Churches, and has proceeded to the publication of books, such as the works of Bellamy, Jonathan Edwards, D.D., John Robinson, and Samuel Hopkins, the Memoirs of Nettleton, Fuller's Gospel Worthy of all Acceptation, Backus on Regeneration, etc. The principle by which the officers are governed in the selection of works for publication, is thus stated in the twenty-third report of the Society, which is before us:

"While we shall publish no books but what we regard as, on the whole, sound, able, and of good tendency, we shall not abridge or mutilate any book, to suit ourselves; or reject a good book, because it may contain some few things not according to our own views."

THE PRESBYTERIAN PSALMODIST

Has been received with much favour through the Church. Three editions of 3000 copies each have been published. In the third edition, the favourite old tune of "Windham," which by some unaccountable mischance had been omitted, though approved by the Committee of the Assembly, has been inserted in place of "Woburn." Price 75 cents, or 18 copies for $10 cash.

NEW BOOKS.

THE BIBLE—THE BOOK OF THE LORD, OR THE DIVINE AUTHORITY OF THE SACRED SCRIPTURES, addressed especially to the Young. 18mo, pp. 48, with an engraving.

This is a small, but most valuable publication, which ought to be found in every Sabbath-school, and every family in the land, as may be seen by the following titles of the chapters:—I. The Bible shown to be useful. II. The instruction of the Bible suited to our wants. III. The Bible has all the proofs which a book coming from God might be expected to have. IV. Testimonies in favour of the Bible.

The following is the conclusion of Chapter III.

We see, then, that the Bible bears the most decisive marks of having God for its author. We see his omniscience in the truths it reveals, and we have his omnipresence and omnipotence most clearly displayed for its sanction, its preservation, and success.

These proofs are certainly sufficient to satisfy us that the Bible is "the book of the Lord." They have been deemed sufficient by the greatest and wisest of men. We might mention very many of the most learned, who have embraced the Bible as a revelation from heaven, such as Milton and Cowper, Wilberforce and Johnson, Hale and Haller, Blackstone, Locke, and Boyle; and to these we may add Sir Isaac Newton, one of the most intelligent men that ever lived. These men were capable of judging of the claims of the Bible. Not that we are to receive it because they did; we do not mention them for this purpose, but to show you that the belief of the inspiration and divine authority of Scripture, has not been confined to the poor and ignorant, as some would insinuate. The book of God has been received and reverenced by men of the greatest and most cultivated minds.

While we would not receive the Bible simply because others have received it, still there is a satisfaction in knowing that it has been received by men so capable of examining and judging of its claims. The fact that it has been so received, is calculated to confirm the evidences by which it is attested, and to establish our minds in its truth.

But let me, in conclusion, remind you, my young friends, that the most convincing of all evidence is the testimony of our own hearts, when we are brought to feel its enlightening and transforming power. Then we shall have "the witness in ourselves," and "shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God," and shall be enabled to say—

> "Should all the forms that men devise,
> Assault my faith with treacherous art,
> I'd call them vanity and lies,
> And bind the gospel to my heart."

What a blessing, then, is the Bible! It is the most precious book in the world! How highly we ought to prize it! how anxious we ought to be to improve it! The Saviour instructs us to "search the Scriptures," and we are encouraged to do this by the conduct of the Bereans, of whom it is recorded, "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things [the things preached to them by Paul] were so." Acts xvii. 11. Let us not be satisfied with reading the Scriptures, let us search them, and try to find out their meaning; but remember, we cannot do this of ourselves; only the Author of the Bible can teach us to understand it. Let us, then, after the example of David, pray to God—"Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." "Let my heart be sound in thy statutes, that I be not ashamed."

Choose, then, "the good part," and, like Mary, sit at the feet of Jesus, that you may know his word, "which is able to make you wise unto salvation."

THE YOUTH'S GLEANER, or ripe fruits of Piety, gathered and garnered for the Board of Publication. 250 pp. 18mo., with two wood engravings. Price 33 and 40 cents.

This is one of the most interesting miscellanies that the Board has published. It consists chiefly of sketches of character, religious and irreligious, from the highest rank in life to the lowest. It cannot fail to give pleasure, and at the same time afford profit, to readers both young and old.

A MANUAL ON THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH, by John Holmes Agnew, with an Introductory Essay, by the Rev. Samuel Miller, D. D. 198 pp. 18mo. Price 27 and 33 cents.

This is a very seasonable publication, in these days of Sabbath desecration. Every reflecting man, whatever be his politics or religious connection, must admit that the temporal as well as the spiritual welfare of our country is intimately connected with a due observance of the Sabbath. It is "the article of a standing or falling" state. The points discussed in this volume, after the admirable Introduction of the late Dr. Miller, are, 1. The institution of the Sabbath. 2. Perpetual obligation of the Sabbath. 3. Change of day. 4. Utility of the Sabbath. 5. The duties of the Sabbath. An Appendix contains large extracts from Sir Andrew Agnew's Report on the Sabbath to the British House of Commons.

A CALL TO THE GOSPEL MINISTRY.—What constitutes it. By the Rev. W. Neill, D. D. 18mo tract, price 1 cent.

This ought to be scattered broad-cast through all our schools and churches. It gives a plain, common-sense, scriptural answer to a very important question, on the proper answer to which not only the well-being, but even the existence of the Church depends. We have room only for a short extract.

"And now, in concluding these remarks, we make our appeal with earnestness and hope to our 'young men in Christ,' in behalf of the sacred ministry. You have been called of God, as you trust, beloved youth, into the kingdom of grace, and are cherishing a hope of glory. You are in covenant with God, and stand connected with a peculiar people, required to be zealous of good works. What are you going to do? What good work do you propose to engage in, as the main business of life? How will you best fulfil your obligations to redeeming love? In what department of public service will you be able, by divine aid, most effectually to glorify God, and promote the interests of your fellow-men? You wish to know, doubtless, what the Lord would have you do; but how are you to know? Not by special revelation, but by fervent prayer for divine guidance, and by a careful comparison of your talents, your tastes, and acquirements, with the duties of the several occupations that present themselves to your choice. You cannot expect to be conducted to your proper station in life by accident, or the force of circumstances. You may blunder into a wrong place, a place for which you have no fitness, where you will find yourself awkwardly situated, and be alike uncomfortable and useless all your days. The matter requires thought and decision, from right motives and in view of probable consequences. Every man is not fitted for every place. There is a diversity of gifts corresponding to the numerous occupations by which the business of the world is carried on. What is your gift? What office in the commonwealth of Israel can you fill with most satisfaction to yourself, and advantage to the cause of your Redeemer? This question you must decide; and in making up your mind, we ask you to think of the Gospel Ministry."

The Rev. S. B. Lewers, of the Presbytery of Chickasaw, departed this life at his residence in Mississippi, on the 28th of August.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Rev. George W. Musgrave, D. D., pastor of the 3d Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, has been appointed the Corresponding Secretary and General Agent of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and will enter upon the duties of the office early in November.

The Presbytery of Wooster have recently appointed a committee to visit the city of Cleveland, and organize an Old-school Presbyterian church there, should circumstances seem to warrant it.

The Rev. Dr. Humphrey has finally declined the appointment to a Professorship in Princeton Seminary.

The Rev. E. T. Baird, late President of Washington College, Tennessee, has succeeded the Rev. Mr. Templeton as editor and proprietor of the St. Louis Presbyterian.

CORRECTION.—The Rev. George Waterman wishes us to state, that by an oversight of the clerk of his Presbytery, his name does not appear, as it should, as a member of the Presbytery of Baltimore, in the printed Minutes of the Assembly.

The Charleston Union Presbytery, which since 1838 has maintained a neutral position, has declared its adhesion to the General Assembly, (Old-school.)

Varieties.

THE JEWS—INSTITUTION AT AMSTERDAM.—A Christian lady at Amsterdam has offered to the Free Church of Scotland a new building in that city, worth about £2000, together with £2080 in money, as a partial endowment, for the purpose of training evangelists and colporteurs to make known the gospel among Jews and others in Holland, and throughout the Continent. The building is said to be well fitted for the work of such an institution, and, in fact, part of it is at present rented by the Jewish Mission, and occupied by the Rev. Mr. Schwartz as a place of worship. The proposal, which was laid before the General Assembly, has been finally concurred in by the Commission. The Rev. Robert Smith, one of the missionaries expelled from Hungary, has been appointed to Amsterdam, in order that he and Mr. Schwartz may immediately open the institution, and commence that course of preparation of gospel labourers which promises ultimately to tell so beneficially on the objects of the Jewish mission.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—The Rev. Duncan Turner, who has for some time been labouring at Constantinople, was ordained by the Presbytery of Glasgow on 9th August. He sailed on 17th September on his return to Constantinople, to be a fellow-labourer with Mr. Thomson, among the Spanish Jews in Hasskioy.

REVIVALS.—The Rev. Dr. Baker has been labouring with great success in the divine Master's cause in Sumpter District, South Carolina—the gospel, through his instrumentality, having been made the power of God unto salvation to many souls.

A correspondent from Kingstree, South Carolina, writes as follows: "We have just closed a meeting of nine days' continuance, in Williamsburg church, and the result exhibits the most powerful work of grace within the recollection of the oldest inhabitants. For this blessing we are indebted, under God, to the Rev. Dr. Baker of Texas, who preached every sermon on the occasion, except one. The number of converts thus far reported is sixty-four; and on many other minds the Sun of Righteousness seems to be just rising. On last Sabbath about fifty young converts sat down together for the first time at the table of the Lord, while a vast congregation of older disciples looked on with gratitude and wonder. Among these, were some of the most intellectual men in our community, heads of families, and some precious youth, who, it is hoped, will devote themselves to the work of the ministry. A blow has been struck at the empire of Satan here, which, we trust, will be felt for years to come. 'The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.'"

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF THE SLAVES.—Rev. Mr. Fiske, of Bath, was a delegate from the General Conference of Maine to the last General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church held in Charleston, South Carolina. He states that he saw the negroes, while attending worship, provided with hymn books, and looking over the hymn, as it was read and sung, just as their white masters did. He could easily count 113 books in one meeting from the seat where he sat. Many a congregation in New England does not present so many hymn books in the hands of the worshippers in proportion to their numbers, as does Dr. Smyth's negro congregation in Charleston.

LIFE.

Life which never, as it is contemplated, seems in many of its phases less than a mystery, is exhibited, in the light of divine revelation in its most intelligible as well as prominent and important aspects. It is a gift of God—a boon of Heaven—a real blessing to its possessor, if rightly used and enjoyed—and so it is a talent conferred for the very purpose of a right and beneficial use. God gave life; and when he gave it, he said, "live and be useful," and thus, "live and be happy." And inasmuch as life is continuance of being, a continued progress in well-doing, in usefulness, in felicity, is involved and obligatory. This is man's prerogative and interest, and should be his aim, though he "continueth not in one stay;" for in the final disrobing of his spirit and crumbling down of its outer "earthly" covering, his immortality is confessed; his death is a reproduction of life.

I need not say how truly the mysterious, evanescent, and frail nature of life is shadowed forth in the scriptural description of it, as our "breath"—"the God in whose hand thy breath is." At the first, God breathed into man the breath of life, and he became a living soul. More than a mere metaphorical embellishment is this term "breath," employed as it is to designate that most cherished but fleeting thing which we call "life." It is more a sober and precise, than a fanciful and figurative description, a description reduced to the scale of a reality, when life is spoken of as the "breath in our nostrils." Gently did God at the first breathe into our frame the breath of life—with tenderest care he sustains it, holding our soul in life; and at the end of our mortal career, life's termination is like its beginning only reversed—a gentle exhalation. Thus has been celebrated, in lasting, cherished phrase, the peaceful, happy exit of the servant of God out of this world, in a stanza with which is associated almost an inspired authority—

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are;
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

Such an end of life is an ample compensation for its brevity and weakness. "Let me die the death of the righteous; and let my last end be like his."

But frail and uncertain as life is, Christian, its every moment is full of importance and most precious. How many may be life's useful enterprises and labours! Life is not given you to spend it in idleness; to be a mere looker-on at the world's changing scenes; to watch the progress which others are making, and the great and rapid strides of improvement, which, observed at different points of time, mark the onward career of human society and its welfare. Continuance of life is not to be desired by you, that, as if waking at intervals of dreamy indifference and forgetfulness, you may occasionally look out upon the busy moving world, and see what changes in science and art, what in cultivation and refinement of manners, what in the higher interests of morals and of real happiness, may in that interim have occurred. No, your highest and best interests will be consulted by consecrating your life to its great and glorious end, in acknowledging the being, perfections, and authority of Jehovah, and devoting yourself supremely to his service and glory—so your blessed and enduring reward of earth's experiences will be, the sure and blissful possession of the "life everlasting." THE TRUTH TO BE CHERISHED, DEFENDED, AND PROPAGATED.

Having formed our creed in view of sufficient testimony, we should never abandon it without the most positive evidence that we were mistaken. "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love, which is in Christ Jesus." "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned, and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them." "Be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." "And this I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith." There are some who are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth," and this instability or scepticism arises frequently from the mistaken idea, that a man is bound to doubt of the truth of any thing, the proof of which is not present to his mind. But this is certainly unreasonable. Suppose a man had witnessed the process, by which a physical result had been obtained, would he afterwards be obliged to doubt the effect which he saw produced, merely because he had forgotten or was unable to tell the process by which it was effected? Certainly not. Why then, should any one doubt the truth of religious doctrines, who has once been satisfied with his examination of the evidence by which they are supported, merely because he has forgotten that evidence, or is incapable to exhibit it to others? He should not. Let us, therefore, stand fast in the truth, that "when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

Christians are bound to defend the truth against those who seek to pervert it. This duty is frequently enjoined in Scripture, and is obviously important. But while Christians recognize this obligation in reference to fundamental truth, they do not generally feel it to be their duty to defend those truths which are deemed not essential to salvation. It is certainly reasonable and proper to distinguish between truths of vital interest and those which are not so; and our zeal should be regulated in a great measure by this distinction. But it should never be forgotten, that all truth is important—that while some truths are not essentially necessary to salvation, there is no truth whatever, that is not of some importance. We are therefore under the most solemn obligations to defend every part of our faith and practice. And particularly would this be our duty, should any attempt be made to introduce error into our own communion. There are many things which we may suffer to pass unnoticed among other denominations, which we should never tolerate among ourselves. It may not be a man's duty in some cases to interfere with the principles and government of his neighbour's household, when it would be his imperative duty to prevent the introduction of those principles into the bosom of his own family. It appears that in the days of the apostle, there were some who troubled the churches of Galatia, and desired to pervert the gospel of Christ. His direction to them was, "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."

It may be proper here to remark upon the weapons which should be employed in the defence of the gospel, and the manner in which they should be used. With regard to the first, it may be said in general, that all our weapons should be spiritual. For as "we wrestle not against flesh and blood," so "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal." In defending the truth, God authorizes the use of nothing but his own word and reason; and these (especially the former) "are mighty through God," and will ultimately triumph over all opposition. We desire therefore no other means of defence than these. And though ungodly men have accused the church of desiring to enlist the civil arm in her behalf, she would be the first to deprecate such interference. No, we abhor the very shadow of persecution; and again repeat, that we desire nothing more than the use of those spiritual means, by which, we doubt not, the world universal will be converted to the truth as it is in Jesus. As to the manner in which these weapons should be used, it may be remarked briefly, that we should use them with prudence, meekness, and benevolence. We are no advocates for bigotry and intolerance—nor for that zeal which is unenlightened by the Spirit of God and untempered with divine grace. In all our conduct, we again repeat it, we should act prudently, meekly, and with Christian charity.

But it is not sufficient that we cherish and defend the truth; we are obliged to propagate it as widely as our ability and opportunity permit. If the truth be important to us, it must be so to all others; and in proportion as we appreciate its value, should we be desirous of extending it to the rest of our fellow creatures. The methods by which Christians may disseminate the truth, are numerous, and are too well known to require mentioning here. While we should embrace every opportunity to disseminate the truth through the various public channels which are now open, we should not forget the inculcation of correct principles in our families and on those with whom we have social intercourse. In this way we may propagate truth with great advantage. M.

ANIMATING LETTERS.

The small space allotted us in the Record prevents the publication of many letters full of piety, and zeal, and energy. The two following, one from North Carolina and the other from Indiana, will move the spirit of the reader. The apostle speaks of a spirit of power. There is nothing like it in the ministry. But, of course, it must have with it, as he says, a spirit of "love" and of "a sound mind."

"N. C.

"My efforts have been unweariedly directed to the glorious work of building up this yet 'feeble and infant' church, by every means in my power. I am not discouraged, though no great results have, within the period specified above, rewarded my labours. The reward is certain, in God's time. There is to be a Church in this county, standing as a city on a hill, whose order and doctrines shall cast a light upon the regions round about. The indications of progress are abundant, and there is no room for discouragement from this source. The work is practicable under God; it is going forward far more rapidly than could have been anticipated at its commencement four years ago: and though it is yet with us a 'day of small things,' I am not the man to despise it. I am rather disposed to look back with gratitude to God, and to bless his holy name for the undeserved mercies we have already received. God has a people here whom he regards with infinite love and mercy. Into this central region of the old North State, a few Presbyterian Christians had wandered. Six in number, they formed the nucleus of a church, which was duly organized by order of Presbytery four years ago. Since that time, their original number has just been quadrupled. A regular and highly respectable congregation has been gathered, and is gradually increasing. The doctrines of our Confession are preached, and discipline maintained according to our Form of Government. The church is growing in influence and moral power; and the day is not far distant when that power shall be felt and acknowledged throughout the county.

"There are difficulties; nor do we under-estimate them. Many prejudices exist against us because of the misrepresentations of enemies. But we find that these are harmless: they vanish upon a very slight acquaintance, and are rapidly becoming extinct. The usual obstacles to the progress of the gospel are all found in this field, as elsewhere; but have been proved to be not insurmountable. The influence of an ignorant fanaticism, which has long possessed the land, is very hostile; but this false fire, which has swept and desolated this region periodically for so many years, is at length dying in its own ashes, and the people are turning to look for better things. Many are directing their steps to the Presbyterian Church, and the field is fully open to our labours. Presbytery met here last winter, and is well acquainted with the character of the field, and regards it, with the adjoining county of R——, as the most promising and important of all her missionary fields. The materiel is here at hand; population is abundant; a church edifice has been erected; the work is in progress; and if not abandoned now, it will be carried on gloriously, under the favouring eye of the great Head of the Church.

"Our usual services on Sabbath and during the week have been continued as formerly; except that I have added another service on Sabbath, going out three miles into the country in the afternoon, to preach to a considerable population who attend church nowhere. I thus preach three times on Sunday. The Sabbath-school, monthly concert, and weekly prayer-meeting are well sustained. Of the results of our monthly concert, I would say a word. In the exercises on these occasions, our congregation has ever shown much interest. But this interest has gradually increased the past year. None of our church services are now better attended, or regarded with more interest than this. It has been my constant aim to build up a church filled with the spirit of missionary enterprise; a church whose members shall consider themselves stewards of the manifold grace of God; burdened with the responsibility of giving the bread of life to all them that lack; and willing to deny themselves, that they may have wherewith to obey and cherish the Christian instinct of benevolence. I look with delight upon the evidence that such a spirit is increasing among my people. O! what better evidence of the presence and blessing of God with any church, of the reality and power of religion in any heart, than is to be found in this spirit of loyal devotion to the Saviour; in this earnest and constraining desire to see the kingdoms of this world submit to him and call him Lord! At our last missionary meeting, I laid before the congregation the report of the Board of Foreign Missions, with a general sketch of the operations of our Church throughout the world. Much interest was exhibited, and some expressed a wish to read the report for themselves. Next Sunday night I hope to present the subject of Domestic Missions, in connection with the very interesting and valuable report of the Board; and I shall be at some pains to explain fully the principles laid down in the Report, as those upon which the Board conducts its work. I hope that it will do good, and, perhaps, incite the church to even greater efforts than they are now making to support their own minister."

Indiana.

"In my last report, I stated that we were progressing with our church building at U— M—, that our congregations were good in both places, that at our communion in the 1st church of L—, we received five members on examination—and at our last sacramental occasion, we received eight members on certificate, and one on examination—nine in all; the total fourteen members received in the 1st Presbyterian Church of L—, since my connection with it on the second Sabbath of October, 1852. Our church at L—, has, since the purchase, undergone a thorough repair, and compares respectably with the other churches of the place. Our congregations as good as most of the churches, and still increasing. We have prayer-meeting every Thursday evening, not as well attended as could be wished. We have a good Sabbath-school, and have added some $10 worth of books of our own Board of Publication—this school I superintend myself. Things seem in a fair way in this field. I have just finished my quarterly visitation among the families, and find some interest on the subject of religion. May the good Shepherd abundantly pour out his Spirit upon us. At U— M— things are brightening. We have finished our church, and dedicated it and paid the debt, and $50 over for fencing the lot, one half acre donated to the church. This is a very neat and well-finished church, 45 feet by 30 feet, with a belfry. Since the dedication of the church, our congregations have been unusually large, and many have attended the word, that hitherto have not darkened the door of a church. Our house has cost us about $1,000, and cost me a great deal of money, ($200,) labour, (I hauled most of the lumber ten miles myself,) anxiety, and time. The purchase and erection of these two churches have cost me $350 in all. But as God, in his providence, has blessed my basket and store, I give him but his own. I have nothing before me now but the ministrations of the Gospel. And, if he will only bless my feeble labours in the ministry of his Son to these people, I shall feel even grateful, and feel that I have achieved the height of my ambition—that which I have only coveted, the infinite pleasure of being useful in the Master's cause, in advancing his glorious kingdom. We have a good Sabbath-school here, under the superintendence of a deacon of Bethel Church." C.

INFANT MEMBERSHIP.

Thirteen Infants Baptized.

The following Postcript to a recent Report from a missionary, may serve to call up in remembrance, a subject—a doctrine—and a duty, too much neglected in our church. Our church in its membership, holds to the original constitution, which the Lord gave his visible church, when he established it in the family and household of Abraham: "Believing parents with their infant children."—Gen. xvii. 1–27. Our church holds also to the covenant lying at the foundation of that membership. "I will be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee." Those who deny infant membership, are not of the original constitution of God's visible church. We are. By thus separating what God has joined together, they also break the covenant. The promised, all-comprehensive, all-glorious blessing, is also interfered with. To their own Master they stand or fall. We shall, by Divine aid, preserve and practise our faith in this matter. This covenant—this membership—meet us in the foundation, the superstructure, the entire developement of our church. Neglect, or corruption here, is followed by ultimate, if not immediate deterioration. We must be vigilant, firm, active and kind. Attend to the lambs of the flock. "Feed my lambs." May all our ministers, as well as missionaries, look to the duty. Do any need an exhortation to its performance?

At our last communion, thirteen little children, between the ages of ten and thirteen, were baptized. Their mothers only were pious, but it was gratifying to see their fathers also, standing with them before the altar. It was a novel sight in this community, and the whole scene seemed to make a deep, and I hope, lasting impression. Infant baptism has been very much neglected in this region, and especially in this place, which was first settled by Baptists.

Yours truly, C.

THE SPIRITS!

Truly our brethren in the West have their trials: special trials! Here with this excellent brother in Indiana, is Satan, not confining his legion to one poor soul, nor choking a herd of swine with them in the sea, but turning them loose in a community, and setting them at work to enter in, and possess men and women:—saints by profession, and sinners by practice; and the whole course of nature is out of joint. What is a man to do? Stand firm! "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." The brother does stand firm. He resists; and Satan will flee.

I have nothing encouraging to communicate. Instead of the precious communications of God's Spirit in our midst, we are called to mourn over desolations and delusions by another "Spirit, or Spirits." This community have almost gone wild through communications from "Spirits," as they are called, not only in this village, but in various sections in this region, leading many into absurdities and follies, and causing some to renounce their faith. I need not particularize, but communications have been had respecting personal character, medical advice to the afflicted, concerning stolen property, the Bible and its teachings, denying future punishment, or only for a term at most, &c. &c. From all the witcheries, it would seem that Satan was "master of the ceremonies;" at all events the influence has been for evil decidedly. Universalism has been much strengthened, as the communications go to establish the doctrine of no future punishment, or, at most, only limited and purifying. As a result, some have been led to embrace "another gospel" and renounced their faith. Two or three individuals who have been active ministers in the Methodist Church, have gone to preaching the "new revelations," universalism or restorationism. Defections from that church have been sad, and in this place have shattered the church very much. Our members, it is true, have not been led to embrace the new doctrines, but, no doubt, the influence upon us is bad, very bad. Infidelity triumphs for a time, the world laughs, and some of whom we expected better things have gone far astray. Many are the trials and discouragements against which we have to contend, but our prayer is, that God will bring order out of confusion, and light out of darkness. How we shall be able to bear up under the tide of evil and adverse influences setting against us, time will determine. Perhaps at another time, I will give you more fully the history and results of this new form of delusion, folly, and wickedness. K.

A REPORT FROM A MINISTER SEVENTY-ONE YEARS OLD!

May we who are young in the ministry be hereby admonished and instructed, and see the fulfilment of God's word: "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing; to show that the Lord is upright: he is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him."—Ps. xcii. 12–15.

———, Ohio.

I have nothing special to report. Goodness and mercy have been our happy lot, since the date of my last; and although we have not experienced a special out-pouring of the Spirit, yet we have reason to be thankful that the Spirit has not been wholly withdrawn from us. We are gradually increasing the number of communicants, and there is good attendance upon the worship of the Sabbath; our house is well filled, and there is good attention to the word. We have a good Sabbath-school, and a male and female Bible-class. The members of the church appear to be walking in the unity of the Spirit and bond of peace. Since the date of my last report, two have been added to the church, which makes the number of communicants at this time fifty-two. The growth of the church though slow, appears to be healthful, and we have reason to believe is growing in grace, and becoming a firm and well-established congregation.

During the quarter ending the 1st of July, I have preached generally twice every Sabbath, and visited as usual a considerable portion of the families belonging to the congregation.

My health is much improved since my last report, and although seventy-one years old, wanting only two months, yet my strength holds out, and I am able to perform my pastoral labours, as fully as at any former time. How long I shall be able to do so, I know not; but while health and strength permit, shall labour in my poor way in the vineyard of the Lord. Very respectfully, yours, A. J.

LET US KEEP WELL BRUSHED UP IN HEBREW AND GREEK.

We do not know what moment we shall be called on to exhibit our knowledge, for the salvation of the truth. Read the following paragraph from a missionary brother in Illinois:

A public debate, between the Methodists and "Christians," has been seven days in progress, on the doctrines of the Trinity and a Vicarious Atonement. The advocates of the doctrines are ———, the Presiding Elder, and two circuit preachers; opposed, ———, from C., sent for by express, and to aid him, two preachers of the "Christian" order. A reporter, engaged by the parties, is active taking notes for publication. Orthodox views have been strongly sustained by the affirmants. The opponents have been, in argument, weak, evasive, subtle, and deceitful. God's name they have profaned, and his word they have dishonoured. They boasted somewhat of their knowledge of Hebrew and Greek. Unexpectedly, a question arose upon a Greek sentence quoted by Dr. Adam Clarke, in his Commentary. After a dispute, it was agreed to refer it to a Presbyterian minister in the house. It was referred to your missionary. To decide was easy. The decision was the triumph of a little knowledge over less. For the moment, error was seen to blush. Its friends were disconcerted. The advocates of truth felt that by this, an event in itself trivial, an important advantage had been gained to their side. The Christians in the assembly could not judge then, that their guides "would teach the Methodist and Presbyterian ministers something," as was vauntingly said by one of their members, who was piously trained by Dutch Reformed parents. In the judgment of others in the assembly, the accurate and extensive attainments of the boasters were brought into suspicion. Mr. ——— asserted to Methodists that he could read Hebrew, chapter for chapter, with any person they might bring forward. Your missionary was asked by a Methodist preacher, with what facility he could read the Hebrew. The answer was, that he would do the best he could in reading Hebrew with ———, before leaving the house, or at whatever time and place should be chosen. Though your missionary has been in the house since, no inquest has been held to ascertain whose knowledge of Hebrew is the most profound, his who gave the challenge, or his who might accept it.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF THE NEGROES.

It is with great pleasure that we commend to the readers of the Record the following letter, (which would have been inserted sooner, but for want of room,) on the religious instruction of the negroes in Adams county, Mississippi, from an esteemed brother in the ministry, to whom we cordially extend the right hand of fellowship in this work. His own efforts have been unremitting and successful; and long may the Lord spare his life, and enable him to fill it up with not only the same, but increasing measures of usefulness, even unto the end; and have many immortal souls saved through his instrumentality as crowns of his rejoicing in that day. Surely, both ministers and masters in that county set before us an example worthy of all praise and imitation throughout our whole southern and south-western bounds. We shall be happy to receive communications on this subject, giving details of labour, at any and at all times.

Shut up in confinement day after day in our office, standing at our desk, and attending to the mere details of business, the happy years of our missionary life are continually passing in review; and memory spreads out its scenes in such vividness as to efface the lines we are endeavouring to trace, that lie before us. The heart turns in undiminished interest back to those years. Will they ever come again?

Adams County, Mississippi, September, 1852.

To the Cor. Sec. of the Board of Domestic Missions:

Rev. and Dear Sir—In accordance with your request, I send you a brief account of the "Progress of Missions among the servants of this county." We trust that we can safely say "progress"—for the good work is evidently on the increase—and we hope the day is not far distant when Adams county, Mississippi, will not be at all behind your own Liberty county, Georgia, in caring for the best interests of her coloured population.

I will simply mention a few facts. Eight years ago, there was but one minister of any denomination who devoted himself exclusively to the instruction of the negroes in this county. This minister, (a Presbyterian of a high order of talent, and great experience,) preached and taught on a few plantations near the city of Natchez. He still continues to occupy the same field, and with great success. The happy effects of his labours will yet be more plainly manifest on earth, but the full fruits will never be seen till earthly things are viewed in the light of eternity. That light will give all things their true colour and value.

At the present time, there are four Presbyterian ministers, one Methodist, and one Baptist, engaged almost exclusively in this work; and besides these, the pastors of the several white congregations devote a part of their time to the servants of their charge. I believe that all ministers, of all denominations, now feel and acknowledge that the servants in their parishes are a part of their charge, over whom they must watch, and for whose religious instruction they must, at last, give an account unto God.

And in addition to the foregoing, there are at least a few instances, where the owners themselves weekly call their servants together, in true patriarchal style, and teach them those things which make for their everlasting peace. It is to be hoped that this may become universally the case.

Another fact should not be overlooked, in contemplating the progress of the work, viz: the missionaries to the servants are supported by the owners of the servants. I believe none of them receive aid from your Board.

Many planters, who a few years ago were unwilling to have the gospel preached to their servants gratuitously, are now willing to contribute liberally for the same. Masters, as a general thing, seem to feel more than ever their solemn responsibility to God, as regards their servants; and few, if any, can be found to deny their obligation to supply the spiritual as well as temporal wants of those committed to their care. Many endeavour to keep in view their final meeting with their servants at the judgment bar of God.

In proof of the foregoing, it is now difficult to obtain enough suitable labourers to satisfy the demand. Your Board will always be safe in sending the right kind of men to this part of the South. Two are now needed in this and an adjoining county. Please bear this in mind.

Our effort is to be able to say, (not from pride, but out of love to the Saviour and the souls of men,) that there is not an individual, old or young, bond or free, within our bounds, to whom the gospel is not preached.

May the great Head of the Church, who "does his will among the armies of heaven and the inhabitants of the earth," hasten the time when this shall be the happy case, not only in our county, but in all our country, and throughout the whole world.

Much has been done for which we should rejoice and give thanks to God; yet much still remains to be done, for which, in true faith and humility, we must continue to labour and pray. Yours very truly,

B. H. W.

ST. ANTHONY, MINNESOTA.

In my last, I gave you some account of St. Paul. St. Anthony being the next in importance, shall be the subject of this article. If there were anything in names, you might be led to suppose that the Minnesotians are a very saintly people; but it is not the reverential feeling of our present population, that gives these names to our towns and rivers; we are rather disposed to exchange some of them for names more euphonic, as appears by the late action, of dropping the name St. Peter, and restoring to that beautiful river, its proper name, Minnesota. St. Anthony is situated on the east bank of the Mississippi, opposite the falls from which it takes its name; it is eight miles from St. Paul by land, and about sixteen by water. It is a beautiful town site. A handsome elevated prairie, with a gentle inclination towards the river bank, and of sufficient width for several parallel streets, extends indefinitely up and down the river. In the rear of this another bench of table land swells up some thirty feet high, forming a beautiful and elevated plateau. It possesses every advantage for the display of taste, in laying out the town and constructing houses. The buildings at present are frame, mostly painted white, and although not large, exhibit an air of neatness and comfort. It would seem almost impossible that any man could make a display of deformity, in the face of so much beauty as God has impressed upon the whole scenery around the Falls of St. Anthony; and yet how strangely some will outrage nature's fair proportions.

The Falls of St. Anthony present a broken, irregular outline. In consequence of the continual action of the water upon the soft sandstone rock, that underlies a strata of limestone, over which the water passes, the falls are annually receding, and the superincumbent strata of limestone is deposited in large blocks in the bed of the river below, as if to check the mad rush of the obedient waters. The perpendicular fall at present, is, perhaps, not more than twenty feet high. Immediately above the falls, the water gains immense velocity by passing down an inclined plane of smooth limestone rock; after being precipitated over the main cataract, the waters dash on in wild confusion, down through the broken masses of rock, presenting a continual surface of spray. An island thirty rods long, divides the river at the falls, elevated above the fear of inundation. Below the falls, a small island, or rather huge rock covered with soil and vegetation, overlooks the whole scene, and if made accessible to visitors, as it doubtless will be, would afford the finest view of the falls and town of St. Anthony. For miles below the falls, the river passes through a deep gorge, the bluffs rising high on either side, and spreading in beautiful prairies and openings, resembling extensive farms, and old orchards. All these beauties combine to make St. Anthony a delightful place of residence, or resort for those who seek rest, away from the busy marts of life; and the available water-power at the falls, on both sides of the river, must make it a great manufacturing town. Here, too, is located the University of Minnesota; a good building for the primary department has been erected, and the school is in successful operation; and the people down the Mississippi, must, in a few years, see the advantage of sending their sons and daughters to be educated in an atmosphere so healthy, and so conducive to physical and mental activity.

St. Anthony is greatly deficient in churches. There is not one respectable church edifice in the town. There are several church organizations, but all small, no one denomination seems as yet to have gained any considerable hold upon the people. There was a prosperous New School Presbyterian organization there some time ago, but it was pulled to pieces, by receiving as a supply a man who felt himself conscientiously bound to organize a Congregational church. This difficulty has scattered the Presbyterian church, and, as yet, not resulted in much prosperity to the Congregational. We hope soon to see things take a more permanent shape in the religious interests of that interesting community, and the people of God taking sweet counsel and walking to the house of God in harmony. HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

NEW CANDIDATES.

The following is the number of candidates placed on the roll, for the quarter ended on the 1st of November, together with the names of their Presbyteries:

Londonderry,	1
Steuben,	1
Bedford,	1
New Brunswick,	3
Raritan,	1
West Jersey,	1
Philadelphia, 2d,	1
Huntington,	1
Erie,	1
Butler,	1
Cincinnati,	1
Richland,	1
New Albany,	2
Crawfordsville,	2
Indianapolis,	1
Greenbrier,	1
Holston,	1
	23

The number of new candidates is about the same as last year, thus far. There is no encouraging increase. For the first six months last year, the number was 37; this year, 39.

May the people of God take heed to this subject in due time!

MINISTERS AND THE MINISTRY.

One of the causes, working largely and disastrously against an increase in the ministerial ranks, is the WANT OF STEADY AND PERSEVERING ATTENTION TO THIS WHOLE SUBJECT ON THE PART OF THE MINISTRY. The Board by no means insinuate any accusation of wilful neglect of duty against the ministry of our Church. The clergy of no denomination take a deeper interest in the general results pertaining to this discussion. But it will scarcely be denied that more attention might be profitably given in certain directions, of which a few hints may be here given.

1. Ministers have great responsibilities in regard to the increase of their profession through the influences of the pulpit. The sanctuary of God is a great place of human instruction. Nowhere else can truth be so powerfully brought in contact with the reason and conscience of men. The eternal sanctions of the living word seem to derive an increased authority from the day, and the place, and the mode, of their utterance. From the pulpit emanate influences which endure for the welfare or the woe of Zion. All that concerns Christian duty should receive due attention in its season; and the rightly dividing of the word of truth surely implies spiritual instruction on the topics connected with the perpetuation of the Christian ministry.

2. Training the young men of the Church to activity in well-doing has an important use in leading some, or many, of them into the ministerial office. If the smallest providential incidents sometimes give a direction to Christian character, who can estimate the importance of habits of enterprise and labours of love into which the young disciple is carefully trained? The superintendent or teacher of a Sunday school, the distributor of tracts, the visitor of the poor, the collector for the schemes of the Church, may often receive impressions of the dignity and excellence of Christian service, which gradually unfold to his mind the consideration of the work of the ministry. And it may be added that such training, under pastoral supervision, not only tends to increase the number of ministers, but to give them better qualifications for the office than they could otherwise ever possess.

3. Another point, requiring steady attention on the part of ministers, is the selection and oversight of young men of promise, whose general character affords good reason to believe that they may, under divine grace, become useful ministers. Great caution is, indeed, necessary on this subject, but such caution as the servant of Christ may use for the edification of the Church. Many a young man has been led forward in his preparatory studies by the intervention of others, and especially of his pastor; and there cannot be a doubt that a wide field of usefulness is here opened for every minister to whom God may give a willing mind.

4. Another mode in which a pastor may effectually promote the increase of the ministry, is by causing the claims of all the Boards of the Church, and, of course, of the Board of Education, to be presented, annually, to his congregation. The people take an interest in operations they assist in promoting. Their minds become expanded, and their hearts warmed by the things of the kingdom of Christ. And one great advantage in allowing these general claims to be unfolded, consists in the evangelical discussions, the statistical details, and the knowledge communicated to the people on points of duty not commonly dwelt upon on ordinary occasions. A congregation, ignorant of evangelical operations, will send out few ministers.

In short, the regular attention of our ministers to this great subject, in all the variety of its topics and incidents, is of indispensable necessity as the means of contributing to an increase of candidates.

DR. BAKER'S LETTER.

LET US LABOUR FOR MORE MINISTERS.

The Rev. Dr. Baker, of Texas, has lately been on a missionary tour in the Southern States; and God has blessed his labours in a remarkable manner. The following extract from a letter to Dr. Jones, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Domestic Missions, shows that the subject of the increase of the ministry pressed heavily upon the mind and heart of this servant of God.

"Another matter which I think will interest you, is this:—That of the hundred and fifty persons who have, within a few weeks past, found peace in believing, under my preaching, nearly one hundred are men! and the great mass of them young men! Some young lawyers, some young physicians, some who have just finished their collegiate education, and some who expect to graduate in South Carolina College the coming winter, or the coming year. Is not this a good omen for our church? You recollect, Brother Jones, that, in my sermon before the General Assembly last spring, I stated, in emphatic terms, that 'we must have more ministers,' and that my heart was towards the young men of our land, as Deborah said that her heart was towards the Governors of Israel, who offered themselves willingly. Well, at the commencement of every protracted meeting which I held, I mentioned, distinctly, that the 'harvest was great and the labourers few,' and 'we must have more preachers.' And as we did not wish any one to enter the ministry, unconverted, we must set our hearts upon the conversion of young men. And, as for myself, I was determined to make a dead-set upon this class in particular; and lo! already, God has granted the desire of our hearts. A little army of young men are already gathered around the standard of the cross! Some of whom, I do hope, will soon be numbered amongst the heralds of salvation. Indeed, some, I am told, have already had their attention strongly turned that way! I trust we shall have at least one tithe.

Nearly all who have professed conversion, have, by their respective pastors, been added to the communion of our Church. Last Sabbath I beheld a beautiful sight—twenty young converts seated together, at the table of the Lord; and the Sabbath before, a sight still more beautiful—one whole table filled up with young disciples, fifty in number! and, amongst them, so many prominent men, and lovely and promising young men! O! it was a scene of thrilling interest, well worth a journey of a hundred miles. Nay, more; well worth an angel's visit from the skies. To God be all, ALL, the praise! Do, brother Jones, get as many of our venerated and beloved pastors, evangelists, and missionaries, to say 'we must have more ministers.' Remember what I told you in Charleston, and what, of course, you knew before, that of seventy churches in the Synod of Alabama, thirty are not supplied; and that, in Texas, we have not more than about one minister of our communion to five counties. Our standard bearers are falling, and the number of candidates are decreasing. Only think of that! Something must be done. Do sound the tocsin of alarm, and let all who love our Zion, come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. In other words, adopt some method of sending this saying, 'we must have more ministers,' through the churches, like thunder echoing among the mountains. I think that pastors and missionaries should take more interest in this matter. Pious and promising youth should be sought out and encouraged to enter the ministry.

'Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear,
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its fragrance on the desert air.'

Don't misunderstand me. I am not for urging any young man, however talented, to enter upon the sacred office; but there is a certain kind of encouragement that might very properly be given, and ought to be given, to youths who bid fair to be useful in the ministry. And here, I would simply make this remark:—If I had not met with some encouragement, (so far as I can see,) I would never have entered upon the sacred office. Brother Jones, I would like you to see some of these young men who have lately professed faith in Christ. They are truly a noble set. If I mistake not, some of them are destined to make a figure in our church; who can tell whether we may not have some amongst them. But this letter is already much longer than I intended to make it; so, with Christian salutations, I bid you adieu.

Yours, in a precious Saviour, Daniel Baker."

HOW TO MAKE A GOOD STUDENT.

Many years since, when the late Lieutenant-governor Phillips, of Andover, Massachusetts, was a student of Harvard College, owing to some boyish freak, he left the university, and went home. His father was a very grave man, of sound mind, and few words. He inquired into the business, but deferred expressing any opinion until the next day. At breakfast he said, speaking to his wife, "My dear, have you any cloth in the house suitable to make Sam a frock and trousers?" She replied, "Yes." "Well," said the old gentleman, "follow me, my son." Samuel kept pace with his father, and as he leisurely walked near the common, and at length ventured to ask, "What are you going to do with me, father?" "I am going to bind you an apprentice to that blacksmith," replied Mr. Phillips. "Take your choice, return to college, or you must work." "I had rather return," said the son. He did return, confessed his fault, was a good scholar, and became an excellent and useful citizen. If all parents were like Mr. Phillips, the students at our colleges would prove better students, or the nation would have a plentiful supply of blacksmiths.

THE AGED PASTOR.

He stands in the desk, that grave old man,
With an eye still bright, though his cheek is wan,
And his long white locks are backward roll'd,
From a noble brow of classic mould,
And his form, though bent by the weight of years,
Somewhat of its primal beauty wears.

He opens the page of the sacred word—
Not a whisper, nor low nor loud, is heard;
Even Folly assumes a serious look,
As he readeth the words of the holy Book:
And the thoughtless and gay grow rev'rent there,
As he opens his lips in fervent prayer.

He stands as the grave old prophet stood,
Proclaiming the truth of the living God—
Pouring reproof on the ears of men,
Whose hearts are at ease in their folly and sin,
With a challenge of guilt, still unforgiven,
To the soul unfitted, unmeet for heaven.

O, who can but honour that good old man,
As he neareth his threescore years and ten—
Who hath made it the work of his life to bless
Our world in its woe and wretchedness;
Still guiding the feet which were wont to stray,
In the paths of sin, to the narrow way.

With a kindly heart, through the lapsing years,
He hath shared our joys, he hath wiped our tears,
He hath bound the wreath on the brow of the bride,
He hath stood by the couch where loved ones died;
Pointing the soul to a glorious heaven,
As the ties which bound it to earth were riven.

Methinks ye'll weep another day,
When the good old man shall have passed away,
When the last of his ebbing sands are run,
When his labours are o'er and his work is done;
Who'll care for the flock and keep the fold,
When his pulse is still'd and his heart is cold?

Ye'll miss him then: every look and tone,
So familiar now, when for ever gone,
Will thrill the heart with an inward pain,
And ye long and listen for them in vain;
When a stranger form and a stranger face
Shall stand in your honoured pastor's place.

CHALMERS' COUNSEL TO HIS BROTHER.

In a letter to his brother Patrick, Dr. Chalmers gives the following counsel, which it would be well if all would diligently heed:

"I look upon Baxter and Doddridge as two most impressive writers, and from whom you are most likely to carry away the impression, that a preparation for eternity should be the main business and anxiety of time. But after all, the Bible should be the daily exercise of those who have decidedly embarked in this great business; and if read with the earnest sense and feeling of its being God's message; if perused with the same awe, and veneration, and confidence, as if the words were actually coming out of His mouth; if, while you read, you read with the desire and the prayer that it may be with understanding and profit, you are in a far more direct road to "becoming wise unto salvation" than any other that can possibly be recommended to you. There is no subject on which people are readier to form rash opinions than religion. The Bible is the best corrective to these. A man should sit down to it, with the determination of taking his lesson just as he finds it; of founding his creed upon the sole principle of 'Thus saith the Lord,' and deriving his every idea and his every impression of religious truth from the authentic record of God's will."

PIETY AND MENTAL GROWTH.—An hour of solitude passed in sincere and earnest prayer, or the conflict with and conquest over a single passion or "subtle bosom sin," will teach us more of thought, will more effectually awaken the faculty, and form the habit of reflection, than a year's study in the school without them.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

INFANT MEMBERSHIP A PLEA FOR CHURCH EDUCATION.

A strong plea for education under the care of the Church is the fact that HER CHILDREN ARE MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH. They sustain a covenant relation to God, and are within the enclosures of his visible kingdom, and thus entitled to the oversight of its appointed officers.

"The visible Church," says the Confession of Faith, "consists of all those throughout the world that profess the true religion, together with their children, and is the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, the house and family of God," &c.* If children belong to the house and family of God, and are members of the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, then the constituted authorities of the house and kingdom are under obligations to see that such members are trained up "in the way they should go."

The doctrine that the children of believers are members of the visible Church is uniformly maintained in the Confession of Faith. Thus, in the Larger Catechism, the answer to the sixty-second question is, "The visible Church is a society made up of all such as in all ages and places in the world do profess the true religion, and their children."

Again, a part of the answer to the 106th question is, "Infants descending from parents, either both or but one of them, professing faith in Christ and obedience to him, are, in that respect, within the covenant."

In the administration of baptism, a part of the instruction to be communicated is, that "children are federally holy,"† that is to say, they are to be regarded as included in the covenant of grace, and are the subjects of divine promises.

One more quotation from our standards will show that the doctrine of our Church places children in a very intimate relation to her authority, and enjoins their careful education. "Children born within the pale of the visible Church, and dedicated to God, in baptism, are under the inspection and government of the Church; and are to be taught to read, and repeat the Catechism, the Apostle's Creed, and the Lord's Prayer. They are to be taught to pray, to abhor sin, to fear God, and to obey the Lord Jesus Christ."‡ It would be impossible for language to express, in clearer terms, the duty of the Church to watch over the education of her children, and to combine with all secular instruction that knowledge which accompanies salvation. The language of the standards of our Church sanctions the fundamental principles of our plans of education, both as to the union of learning and religion, and the "inspection" of ecclesiastical authority.

The basis of these teachings of our formulas is the word of God, especially that tender saying of our Lord, when he blessed little children, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Our commentators, generally, agree in referring this declaration to the Church of Christ, of which infants are thus acknowledged members.

THE CHICAGO ACADEMY.

In a former number of the Record, we apprised its readers of the establishment of the Marengo Presbyterial Academy by the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago has undertaken another institution in the flourishing city of Chicago. A new Presbyterial Academy has just commenced its operations in Chicago. The Rev. PHILO CALHOUN, late Professor in Washington College, Virginia, is the Principal. The Institution opened under good auspices. Thorough Christian education is greatly needed in the West. Our Church should endeavour to establish and sustain many such institutions throughout her bounds. Funds are required to sustain them; the funds of the Board, in this department, are not at all adequate to its wants.

A GOOD SCHOOL-INFLUENCE.

One of our schools in Pennsylvania reports, that "It is exerting a happy influence in this community of Papists and Universalists. The school has accomplished somewhat by inducing a disposition to make the common schools much better than they ever were before."

This latter result has followed the efforts of our Church everywhere.

From the Southern Presbyterian.

FEMALE COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES.

The following remarks deserve to be read by all teachers. Though not referring to our own ecclesiastical institutions, they are warning for all.

Mr. Editor:—There is not a female college or academy in . . . of any reputation, that is not under more or less religious influence. At least by their public notices which they send forth to gain patronage, they almost invariably present their claims under a religious aspect. According to these representations, nothing is permitted, or connived at, in the deportment, manners, habits, or conversation of the young ladies which would not be allowed in a Christian family. Yet there is a fearful risk in sending our daughters of tender years into these schools. From some things that have come to my knowledge, I am satisfied there are schools in . . . of no mean reputation, into which my daughters shall not enter as pupils, even if the cost be reduced to a dime a month. Nay, even if the tuition and boarding expenses twice told were held out as an inducement.

Let parents beware; let them make a thorough examination before they place their beloved children in situations of temptation and danger. Many of them are ignorant that the practice of playing cards is prevalent in some schools that are not only popular and fashionable, but that are conducted by men who claim to be the disciples of Jesus. Some young ladies who entered these schools ignorant of the names of the cards, are graduated with a strong passion for the amusement. Less than twelve months ago some twenty or twenty-five pupils of one of these schools, when taken on an excursion of pleasure, (or of exhibition,) being invited to spend a night at a private house, engaged in playing cards with their beaux soon after tea, and continued until a late hour. The lady of the house repeatedly urged them to retire; but the sport was so fine they could not give it up until ten, eleven, twelve o'clock had passed. It is not known that this practice prevails in any of our schools with the approbation or knowledge of the teachers. But their ignorance of the prevalence of a practice so objectionable, and their ability to check it, are alike insuperable objections to them as instructors of the young.

It is also to be observed that some young ladies leave these schools with manners almost disgusting. They are bold and froward, and seem to have lost the modesty and gentleness of children or domestic daughters with which they entered. May not this be ascribed in part to their being publicly exhibited as declaimers or readers of composition?

And this leads me to another evil prevalent to some extent in all or most of our institutions for female education. With some young ladies the habit of deception, has, in these seminaries, become almost inveterate. And they are taught this habit by the Professors themselves. They are permitted to read compositions in public as their own productions, which they know were written by another hand, it may be by one of their own instructors. Is it strange that before they are graduated they are adepts in deceiving the teachers themselves? Another instance is this: a class is examined before a large and admiring audience and not a word missed.

The audience think the class are well acquainted with the part on which they are examined. But the young ladies themselves know that they have been a fortnight or three weeks preparing that lesson expressly for the examination. Here is gross deception, in which the teachers are principals and the pupils are accessories. From such morality we may ever pray that our daughters may be delivered.

Much might also be said about the ostentation and extravagance that are cultivated, instead of economy and unassuming demeanor, which are more becoming, and which most parents desire their children to learn.

I find no fault with worldly and fashionable people having schools where dancing, dice, and cards, fine dressing and many beaux are desired more than prayers or modest behaviour or sound learning But I warn Christian parents to beware of such institutions, even when with all their vanities they assume the garb of piety, and to gain popular favour are called religious. A PARENT.

LITTLE AT FIRST, BUT MIGHTY AT LAST.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

A traveller through a dusty road
Strewed acorns on the lea,
And one took root, and sprouted up,
And grew into a tree,
Love sought its shade at evening time,
To breathe its early vows,
And Age was pleased, in heats of noon,
To bask beneath its boughs;
The dormouse loved its dangling twigs,
The birds sweet music bore,
It stood a glory in its place,
A blessing evermore?

A little spring had lost its way
Among the grass and fern;
A passing stranger scooped a well,
Where weary men might turn.
He walled it in, and hung with care
A ladle at the brink—
He thought not of the deed he did,
But judged that toil might drink.
He passed again—and lo! the well,
By summers never dried,
Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues,
And saved a life beside!

A dreamer dropped a random thought;
'Twas old, and yet 'twas new—
A simple fancy of the brain,
But strong in being true;
It shone upon a genial mind,
And lo! its light became
A lamp of life, a beacon ray,
A monitory flame.
The thought was small—its issue great;
A watch-fire on the hill,
It shed its radiance far adown,
And cheers the valley still!

A nameless man, amid a crowd
That thronged the daily mart,
Let fall the word of hope and love,
Unstudied from the heart;
A whisper on the tumult thrown—
A transitory breath—
It raised a brother from the dust,
It saved a soul from death.
O germ! O fount! O word of Love!
O thought at random cast!
Ye were but little at the first,
But mighty at the last!

PRESBYTERIAN HIGH SCHOOL

Address the Principal, at Brownsburg, Rockbridge county, Virginia.

WASHINGTON COLLEGE, PA.

Washington College, Pennsylvania, has been taken under the care of the Synod of Wheeling. The Rev. John W. Scott, D. D., has been elected President. An effort is to be made for its endowment on the scholarship plan. The individual scholarships to be $50; family, $100; permanent, $500.

We have not heard whether the Trustees of the College have decided to make the transfer to the Synod. Further particulars will be given when they come to hand.

AUSTIN COLLEGE, TEXAS.

Austin College, Texas, is going forward well. Dr. McKinney, the President, writes:—"We have two young men in the Junior Class, three in the Sophomore, and four in the Freshman, with a large number in preparation for the Freshman next year."

FILIAL REVERENCE.

When Sir Thomas Moore was Lord High Chancellor of England, (an office second only in rank to that of Archbishop of Canterbury,) he was wont publicly, upon his knees, to beg the blessing of his father, who was one of the judges of the Court of King's Bench.

The loosening of the tie between parents and children is one of the worst features in our times. St. Paul calls the fifth "the first commandment with promise;" and certainly there is no duty which seems to bring its own reward so speedily along with it as the religious education of children. Let parents ponder well that fearful threat made by God to Eli: "Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, at which the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle. I will judge his house forever, because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not." (1 Sam. iii. 13.) And let children remember that no less alarming one: "The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." Prov. xxx. 17.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

TO THE MINISTERS AND MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH.

Mission House, New York, Nov. 15, 1852.

Dear Brethren:—The Executive Committee of the Board of Foreign Missions feel it to be both their duty and their privilege to communicate freely with you, on the great work of sending the Gospel to the dark places of the earth. This work is one of common concern, and it can go forward only as it is supported by the prayers and the contributions of the churches.

Since the Annual Report to the General Assembly, the Committee have continued to receive encouraging accounts from the Missions. These accounts have been published in detail in the Record, and Foreign Missionary, and have shown that, with the exception of impaired health in some cases, our missionary brethren have much to encourage them in their great work. Though no special outpouring of the Spirit from on high has been granted, yet a number of hopeful conversions have been reported from different stations, and several native church members have finished their course, witnessing a good confession to the last, and sustained by a good hope through grace. By these things the Committee have been much cheered, seeing in them the undoubted tokens of the Saviour's presence with his servants.

From most of the Missions, the Committee have received within the last six months very earnest requests for more labourers. These requests are based chiefly on the ground of the growing work, which is set before our missionary brethren. Several men ought to be sent without delay to the Missions in India, Siam, China, Africa, and among the Indians. The Committee would specify, particularly, the stations of Ambala, Bangkok, Canton, and Monrovia, as urgently requiring more labourers. Besides these places, there are many others, especially in India and Africa, where the door of access is fully open to vast multitudes who have never yet heard the name of Jesus Christ as the Saviour of sinners. And among the Indian tribes, two permanent teachers for Spencer Academy, and six laymen as farmers and stewards in different Missions, are still greatly needed. The Committee are encouraged to hope that a sufficient number of qualified female teachers for the present wants of these Missions will be obtained during the winter and spring. But in view of this essential part of their work, the Committee feel constrained to entreat the earnest prayers of their brethren, that more men may be raised up to go forth as missionaries. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few."

Owing to the advancing state of the Missions, a larger sum will be required for their support than was received last year. Following, as they believe, the leadings of Providence, the Committee have sanctioned some important measures which involve increased pecuniary expenditure. One of these is the establishment of a boarding-school, and also of a second station, in connection with the Ottawa and Chippewa Mission. Another is a school for East Indian youth at Agra; and a third is a boarding-school at Corisco; these schools, it is believed, will prove valuable means of training up a native missionary agency, which is so essential to the progress of the work. In connection with the Agra and Corisco Missions, two esteemed brethren have received appointments, and are now on their way to their respective stations. A missionary and his wife have been sent also to the Chinese in California. From the province of Canton, 30,000 Chinese have come as emigrants, and they are now in the bosom of one of our own States. Large numbers of their countrymen will probably follow them to our shores. The Rev. W. Speer, formerly of the Canton Mission, and acquainted with that dialect, his health being restored, has now gone to speak unto them the words of eternal life. No one can doubt the expediency of commencing this new and interesting Mission; but the churches should bear it in mind, that for a time it will be an expensive one, and that without an enlargement of the receipts of the Board it cannot be sustained.

The Committee do not refer to the want of larger funds with discouragement; it is a reason for thankfulness. If the Missions were in a declining state, a smaller sum would answer for their support. It is because of the blessing of God upon this good work of our hands, that our beloved Church is called upon for the exercise of increased liberality. And yet the Committee are not without solicitude on this subject. The receipts of the six months ending on the first of November, were $44.578, being nearly the same as those of the corresponding months of last year, and leaving a large amount necessary to meet the whole expenditure of the year.

This expenditure is now unavoidable, and must be provided for. From the nature of the work, the Committee cannot wait until the end of the year, and then divide among the different Missions the funds which the piety of the Church has contributed for their support. The matter is managed in this way: Estimates prepared beforehand with care by the missionaries, serve to show the probable expenditure of each Mission for the year. These estimates receive the best consideration of the Committee, and are modified and finally adopted in view of the probable receipts of the Board from the churches during the same period. After the estimates are thus approved, the missionary brethren are authorized to proceed in accordance with them, their expenditures being limited, but not subject to reduction. Owing to the distance of most of the Missions, and the nature of their work, no reduction can ordinarily be made in the sums estimated for each Mission during the year. The Committee are pledged to the Missions to send them their respective amounts. The money must be sent, even if it should have to be borrowed. If not furnished by the churches within the year, the painful work of reduction must then commence.

But if the members of our body can be generally engaged in this work of the Lord, there need be no fear of reduction; on the contrary, there would be a large increase of funds. It is ascertained that the steadily increasing income of the Board for the last ten years, has been contributed by comparatively a small part of our Christian people. This shows what can be done by a few, and what might be done by a general and hearty effort.

To meet the pressing wants of the Board for the current year, the Committee must rely mainly on their brethren in the ministry. Without their assistance in presenting this object to their respective congregations, a sad and painful close of the year must take place. The Board has now in all the bounds of the Church but one permanent and one temporary agent, with the temporary assistance of two returned missionaries; the Rev. R. L. Breck and the Rev. H. R. Wilson, D. D., having resigned their appointments on the 1st of May last, after several years of faithful and successful service. Yet the want of agents will not be seriously felt, if each pastor will consider himself an agent, appointed by the Head of the Church, to see to it that this branch of his service is laid before the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made him the overseer.

With this general statement, the Committee would commend this great cause to the continued sympathy and support of their brethren in the churches, and would ask for it a constant remembrance in their prayers.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, November 15, 1852.

Africa: Corisco Mission.—A letter has been received from the Rev. J. L. Mackey, dated August 17, in which he mentions the continued good health of himself and Mrs. Mackey, formerly Miss Sweeney. Ten boarding, and as many day-scholars, were under their care, all girls, who were making good progress "both in their books and with their needles." Mr. Mackey says, "Our little church is sometimes crowded, and always respectably filled. The Rev. Mr. Porter of the Gaboon Mission spent a Sabbath with us just two weeks before his death. When we were walking out to the church in the morning, the walk from the mission house to the church was quite crowded with respectably dressed people. I will not soon forget the pleasure he seemed to derive from the sight. 'That looks like Ethiopia stretching forth her hands unto God,' he exclaimed; and the last time he was permitted to preach, was to our people that day."

India Mission.—Letters have been received from Lodiana, August 20; Ambala, August 31; Futtehgurh, September 6; Mynpurie, August 31; Allahabad, September 2. An exceedingly severe storm of rain had caused great loss at Ambala, carrying away many houses. The mission premises had not escaped injury, but it was thought the requisite repairs could be made for about 500 rupees, or $250. Mr. Jamieson says, "Our school continues to flourish, and all our work is proceeding as usual. We need the outpouring of the Spirit upon us."—Mr. Freeman sends an urgent request for funds to erect a school-building at Mynpurie, the rooms now occupied being altogether too small. A valuable and conveniently situated piece of ground had been offered by the magistrate for the proposed building. About $1000 from the Board, with some donations from friends at the station, would be required.—Mr. Owen mentions that in the Allahabad Mission, "All things are going on as usual. Attendance at the college good, over three hundred. Phulpur branch-school, started and promising."

Siam.—Letters have been received, dated on the 30th July, Mr. Mattoon says, "We are at last comfortably settled in our new home. The second dwelling is not finished, though it is now fast approaching completion. They have cost us much hard work, and many trials of our patience, but I trust they may serve to make several generations of missionaries comfortable." Mrs. Mattoon had become deeply interested in the class of ladies in the royal palace, to whose instruction she had been lately devoting a portion of every day.

China.—Our advices from Canton are dated August 21; Shanghai, August 16; Ningpo, July 30. Mr. Happer mentions that the emigration of Chinese to California had been checked, by the report of the restrictions imposed on their countrymen at the mines. "The attendance at the Dispensary has been very good, varying from eighty to one hundred and thirty on dispensing days. The attention given by those present to the preaching of the word has been gratifying."—From Ningpo, Mr. S. Martin writes: "On the second Sabbath of this month, the old gentleman, Mr. Wong, who for several years has been receiving instruction, was baptized. It was affecting, and a matter of thanksgiving and joy, to see the old man stand forth in the presence of some hundreds of heathen spectators, and boldly renounce the idols in whose service he had grown gray, and the false doctrines he had believed from his youth, and declare his faith in Jesus as the only true God and Saviour. The next Sabbath four persons, two men and two youths, were baptized by the Episcopal brethren; and on the evening of the same day, two others were baptized by our Baptist friends. . . . Our hearts are cheered and encouraged. Though of different branches of Christ's Church, I think we each cordially rejoice in the success of the others, believing that our common Lord is blessing the instrumentality of each for the redemption of his elect among this people."

CREEKS.—Under date of September 6, Mr. Loughridge says, "Many of our scholars are sincerely inquiring what they must do to be saved, and we have good evidence that the Spirit of God is in our midst. Pray for us that God would convert all our dear children." The vacation of the school was then just commencing. On the 4th of October, Mr. Loughridge writes, "We had a very pleasant meeting of Presbytery a few days ago. We received Mr. David Winslett and Mr. Joseph Perryman as students on probation for the ministry. They are acting as interpreters at present."

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. L. JANVIER.

The following notices were written at Kasauli, a station in the hills, where Mr. and Mrs. Janvier were spending the hot season on account of Mrs. Janvier's health. Mr. Janvier was able to carry on there a large part of his usual labours, and amongst other things to visit the bazárs for the purpose of preaching to the natives.

Kasauli, June 11th.—Went to the Sadar bazár, and stopped at the lower side of it, where the chumárs are generally to be found, and where there is also a considerable thoroughfare, so that a crowd may be collected in a short time. Found two or three chumárs, and addressed one of them. He immediately replied in that style of adulation that is so usual among the people of this country, only that he went further than usual, comparing me with Parmesur, (God). I rebuked him for this, telling him it was very wrong and very sinful for him to use such language, and took occasion to remark that he and his fellow-countrymen were in the habit of worshipping and deifying all sorts of things, while they knew nothing, as they ought to know it, of the true character and glory of God; and not only so, but had no heart to learn and understand these things.

As this conversation proceeded, a number of persons stopped to listen, till quite a company had collected. Presently a hill-man came up, (the most of those present being people from the plains;) and I said to him, "You worship stones, do you not?" "Yes," he replied, while the rest laughed. I remarked "You need not laugh, for you too are ready to worship trees, rivers, stones, and almost any thing that presents itself to you." The hill-man, after hearing a few words that were addressed more especially to him, went off in a very careless, trifling manner. I observed, "You see it is as I have told you, religion has no hold on your hearts; you are more ready to give your thoughts and attention to any thing besides, than to it." They admitted that it was true.

The chumár who was first spoken to, had not sat long before he too began to talk with some one, on which I said to him, "See how inconsistent you are; a few minutes ago you were comparing me with God, and yet you are not paying attention to what I say." He sat down again very quickly and began to listen.

One man said, that the great thing was to utter the name of God. He was told, in reply, that this was one of their leading errors; that they ought, indeed, on proper occasions, especially in worship, to use his name: but that they in fact had utterly parted with God, having abandoned his service, his ways, the right knowledge of Him, and indeed every thing but His name. I remarked further, "Herein you entirely impose upon, and deceive yourselves, taking the name of a thing for the reality, which in the affairs of this life you would by no means do. For instance, if my child should ask me for a horse, and I should take a piece of paper, and write on it 'a horse,' and give it to him, saying, here is a horse, take it, use it, ride on it, it will be of service to you, and will last you a long a time;' would he not see that I was mocking and ridiculing him? Yet this is just the deplorable imposition you practise upon yourselves, with reference to God. You have his name, and think that you have himself; not only so, but you think that however you break his laws, it matters not, provided you retain his name. Thus are you without God in the world, and having no hope." After endeavouring to set before them the truth as it is in Jesus, and obtaining a tolerably attentive hearing, I left them to Him to whom it belongs to give the word success.

Saturday, 12th.—Went to the same place, and found the same man, with some others. Asked him whether he remembered what had been said to him the evening before. "O yes," he replied, "I have it in remembrance every moment." "Well, then," I said, "give me a little account of it; what was it I told you?" He was silent for a minute, looked foolish, and then began to laugh, saying, "It has not remained in my recollection."

I proceeded then to speak the word, and again a considerable company assembled; thirty or forty perhaps, before the occasion closed; and though there was some interruption, yet on the whole a good opportunity was obtained for making known the truth.

Thursday evening, 17th.—Stopped at the upper part of the Sadar bazár, a man there having spoken to me, and asked me for books. I began to tell him what our books were like, and what kind of things he might expect to find in them, in case he took them. Presently he stopped me, saying there was one thing received and practised by us, which he did not approve at all, and that was khún. The literal meaning of this word is blood, but according to the usage of the language it also means murder, so that it was as much as to say that we practised murder. His reference was to the killing of animals for food, particularly cows. He was a Hindú, and the Hindús think, that the killing of a cow is as bad as taking the life of a man, or worse, though the flesh of the sheep, goat, &c. many Hindús use for food; whether they think it is right, or because their appetite leads them to do what they erroneously suppose to be wrong, it is difficult to say. I of course understood to what the man referred, having heard the same thing often before; but as he charged us with murder, I answered accordingly, saying, "This is a great mistake, we do not allow murder; if a man is found guilty of it he is hanged." "Yes," he replied, "but you kill animals." He did not say cows, thinking probably my reply would be, that a cow was no better than another animal, a thing that a Hindú by no means believes, though he finds it very hard to disprove it, when called upon to do so. I replied, "Yes, we kill animals, and use their flesh for food; but this we do by a Divine warrant. Every thing belongs to God; the lives of animals belong to him, and he can dispose of them as he sees best. There was a time when he did not authorize the slaying of animals, but subsequently he did, as I can show you from his word, the true and holy Shaster; the oldest Shaster in the world, and the Divine authority of which is unquestionable; in it you may find a distinct narrative of this grant, with mention of the time, place, and circumstances." To this he listened with a degree of attention, and had not much to say in reply. I further referred to the fact that many Hindús eat animal food, observing that if they did it against their consciences, it was of course wrong; but that in fact they might, if they did but know it, do so with a clear conscience, which was the case with us. The principle laid down and instructions given on this subject, by the apostle Paul in Romans 14th chapter were then stated and explained, and seemed to be much approved by those who heard, a considerable company having gradually gathered. I was then proceeding to explain the important truth that "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink," when a poor creature that had been drinking to intoxication, interrupted me. With some trouble he was checked, when another began to manifest similar symptoms, and presently two or three more such made their appearance, having evidently just come from a drinking shop, and soon there was such confusion that those who were disposed to listen had no opportunity to do so, and I as little for speaking. So I was compelled to leave, with the principal half unsaid.

Thus it is that these poor creatures are held bondslaves by the adversary of souls, and the devices of their own hearts. Their good is evil, and their light darkness. The repeating of the holy name of God, times numberless, is one of their chief acts of worship, and, as they suppose, of merit; while in fact it is not only an unmeaning and absurd, but a most profane practice. The abstaining from this and that particular article of food, is another part of their righteousness; while their hearts are in love with falsehood, deceit, covetousness, drunkenness, and all manner of uncleanness: and they do not even contemplate such a probability as the getting rid of these vicious practices; but hope that their vain, mistaken acts of devotion will serve as a foil to them, and that God will account their merits more than their ill deserts, and so save them. But these are the immortal souls to whom the Saviour has commanded life and salvation to be proclaimed. O that we might be enabled to go in the power of His name to the mercy-seat, and so plead for the grace of the promised Spirit, as that new life might be infused into these dead souls.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

LETTER OF THE REV. D. E. CAMPBELL.

The Missionary work in India.

Dear Friends—Those of you with whom we discussed the claims of the Home and Foreign fields some time ago, are perhaps ready to inquire, What think you now? Has the time yet come for the heathen to be given to the Son of God, for his inheritance, or not? We still think it has. God is now giving this people to his Son; and while he expects his own people to look well to their own hearts, their own families, and their own kindred, he also requires that they should come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

After a hasty march through the various stations in India, you might be disappointed, and return home, only to discourage the churches respecting this field of labour. In America, by the blessing of God upon early Christian education, churches spring up in a very short time. Here you would pass from mission to mission, and hear that such and such stations have been occupied for many years—that one set of labourers have been mostly set aside, and others are filling their places; and in view of the comparatively few converts who would gather around to give you a Christian greeting, you would perhaps exclaim, Alas! brethren, where is the fruit of your labour, and where the justification of such expense of health, and life, and means? The question respecting this field is not, whether missionaries are greatly successful in their labours—whether the heathen in all our neighbourhoods are aroused to a sense of their awful condition by nature and practice, and are flocking to the shelter of the cross, like doves to their windows, but whether God has commanded his people to occupy India, and preach the gospel to its benighted inhabitants in faith and hope. He has not given such a command from heaven audibly, and we need never expect him to. The high and lofty One will never vouchsafe such a thing, for it is neither reasonable nor necessary. Servants look to the hands of their masters; and we, the servants of the King of kings, should look to the hand of our Master in heaven for orders. He has thrown the doors of this whole country wide open to the gospel. To those then, who study the providences of God, as well as his written word, for direction, does it not appear, as though necessity were laid upon us to preach the gospel to this people? Already bound by the general command of our Saviour to teach all nations, we cannot resist the conclusion, that this providence is a particular, express order from heaven, on behalf of the Hindú. And shall we not obey, or obeying shall we shrink because the work is a difficult one? Should we become at all discouraged, if at first our success is not great? O no. Let us ever remember how long, before our conversion in a Christian land, and surrounded by Christian influences, we received line upon line, and precept upon precept—how long we resisted the strivings of the Holy Spirit—let us remember these things I say, that we may not grow weary in our efforts to save the heathen. If we only consider the result of missionary labour in India, we have abundant reason to be thankful, take courage, and proceed resolutely forward with the work. It is true the number of converts is not great, and will not suffice for the encouragement of those who expect great things at first, and do not consider the work in connection with all its difficulties. . . . .

This is not a simple-minded, honest people, who worship idols, simply because they know no better, and who are ready to throw them away as soon as the gospel is preached to them. No, they love their idols, and hate the Son of God. They are madly attached to their filthy gods—as a general thing are wicked and determinedly opposed to the Son of Righteousness. Tell them that idolatry is a great sin, and they are not very much hurt, for they have no idea whatever of the infinite demerit of sin. They regard it as a slight stain of the body rather than of the soul, which is easily removed from Mohammedans, by devout prostrations towards Mecca, the holy city, and from Hindus by frequent ablutions in Ganges, the holy river. But without some sense of the exceeding heinousness, the infinite demerit of sin, how can it be expected that they will fly to Him who is infinitely meritorious—to Him who has a spotless righteousness to give them. Thus, you see, in pleading with them to accept the Saviour, we are deprived of a most powerful weapon against them. The preacher must not take it for granted that his hearers know any thing. He must explain every thing as he goes along, for all is new and mysterious. This is the case with all the great truths of the Bible. They are mostly deprived of their power, because the very first principles of religion are not known—because the heathen are totally ignorant of God's glorious character and attributes, and their own lost and ruined condition. Now, when it is remembered that the hearers of the gospel here are only occasional hearers—that the crowd that listens to-day, will perhaps for ever go away, never to hear the sound of the gospel again—never to hear it more fully explained to them, and never to have it more earnestly and tenderly urged and impressed upon them, is it a wonder that there are but few inquirers, and still fewer converts? If you could only see the true state of things here, which no pen can fully and vividly convey to your minds, I am sure you would say it is a wonder that any are converted. In preaching to the multitudes, our only hope is in that divine power which accompanies the truth, and often instantaneously calling into exercise a conscience where its compunctions had never been felt before, leads to the Saviour, for peace and safety.

There is no greater stranger in Hindustan than truth. You would be greatly surprised to see how little this people are actuated by it—how little it rules in their hearts and lives. It does not characterize the dealings of man with man one-tenth as much as falsehood and dishonesty. This is another reason why the preached word is not more efficacious. If a man's understanding assents to the preacher's arguments and expostulations, his wicked heart inquires, why he should obey the truth? What is to be gained by such a course but persecutions and reproaches; and then the feeble struggles of conscience are hushed perhaps for ever. The Apostle Paul, in the first chapter of his Epistle to the Romans, has most truthfully portrayed the character of this people. I might give examples under every trait of that whole black catalogue, had I time and space. In the following you will discern the workings of much of that wickedness with which the Apostle charges the heathen.

About a year ago, one of the scholars in the Furrukhabad city school was accused of a criminal offence, and arrested. He was a mild, inoffensive boy, and none of us believed him guilty of the heinous crime preferred against him. He was tried, and sentenced to a year and six months' imprisonment. The judge by whom he was sentenced, was himself persuaded of his innocence; but what could he do? The evidence against the boy was much the strongest—his decisions were subject to the revision of a higher tribunal, and he must proceed according to evidence, and not according to his own private opinion. The case was afterwards reviewed in a higher court, where, in view of the strength of the evidence against the accused, and the magnitude of the offence, his confinement was increased to seven years. The distress of the boy's parents was extreme. His afflicted father did every thing in his power, sparing neither expense nor trouble to save his child; but all in vain. The boy's mortification was too much for him. He died a short time ago, declaring, as he had ever done, that he was an injured, innocent boy, the unfortunate victim of implacable revenge. It has since appeared that the whole was a deep-laid, wicked scheme, devised by the boy's enemies for his ruin. The chief actress in the sorrowful case, was hired for a mere pittance to perform her nefarious part. I may say the same of all the witnesses against him. Now cases of a like character with the above are not of unusual, but very frequent occurrence. The courts of justice here are full of them.

How contemptible a thing then is truth, in the eyes of this people! How little does it bind their consciences or actuate their lives! How debased and abandoned they are to the commission of all wickedness! Is it a great wonder then, that the word of God, preached under such circumstances, does not run, and is not glorified in the lives of many? We think not. Here, however, we might give many interesting facts to show that preaching the gospel to the heathen is not a hopeless business, by any means, but one of the ways ordained of God for their salvation. Some who have heard the gospel but once, and afterwards have been removed far away from the neighbourhood of missionaries, have never been able to stifle the still small voice within, until they have found the Saviour. [See the article next following, for an example. Ed.]

But there is a mighty work silently progressing here, the results of which are not now perceptible to the churches at home. It is the instruction of Hindu and Mohammedan youth in the principles of the Christian religion. In every school the truths of the Bible are taught, while the filthy tales of the heathen are excluded. In this way over two thousand boys are instructed, in connection with our missions, from year to year in the great truths of Christianity. Very many of them express themselves convinced of the nonsense of Hinduism, the falsehood of Mohammedanism, and the truth of Christianity. Some of them express concern for their souls, and some have been known to weep with anxiety about themselves, when earnestly entreated and importuned to haste and make their peace with God. If such be the case, why are there not more conversions from among them, you will inquire? The only reason I can give, is the want of moral courage. As before stated, truth is not, and never has been obeyed here. It is a complete stranger, and its authority not acknowledged. Consequently, it is an exceedingly difficult thing for boys to embrace Christianity, in defiance of all the reproach, contumely, and persecution which would be heaped upon them by their friends and connections. The Hindu's love of ease is proverbial. He shrinks from exertion, and he shrinks still more from suffering. It is not very astonishing then, that the Hindu youth are shy of the Christian religion, and regardless of the everlasting honours and rewards which it promises, when it requires of those who embrace it, the sacrifice of all they have been taught from infancy to love and idolize. But we confidently trust that there is a day fast approaching, when these now insurmountable barriers which obstruct the passage of awakened sinners into the fold of God will be thrown to the ground. They have already begun to fall in the older missionary stations, and escape from the shackles of heathenism has become very much easier. Hundreds of boys go forth from us, if not to become Christians hereafter, at least with their feelings elevated, and their views expanded, and their characters altogether bettered by the varied instruction they have received in school. And we know that in very many cases their example and influence is for good. Would that our schools were greatly multiplied. Then our expectations of this people becoming speedily leavened by gospel truth would be greatly increased. In the midst of the millions of Hindustan, what are all our schools? As it were but a drop in the ocean. May God have mercy upon India and send us more help!

Now in view of the many and truly great difficulties and obstructions we are contending with, because the work is in its incipiency, have we not reason to be encouraged in teaching and preaching the gospel to this people? Yes, we have; and we are confident that there is an invisible arm stretched forth here—that there is a secret omnipotent power at work in the midst of this people, before which these stupendous monuments of Satanic power, subtlety, and wickedness, Hinduism and Mohammedanism, must fall and crumble into dust. Then the house of God will rise gloriously on the ruins, to be seen and admired throughout all the earth. "Strengthen then those hands which are weak in this glorious cause, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not—for this parched ground shall surely become a pool, and this thirsty land springs of water."

INDIA: AGRA MISSION.

AN INTERESTING NARRATIVE.

The last mail brought the following accounts from the Rev. Joseph Warren, formerly stationed at Allahabad, now at Agra.

I have recently received a letter from a friend at Jubbulpore in Central India, which contains the following paragraphs, from which those at home, who love the cause of Foreign Missions, will learn that the truth is working its way here in spite of all obstacles: and that in many cases there may be a work of grace going on where we least suspect it.

"Can you let me have an Old Testament, or even Bible complete, in Hindí? I wish very much to give it to an old man, once a high caste Brahmán Pundit, who has flung off the faith of his forefathers and strives for the light of truth. He would be the first fruit for any man of God [who would establish a mission there,] but he is weak in his views of things, and needs assistance. I think he has read just so far that he still risks a shipwreck of faith, and that to prevent this, a Bible complete is [wanted.] * * * As yet he has read by scraps and odds and ends. He knows much of Old Testament history, and I have set him to studying the Psalms. He has many difficulties to contend with from man. His wife is still a heathen, and he tells me her taunts and sneers are bitter as gall, and of the grossest description; but still he keeps to her, and I believe from real love. He has one child, an interesting little girl about eight years old, whom he has taught to read, and instructed in the Scriptures as far as he is able. She is a very interesting child, and has an amount of character seldom met with in a native; and she apparently only requires to be trained to walk in the Christian path to keep it. Naturally very quick and intelligent, she has become more so under her father's tuition; and I should really feel most thankful if you could send me down a few Hindí tracts for this couple, suited to their capacities.

"Strange to say, my friend the Pundit was first set to inquiring, after hearing a discourse, about eight years ago at Allahabad, where he had gone to do púját [worship], and to take a dip in Tribení ji [a title of the sacred junction of rivers.] He says one of your Mission was the man, but who he cannot say; but the jist of the case is, that an argument occurred between the minister and some Brahman priests, on their Veds and the Bible, in which they were worsted, and as he himself says, 'myself shaken.' The old man has studied the Koran, and the Cazee here has made desperate attempts to convert him; but he tells the Cazee to let him know whence Mohammed obtained his laws, &c., so far as they are good for any thing, if not from the Bible. If yes, then the Bible is true, and the Koran is made up of truths borrowed and lies invented, both blended to deceive."

I will add but little to these paragraphs, they speak for themselves. But it is a great encouragement to us, who "cast our bread on the waters" here. Eight years pass in this case, and then we hear of the effect of one of our discourses in the old Mela tent at Allahabad. Each one of our Mission, who was there that year, may say, "Perhaps that sermon was mine!" and it is not likely that we shall know whose it was till the end. There is great encouragement in this to labour at Melas. In this case the truth was carried three hundred miles. Again, look at the effect of the smallest influence of the Bible. I have never heard of a Hindú teaching a daughter to read; but no sooner does this man take an interest in the Scriptures, than his affections are directed towards his daughter, as they never otherwise would have been; his prejudice against female learning vanishes; she acquires a character different from that of other Hindú girls, and altogether there is a great change. My informant is a military officer, who is not likely to be imposed upon. His special duties now are such as to require more than ordinary discernment and sagacity. So we may feel a good degree of confidence in his opinion.

INDIA: ALLAHABAD MISSION.

JOURNAL OF PAUL QAIM, SCRIPTURE-READER.

Our readers will look with interest on the following journal, which we insert just as it was written. The penmanship is excellent, and the style has fewer faults than might have been expected, the English being a difficult language for a Hindu to learn.

We are glad to see our native brethren at work, making the gospel known to their countrymen. Eventually this work must pass altogether into their hands. The churches should pray especially that native labourers may be raised up in each field, to gather in the harvest. The missionary policy of the Board is directed carefully to this result.

28th March, 1852.—After prayer in Mr. Owen's house at 2 o'clock, P. M. we crossed the Ganges Bridge at four, and started straightway for Hanúmángung. On our way Thomas, Khádim and myself left the ekka [native wagon] and visited three villages near the way: we went into one of the fields and saw the corn and its great damage on account of the rain. We asked the men the cause of the corn's becoming so much damaged; they answered, It is Bhagwán; whatever seemeth good to him, he doeth, and none can say anything to him. We replied, Yes, it is very true, but the cause of his displeasure is, that we do not mind him, neither worship him in the manner which he commands: also, that instead of worshipping and praising him, the Hindus worship wood and stone. They seemed to be stopped by hearing this: then I explained to them Christianity, and the evil of idolatry; they heard it quietly. I also told them that if they through Christ (who is the incarnate God and true Saviour) plead with God not to do so; he will then hear them. We further told them, God says, If you follow him according as he directs, then if there be plague around you, you only see it with your eyes and hear it with your ears, but not taste its bitterness, for God then will be your shield and protection. But if you will not do according as he commands, then, when there is no such thing, you shall flee merely by the shaking of the leaves, and tremble in yourselves by hearing the report. All of them heard this and said nothing: the men were in number 12 and one woman. We left them and entered into the villages, there we saw in one place 6 or 7 men sitting together: we went near them and asked what they are doing? They also asked us whence are we come and why? But when they knew and saw books in our hands they gave us a charpaí [seat] and wished us to tell them the main object of our coming to them. So we talked a long time about religion: in the meantime there gathered many other people. Then I read from Mr. Munnis' Tract, about two leaves, and explained its meaning, and the way of salvation through Christ by faith. Upon which the people called an old Brahman to argue with us; when he came, he told them that they have their faith in Pilgrimage and their Brahmanical Thread. We asked; Have they who do pilgrimage ever found peace and comfort in their heart by doing it, and by hanging the ganeo [thread] on their neck? He said "No." Then I asked him, if they do not find rest and ease in their mind, that their sin is blotted out, what is the use of doing it. I told them all, that if they believe upon Jesus Christ and pray to God for the pardon and remission of their sin through his name, then indeed they will find an answer in their own mind that their sin is pardoned. I told them, their great fault generally lies in this, that they don't allow their children to become acquainted with knowledge and with every religion that is now prevalent in the world; so that they may examine and judge for themselves, which religion is true and leads to God. I said many things which I have not time to mention here. The audience consisted of more than 30 men, and several women. There was also an old sick man, whose feet were swollen. He asked something from us, so we gave him some pice and at sunset we took our way and came to Ináyat kí Saráe, where we lodged during the night. After our dinner we talked again with several cow-merchants, who lodged very near us. Khádim especially talked with them for a long time, and showed them that there is no salvation by any, except Christ whom they ought to follow. We prayed together and went to rest.

29*th March.*—We rose in the morning at three o'clock and started for Handiá; in the way we passed Hanúmángung at gunfire. The people were all asleep at the time of our arrival and therefore we got no opportunity to talk with them, neither did we stop there: for the time was cool and we wished to walk on before the heat of the day. We came to Harípoor: Thomas and myself preached and made known the gospel about an hour. I explained how Christ is become wisdom and righteousness for us in the sight of God, i. e. by his fulfilling all the demands of God in our stead. I also told them that there is none other name given under heaven among men whereby they must be saved. Some of the people seemed glad and others laughed; but none said any thing against it, except this: Since the power of the English is prevalent in the world, why does not also their religion spread with it? The assembly consisted of 16 men, 6 children, and 5 women. Thence we came to Bínda, where we, after refreshment, talked with many people. The people who heard us were chiefly travellers coming from the Bindlinyá-jal and a few of the village people. We told them how foolish they were in spending the money which they earn with great trouble after idols which speak not, neither see. Two or three old men replied, "Yes, indeed it is a foolish thing to worship dumb idols made of wood and stone." They also said, "See we are coming from there, and gave two pice to the idol without profit." One of the village men said, Rám is greater than all, and others are under him: but by comparing him with Christ I showed him the great difference between the two, viz. one came to save us from hell, while the other merely rescued his wife Sita from the slavery of Ráwana: and this too he did not himself but through Hanúmán's aid. After an hour's talking, one man asked us to go into the village to a rich Musalman Zamindár to converse with him. Accordingly Khádim and myself went together and walked through the whole village, but found not a single man, except some women who on seeing us closed the doors of their houses. All were gone at their work in the field. From there we came to Saidá-bád; and after our breakfast at 2 o'clock Khádim and myself went in the village and returned at four. We read the 14th chapter of the Gospel of John and explained there how Christ is gone to prepare a place for his followers in heaven at the right hand of the Father. The people brought several objections, and asked who are the Father and the Son or Christ spoken of in the chapter; which I explained according to the gospel. Upon which the people said, we call upon Rám and you call upon Christ, it is same, and there is no difference except in names. But we by arguments and by long discussion proved to them, that it is not so; for Rám was a mere man and fought for his wife. Khádim told them that Rám killed himself, which is a dreadful sin: but Christ was a God and gave up his life for sinners, which was necessary for us, otherwise we could not have been saved from the wrath of God. We also told them, that not a single attribute of God can be found in Rám, whereas all Christ's works were worthy of God and the Anointed Saviour of the world. Many wanted books without price, but I did not give them. They wished us to stop for some time and to explain to them more; but I had a severe headache on account of the sun, and therefore could not stop any longer. We advised them to believe on Christ and ask pardon for their sin of the Father in his name of whom they just now heard, and leave all other gods: to which the people answered, if we do this, then our friends and relations would leave us, take our property, and drive us out of the village. I replied to them: "Surely they will do so, for darkness cannot bear the light and Rám shall not have any share with Christ." The assembly consisted of about 50 men, women and children. We left them and took our way for Handiá: in the way we met two old Brahmans sitting under a tree and talked with them for some time; Khádim read from Mr. Munnis' tract about 7 pages and explained them the attributes of Christ. They seemed to be convinced, and professed the things to be true, and Christ to be a true and only Saviour. They too asked, If we believe on Christ, how shall we get our livelihood. We answered them that if they believed in Christ, he would provide for them. We arrived during the evening at Handiá, and as we preparing to go out of the Saráe to talk with the people, we met Bábú Harry [licentiate preacher] on his way to Mirzapoor for some change of air, and therefore did not go into the village: but told him all which we had done in the way. In the evening after our dinner I read a Psalm from the English Bible and Harry asked the blessing of God for us and for the increase of his grace in this land, and his protection and care over us while in the way, and safely to take us into our houses and at last into his kingdom. In the Saráe there was an English gentleman, who was going up to Alygurh. I talked with him about God's mercy towards us in sending his gospel to us in this dark country. He seemed to be very glad, that we had come out to preach the gospel of Christ to the heathen.

30*th March.*—We left Handiá early in the morning and took our way to Phulpúr. In the way we passed a village in which we saw several sugar-mills and also a Pipal tree under which there were many images: we asked the people, for what purpose those stones were under the tree? They answered "They are Mahádeos and other deities." This we did only to get opportunity to speak with them: we talked with them about their great foolishness in worshipping those blind and dumb idols. They seemed to be convinced of their folly, for they said nothing to the contrary, but confessed; "Yes, they are truly blind and dumb, and cannot do any thing for our salvation." Then we talked to them about Christ: why He came in this world and what he did for us, and how he died. We advised them to believe on him, to leave their idols, and ask pardon in his name from God for their sin and folly. From there we came into Ballipoor which consisted of several villages; we went into five of them; and read from Mr. Munnis' tract some parts here and there, and talked several things concerning Christ. And in one of the threshing floors Khádim read nearly the whole of the above mentioned tract. There were about 25 men, besides children and girls. All of them seemed to be very much pleased. Besides them we met several persons sitting under a tree, to whom we also said many things about religion. These men also directed our religion to be true and worthy of acceptance. We passed several other villages in the way, found none to speak with, except women, who by seeing us closed the doors either on account of fear or shame. During the hot part of the day we lodged in a garden and took our breakfast. Many people passed by us, but none stopped. To-day we had more talking in the villages and fields than before; for we altogether spent not less than 6 hours in different places, in talking, explaining, and advising them to have their faith in Jesus Christ, the true and only Saviour of the world. We also passed a Musalman's village; where I did not like to stop and say any thing, for the people seemed to be too proud and wished not to hear any thing. It is known to every one, that these men are more intimate friends to Satan than the poor Hindus. Although the Hindus worship wood and stones, and observe many diabolical feasts and do pilgrimage, still when we show them the errors and folly of their gods, they seem not to be much offended by it. At four o'clock P. M. we came into Phulpúr, and lodged at Mr. Owen's tent; he was here from three days before, preaching in the village and making arrangements for a branch-school.

31*st March.*—Early in the morning we all three went into Phúlpoor and walked nearly through all the streets of this town; but not find any convenient place as we expected, to converse with the people. Still we preached and talked in two of the places, where were gathered between 40 and 50 men in each of the places: we did not stop a long time in these places; yet we exhorted and advised them to come to Jesus Christ the only Redeemer of men, and to accept his religion. Some of the men brought objections and laughed too; yet others listened patiently to our words and to the gospel. We didn't preach in the Square place of the city, neither at any rich man's house; but only to the poor and simple men, who we thought would hear us without much controversy. Still many rich men and Musalmans too passed by us during our speaking to them; but none said any thing hard to us. From Phulpúr we came into Sikandra, and in the way we met two villages, viz., Chítúpoor and Chituralpúr, where we talked a little. At night we came into Sikandra; it is a large place, there are five hundred houses of the Kaiths and three hundred of the Musalmans; besides shopkeepers and other house of the low caste men. The people, when they heard that I was sent by Mr. Owen, became much pleased and glad, and asked why he had not come? I told them that he was in Phulpúr making an arrangement for starting a school. When they heard this, then they became very glad. I talked with the Kaiths about two hours respecting Christianity and many other subjects, several of them promised to come to Allahabad to see me. Besides this, I talked in another place, just near our lodging, about half an hour: here the people also became very glad and interested with my talking.

April 1*st.*—In the morning about ten, we came into Soráon; and in the way went into two villages, the name of the one is Dandipoor, and the other Daigalpoor; we did not talk here a long time, for the people were very few. In Soráon we talked twice, once when we were coming through it. We saw many images placed under a tree, and we talked about them. And then after our breakfast, we went again in the village, and talked about Christianity. At this time the people became much displeased with us, and wished not to listen to us more. From there we came into Háji-poor, on the way to Allahabad. I did not go in the village, but saw many people bathing in a tank, which was near. I talked here with the people about an hour, and explained to them Christianity. And from there we came into our houses, and found our families in safety, for which, let there be thanks to God, and for his care in the way.

MISCELLANEOUS.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

WHO MADE THE TABERNACLE?

The Tabernacle that was set up in the wilderness of Sinai, when the Israelites were coming up out of Egypt—who made it?

Did not Moses make it? says one. Was it not Bezaleel made it? says another. Just turn to the book of Exodus, 35th chapter, and you will find that it may be said that all the people made it; or, at least, that a great many of the people took part in the labour, or contributed materials for making it. A general invitation was given to all the congregation of the children of Israel—to whosoever was of a willing heart—to bring an offering. We do not read that any were compelled to work on the tabernacle, or to contribute the materials with which to make it; those who were of a willing heart were informed as to what sort of materials would be needed, and what kind of work would be required. If you will read from the fifth to the ninth verses, you will see what things they might contribute; then read on through the chapter, and you will see how the people became engaged in the matter; the women brought their ornaments, bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, and jewels of gold; and the men offered gold, and materials of blue and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, and skins of different kinds, and shittim wood, and silver, brass, oil, incense and precious stones—a great many things are mentioned. Then all the women that were wise-hearted, took hold of the work—that was the first "female benevolent society"—they did spin with their hands, and brought that which they spun, some the blue, or the scarlet, or the fine linen, and some spun the goats' hair. The men and women became so much interested in working on the tabernacle, and in bringing articles of different kinds, that the stuff thus collected was more than enough, and the master-workman had to request Moses to give commandment to the people not to bring any more.

By and by, all the work was done, and the tabernacle was set up there in the wilderness. No person had ever seen the like before; only Moses in the mountain had seen the representation or pattern of it. There was the tabernacle resplendent with gilding, and ornaments of gold and silver, with various parts of the work in silver and brass, and the richest kind of curtains, embroidered and fringed. Then the court with its pillars and curtains; and within the court were the altars, and brazen laver, and many other things.

Now, we may try to imagine the whole congregation of the children of Israel, going out to view the tabernacle when it was completed; and we seem to see them going around about it, and again and again going around, and within the court, and gazing, and wondering, and admiring. The children too, were there, and what remarks did they make? It would not be strange if certain of the women should notice the curtains, and the fringes on which they had wrought, and perhaps some of the girls could distinguish such portions as they had wrought upon; and when they came by the brazen laver, bright and burnished like a mirror, they were reminded of the materials it was composed of—of the looking-glasses or brass mirrors which the women had contributed. See Ex. xxxviii. 8. And, perhaps the little boys couldn't help thinking, when their eyes were dazzled with the silver plating on the pillars, and the silver rings and vases; they perhaps couldn't help thinking, "My ornaments were put into that; and the money, the silver pieces, I contributed, helped to make this ring, or this socket."

Now do you not think that, as was at first suggested, all the people may be said to have made the tabernacle and the court around it?

But what do you suppose suggested these thoughts? How can we tell? you say: then I must tell you. I was looking at a boy, an Indian boy, going from the dwelling across the yard to the school-house, and something seemed to say, Who is educating that boy? Who is educating that boy! Why, isn't Miss —— the teacher of the school? Then, she is educating him? No, not altogether; for there's what the children learn in Sabbath-school, and what they learn from the minister when he preaches, and at family worship, and what they learn from the different members of the mission, when they are with them at their work, and when they take them aside to converse with them.

Say then that all the missionaries at the station are educating him. Will that do? But something asked, That hat which the boy has on—where did it come from? Why, Mr. A. made a donation of hats and caps to the mission, and this boy's hat is one of them. His coat—where did it come from? The ladies of the Sewing Society in B., probably would recognize it, could they now see it on his back. His pants? They came in that well-filled box from C., where the merchants contributed materials, and the ladies made up the clothing, which the tailor said he would get cut without their having to pay anything. His vest, perhaps it came from D. And the shirt? very likely, it is out of the box sent by the young ladies of E. But those nice warm socks—where are they from?—a very essential article of clothing; and without which the boy's health in cold and damp weather would be constantly exposed—does he know to whom he is indebted for them? To that excellent old lady that is always lamenting that "there is nothing she can do to help on the missionary work," she made them; and I can't tell you how many pairs she knits every year to send to different missions; I only wish she could know how rejoiced the children are, when they get them on their feet, and how much real good she is doing every year; and moreover, I have very good reason to believe, that with almost every stitch she takes, she offers a petition for the conversion of the heathen. But the lad's shoes—how about them? Why, Mr. G., thought as he had not much "ready cash" these "hard times," he could take leather and make shoes for a few of the boys and girls at the Indian Missions in "odd spells" when he wasn't pressed with "custom work." A happy man that Mr. G., and he wishes others to be as happy as himself, and you may hear him singing "From Greenland's icy mountains—waft, waft ye winds his story," &c., all the time he is hammering the leather, and pulling at the threads. A happy man, and he'll not lose his reward. And there are other articles—as suspenders, handkerchiefs, &c.; then the books, atlas, slates, papers, pens, &c.; some of these are given, and some are bought with money, contributed for the purpose.

And again, the funds needed for the support of the mission—money for the support of the missionary, his travelling expenses to his field of labour, where does it all come from? It comes from many, very many sources. I cannot tell you of every place that furnishes water for the big Mississippi river; but will ask you to look on the map, and count all the streams you find emptying into this river; then the branches of these streams, then the smaller streams that form these branches; but after all, you will not know, and you will never know about all the creeks, and the brooks, and the springs, and the occasional rivulets, millions of them, that make up the smaller streams. And, very much in this way, the whole amount of the funds required for the support of missions is brought together. There are big streams and little streams, creeks and brooks, and some spasmodic torrents; the best are the perennial streams, though they be small, for they can be depended upon; we know we may go to them in "a dry time," and not have to come away thirsty. Sabbath-school penny contributions, Mr. A.'s and Miss B.'s classes, in Sabbath-school, monthly concert collections, societies and churches' yearly contributions, widows' mites, and princely gifts of the rich. Such are the springs and streams.

Really, a great many people are engaged in educating that lad. I doubt whether he is aware what a great amount of labour, and what a wide influence there is engaged in his education; or how many there are praying for him.

I don't know what that boy may become; but he may become a Christian, and be one of those of whom our Saviour says, "I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God," upon whom he will inscribe those names mentioned in Rev. iii. 12. You remember about the pillars of the tabernacle; how portions of them were laid over with gold and silver, and how this gold and silver was collected.

It is true, that all who become pillars in the temple of God are made so by Christ, for he says, "I will make him a pillar," and he shall have all the glory; and yet we cannot think it improper to allow ourselves to indulge a kind of satisfaction in looking upon a piece of work, and remembering that we were permitted to take part in the labour needed to perfect it. Therefore, when you—all you who are helping to educate this lad—when you walk around about Zion, to view her towers, her bulwarks and her palaces, you may then chance to spy this pillar—a pillar in the temple of God, polished and ornamented—a monumental pillar—a monument of the grace of God—a monument to declare the power of the gospel, and the good effected by such labours as you are engaged in.

FRENCH CANADIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

[We insert an extract from a recent Circular of this Society. Our readers will perceive that it is engaged in a work among the French Romanists of Canada, similar to that of the Evangelical Societies of Geneva and France, amongst the Romanists of Europe. Like those societies, it enjoys the confidence and co-operation of the Scotch Free Church, United Secession, and other Presbyterian bodies; and it is understood to be supported chiefly by the Free Church body in Canada. Its respected Treasurer, Mr. Court, has recently had an interview with the Executive Committee, and it was agreed that the object of the society should be favourably noticed in the publications of the Board, and that funds designated for its use should be received and duly forwarded by the Treasurer.—Ed.]

"The French Canadian Missionary Society was formed at Montreal, in 1839, upon a catholic basis, and is under the direction of a Committee composed of ministers of Christ, and members of churches of various evangelical denominations.

Its object is the evangelization of the French Canadian population, amounting to about 700,000 souls, who are, generally speaking, (though naturally intelligent,) kept in ignorance and Romish superstition, under the yoke of a numerous and wealthy priesthood. To maintain her sway, the Church of Rome has called to her aid from Europe the Jesuits, who, with various orders and fraternities of devoted partizans, are spreading themselves, and exerting an unwearied influence over the country. They are influencing legislation—extending their agencies into Protestant Canada West—and moreover, have their active connection with Romanists in the United States. By reason of large ancient endowments, of tithes, and of the power on the part of numerous corporations of Monks and Nuns to hold lands in mortmain to an unlimited extent, they have immense pecuniary resources in their hands. These are employed, not for personal aggrandizement, but wholly for the advancement of Romanism. They seek to control education, and so to induce a fanatical trust in Mary, and in relics, scapularies, and 'lying wonders.'

The means employed by the Society to counteract, under God, these mischievous influences, and to save the souls of the people, are,

1. Circulation of the Scriptures and religious tracts, by Colporteurs, and the systematic visitation of the people by Scripture Readers and Catechists.

2. Preaching the Gospel by Ministers and Evangelists.

3. Education of the young of both sexes.

Of the class of Colporteurs the Society has five devoted labourers, two of whom are from Switzerland, and three are from among the converts in Canada. Of Scripture Readers and Catechists, there are three in the field, all from France and Switzerland, and there will soon be a fourth. There are three ordained Ministers, who will be increased immediately to four, who preach continually the everlasting gospel with encouraging indications of the Divine blessing. There are five male and female teachers in a department of the work which the Society will have continually to enlarge. The male and female schools at Point aux Trembles contain nearly ninety French Canadian youth at present, a number which is likely soon to increase. There are two local schools in country places of considerable promise; and such is the call for schoolmasters that the Society is engaged in training several of the French Canadian converts for this important work. Although in a mission like this, the earlier years of its history must be devoted very much to preparatory movements, which in the history of this Society have been happily achieved in the formation of principal and subordinate stations, and in the creation of the important establishment at Point aux Trembles—yet it has not been without that positive success which affords encouragement to continued effort.

There have been rescued, in a greater or less degree, from the superstitions of the Church of Rome, and introduced to a knowledge of saving truth, as taught in the word of God, upwards of five hundred individuals, (including children); of whom it is believed that about one hundred have been savingly converted to Christ. These have either died in the faith of the gospel, or are now walking in various localities in the fear of the Lord. There have been more or less trained up in the Mission Schools, including those at present under instruction, about three hundred French Canadian young persons, whose whole destiny for this world and for eternity has been greatly affected by their connection with the schools. Large numbers of copies of the sacred Scriptures have been placed among the people, as well as many religious tracts and books.

But there is every reason to expect, under the blessing of God, that the next five years will exhibit results vastly greater than the last thirteen years have produced.

During the present year the Society has been steadily augmenting its corps of Missionaries. One ordained minister has been added, and the ordination of another will soon take place. Two schoolmasters have been sent forth from the Institute, others are expected from Switzerland.

The Society is effectively sustained in Montreal and Canada generally, as well as in Great Britain; but these sources of supply are insufficient for the increasing requirements of the field; and besides, Montreal, which has always done liberally, has been recently severely crippled by extensive disastrous conflagrations.

The matter is now left to the consideration of the disciples of Christ, whose prayers and contributions are earnestly besought."

EARLY EFFORTS IN BEHALF OF BOOK-CIRCULATION IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

No less than eighty years ago, the Synod of New York and Philadelphia, then the highest judicatory of our church, took measures to enlist the churches in the important cause of book-circulation. Sit lux is the motto of the Board of Publication, and the diffusion of light has always been a favourite object in our church. Let error veil itself in darkness—truth loves and cherishes the light.

At the sessions of the Synod, in May, 1772, a committee was appointed to draw up a pastoral letter to the churches on the subject of raising a fund for purchasing useful books, to be distributed on the frontiers, and in such places as were not able to support the gospel.

The catalogue of books proposed to be purchased and distributed, was very meager, compared with the present rich catalogue of the Board of Publication, but the books were all of standard value, and most of them are on the catalogue of the Board. The following is the list:—"Bibles, Westminster Confessions of Faith, small edition of Vincent's Catechism, Doddridge's Rise and Progress of Religion, A Compassionate Address to the Christian World, Alleine's Alarm to the Unconverted, Dr. Watts' Divine Songs for Children, and the Assembly's Catechism."

The Synod, in their pastoral letter, speaking of the book-scheme, say:—"We apprehend little need be said to recommend this last object to your countenance. The success which hath attended schemes of the same kind for spreading Christian knowledge in other parts of the world, and the very peculiar state of some parts of our country and the poor people under our care, render this undertaking at the present juncture both promising and necessary."

The rest of the letter, though of a more general character, is so appropriate to the times we live in, that we are tempted to give it without abbreviation.

"We think it our duty, at the same time, to call upon you to bewail the declension of vital religion; and while we remind you of your many civil and religious privileges—of the blessings of peace, and ample security in the possession of all the sacred rights of conscience, together with the faithful ministry of the gospel, which you have long enjoyed, we earnestly pray that you would not provoke God to deprive you of them, but to take warning by the judgments which he inflicted upon his unfruitful churches of Asia, Africa, and Rome, lest he remove your candlesticks out of their places. We therefore recommend to you frequent and fervent addresses to the throne of Almighty God for the Holy Spirit to be sent down upon his churches. This alone will lead you in the way of truth and life, and render our labours for your comfort and edification effectual.

"We recommend likewise a steadfast regard to the pure and simple doctrines of the gospel, which have been the powerful means in all ages of enlightening and reforming the world. And therefore we earnestly beseech you not to be carried away by any opinions, however specious, which are not founded upon the Scriptures, but in all things which relate to doctrine and practice, to be strictly guided by those sacred oracles of truth.

"We recommend further, that you would cultivate that spirit of love and Christian union among one another which is so frequently enjoined by the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, that it may appear to the world that you are not only one body, but of one mind. We exhort you in a particular manner to diligence and faithfulness in instructing your children and servants in the doctrines of the Holy Scriptures, an excellent summary of which is contained in the Westminster Confession of Faith, larger and lesser Catechisms.

"In the last place, we recommend to you a punctual attendance upon all the public ordinances of religion, and earnestly request that you would strive to promote that regard for the Sabbath—that reverence for the holy name of God—that temperance, sobriety, chastity, charity, humility, decency, and universal benevolence and love, which are so essential to Christianity, and so strongly inculcated in every part of the word of God. Finally, brethren, pray for us, be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you."

THE OLD MAN AND HIS BOOK.

A few years ago, there lived an old man in Rockland county, New York. When I visited him, the frosts of some ninety winters had left their hoary influence upon his thinned locks. His eyes were dim—the clearest sunlight shining upon the printed page could only reveal to him that letters and words were there; he could not distinguish them. This was to him a severe trial, as it cut him off from the privilege of reading his favourite book—favourite among human productions I mean, for the Bible was, of course, the best of all books to him, as it is to every true saint—"sweeter than honey to his mouth." Psal. cxix. 103.

The old man had also become dull of hearing. Memory, too, with his other faculties, had measurably failed—all but the memory of his chosen volume. The mention of that would at any time kindle a smile upon his wrinkled face, and impart lustre to his dimmed eyes. The old man seemed to live anew in the recollection of the book of his youth and of his manly years.

His pastor was with me when I called to see him. That book—I had almost said the book—was the theme of joyous converse. Its blessed truths, drawn as they are from God's own oracles, cheered the drooping spirits of the aged pilgrim. Some pages from it were read. They treated of union with Christ, that most vital doctrine of the Christian system.

"Union with Christ," said his pastor, as he closed the book, "union with Christ is a precious doctrine." "Yes," said the old man, his lips quivering with emotion, and a tear stealing from his eye, "yes, it is precious to me." "United to Christ, his Spirit dwells in our hearts—we are clothed with his righteousness—we hope for heaven, and we rejoice in hope of the glory of God," said his pastor. "Yes," said the old man; "yes, and we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor. v. 1. Union with Christ! Blessed truth! This cheered the old man of ninety winters, as his life was wearing away; this caused streams of joy to run through all the avenues of his soul, when external joys were fast failing him; yes, this gilded with glory his prospects for the eternal world; this dispersed the gloom from the dark valley of the shadow of death, and spanned that valley with a bow of promise, indicative of the clear and bright shining of the Sun of Righteousness a little beyond, and the sure and near approach of an eternal day, where no storms shall ever rise, and no shadows shall ever cast their gloom over the liberated, redeemed, triumphant spirit of the humblest child of God!

Once upon a sick-bed, the old man had been heard to be speaking; his attendants thought his mind was wandering; they listened, and heard him repeat what he had learned in his book:—"It is indeed a union of persons, but not a personal union: believers make not one person with Christ, but one body mystical, of which he is the head." 1 Cor. xii. 12, 27. Union with Christ was the theme which then occupied his thoughts; and it was a fitting theme. Upon what more appropriate theme could the old man meditate upon his bed of languishing?

"And what would you give?" said his pastor once to him; "what would you give to be able to read that book through once more?" The old man's countenance brightened, a smile played upon his lips as he spoke. "O," said he, "I would be willing to go without eating for three months!" So highly did he prize the treasure—such an estimate did he place upon the privilege of reading but once his dear old book!

And what was the book which had so deeply and permanently enlisted the feelings of the old man, and acquired such an influence over him? It was no rare and costly volume; it was a very plain book, but a very instructive one; it was Fisher's Catechism—"The Westminster Assembly's Shorter Catechism Explained, by way of Question and Answer"—first published in 1753, and recently re-published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, price 62½ cents—an exceedingly instructive and valuable work on theology.*

And how did the old man form an acquaintance with this book, and become so interested in it? He shall tell his own story, as I heard it from his aged lips:

"His advantages, when young, had not been great. As years increased, he felt a desire for knowledge. When quite a boy—some twelve or fourteen years of age—he had some ducks; his father was going to New York, and he went with him to sell his ducks. He had heard tell of a geography; he went to a bookstore and inquired for one, bought it, and came home.

"The book proved to be not what he wanted; and when his father went again to the city, he went with him to exchange his book; and, in exchange for his geography, the bookseller gave him Fisher's Catechism.

"Fisher's Catechism! He took it home, read it, and became interested in it. The Lord blessed it to his conversion, and he continued to study it. Indeed, he had studied that and his Bible all his life—from the age of fifteen till he was ninety! The study of Fisher's Catechism had given him a clear and consistent view of the truths taught in the Bible; half the pleasure of his life had been derived from the study of its pages, and much of its contents was indelibly fixed upon his memory.

"Nor was he content with studying it himself, and treasuring up its truths. He had often recommended it to others; had given many copies to his friends; and while health and strength and age permitted, he would at any time take a journey of twenty-five miles to New York city, just to get that book for any one who wanted it. And now, as the last sands of life were running, the recollection of the truths it contains were the comfort of his lonely hours; and, I doubt not, were the support and consolation of his dying moments; yea, those blessed truths are the theme of enraptured praise before the eternal throne!"

This narrative suggests a few practical remarks and observations:

1. How wonderful are the ways of God! A youth from the country buys a book. It is not what he wants, and he exchanges it. The bookseller gives him a religious book for his geography—he gives him a book which he himself regards of no value for one which is so regarded by the youth; but that book has a blessing in it; it proves the salvation of the one who receives it; he devotes himself to the service of God, and is instrumental in placing the same treasure into many other hands. In all this who cannot see the finger of God? It was he who ordered that exchange; and his purposes comprehended all the results issuing from it. We cannot see all these results, nor estimate them. One soul, we know, is by it rescued from perdition; but the results stop not here. Other souls are influenced; it may be, other souls are saved; and a chain of influences extending onward through all time, has its beginning in the reception by a country boy of Fisher's Catechism for a geography! And who can tell how much good may grew out of the many copies of Fisher, which the old man put in circulation? and how much may also be done by the copies which have been put in circulation in consequence of its influence upon him? for, I know, many have bought the book, who never saw the old man, nor ever heard him recommend it, but just because they were interested in the story about the old man and his book! Such are the ways of God; thus God works. "O, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" Rom. xi. 33.

2. How important to imbibe right instructions in childhood and youth! How different might have been the old man's life and history, had he received some other book instead of Fisher's Catechism! Had it been such a volume as the writer of these lines purchased in his first visit to the city, the old man might have lived and died an infidel; and instead of leading others to heaven, he might have taken them with him to perdition; for no man perishes alone. But rightly instructed by the volume he received, he lived a Christian, and has gone to glory, and his works do follow him; Rev. xiv. 13. Let our children and youth be rightly instructed, and they too, shall be useful and blessed. And for their right instruction no work of human author is better adapted than the book of the old man—Fisher's Catechism.

* The Board have published no less than 8000 copies of this book—a greater number, we presume, than were ever sold by all the booksellers in this country. This tells equally well for the intelligence of the Church and the usefulness of the Board.

3. How important to study and understand, as well as to read! "Many skip through a book like a child looking for pictures." So did not the old man. He read and re-read; he studied; he understood; hence the happy effects of his one book upon him. He also prayed. God heard his prayers, forgave his sins, united him to Jesus Christ by faith, and made him wise unto salvation. May this be the happy experience of every reader! Read to understand, understand to believe, believe to obey; and look to God for his ever-blessed Spirit, and trust in Jesus Christ for salvation.

4. This narrative illustrates the influence of good books, and the duty and the privilege of spreading them abroad. How much good may one book do! If but one soul is converted, who can tell its influence? And even where no soul is converted, new strength and new life may be imparted to some weary pilgrim in his way to heaven; it may sustain and cheer, animate and encourage, and thus have a blessed and heavenly influence! And if, reader, we can do no more, let us endeavour to put in circulation at least one good book, and follow it with our prayers, encouraged in the effort by the history of the aged saint of Rockland county and Fisher's Catechism!

From the Puritan Recorder.

A PRECIOUS TRACT.

"I have heard many, who were upon sick and dying beds," writes a colporteur, labouring in one of our great cities, "crying out in agony of soul, 'What must I do to be saved?' To one such man whom I visited, I read the tract, 'Come to Jesus.'* He was interested in it, and said, 'that just suits my case.' I besought him to repent, and flee to Jesus while yet there was time. After I was gone, he requested his wife to read the tract to him again. He became a penitent, and, so far as man can judge, was saved at the eleventh hour. Soon after he died, his wife was taken ill, and probably will not survive long. The same tract has been blessed to her soul. She loves to talk of Christ, gives evidence of faith in him, and rejoices in prospect of death. She wishes to leave a copy of that precious tract to each of her two children as her dying legacy."

*This is tract 107 of the Board of Publication's series—48 pages.—Ed. Bd. of Pub.

QUALIFICATIONS OF A COLPORTEUR.

One of the clerical colporteurs of the Board, thus summarily states the requisite qualifications for that important, but too little esteemed office:

"I find that a colporteur pre-eminently needs not only devoted piety and self-denying diligence, but an uncommon amount of common sense."

INTERESTING SCENES IN COLPORTEUR LIFE.

A colporteur of the Board in Indiana, gives the following interesting statements:

"Many of the poor people that I call on in my travels in Blackford county, say they would like to have some of my books, but they are out of money. Some days I have travelled and not sold a book. Many of them are new comers, and have built cabins in the woods, and are living in them without being daubed, with very little improvement, and entirely without any kind of books. In some of these poor cabins a colporteur meets the most hearty welcome. Many times I forget I am not in a palace. You may judge how it is when I tell you that I have not been charged one night's lodging for one year. I might give you many things of interest. In travelling through M——— county, in the forepart of the summer, I called on a young Lutheran preacher. He said he was glad to see me, as he wished me to visit a small congregation out in the country. I had been with some of them. I visited every family, and found every one a praying family, and all bought of my books. This little band of brothers, although they are surrounded with a most degraded people of all classes, kept up a prayer-meeting, and that in the country, every night, summer and winter, seed-time and harvest, and for some years continue to have three meetings every week. Often when I would get cold and lifeless, and feel almost as if I should leave the field through the corruptness of my evil and deceitful heart, and the cold reception of infidelity and Universalism, I would, in this lifeless condition, go to some of these warm-hearted brethren, and in the morning go on my way rejoicing. I will give one instance: After staying with one of these families over-night, the man told me of an old man about sixty-five years old, a very hard case—an infidel, who had been raised a Presbyterian. He wished me to call on him. Had I gone the day before, I suppose he would have put me out of the house, but this morning I felt above the fear of man—I introduced myself as a Presbyterian colporteur. I showed him my books, told him the object of the Board in sending us out, and showed him our Catechism and new Hymn Book, and told him how many colporteurs were in the field, scattering the bread of life, and some of the success of our labours, and exhorted him to his duty, as he was getting old. It brought up his early training; he was melted down in view of his departure from the truth, and bought the Confession, Hymn Book, and Catechism. I spent a very interesting hour with him, and bade farewell till the judgment of the great day, when the result of our labours will be fully made known to an assembled world. This is one of many such cases."

THE FIELD NOT EXHAUSTED.

A colporteur in Tennessee reports:—"I have visited nearly all the churches of Memphis Presbytery this summer, for the second, and some for the third time, and still find a considerable demand for books. Some of them tell me the books which they bought from me before, are hardly ever at home. Their neighbours of other denominations borrow and read them with a great deal of interest. I find that our books are generally well received wherever they are known."

A NEW KIND OF BOOKS.

A missionary, writing from India, says:—"Here we have no books but nature's own. We have folio mountains, quarto valleys, pamphlets in flowers, and tracts in flowing streams, and one sad volume bound in black—poor human nature. Here we read on every page, in every line, that this nature is depraved."

NEW BOOKS.

DAILY READINGS. Passages of Scripture, selected for social reading, with applications. By Caroline Fry. 12mo, pp. 290. Price 62½ cents.

This is a casket filled with gems of thought and piety. Like the holy book whose truths it is designed to elucidate and enforce, it may be read and re-read with undiminished interest.

PATIENCE. By James W. Alexander. 18mo, pp. 40. Price 10 cents.

This excellent little book was originally written as a pastoral gift to an esteemed friend, who had been more than two years confined to her dwelling by a dangerous, lingering, and sometimes exceedingly painful malady. It brings out the subject of which it treats with great simplicity and directness, and is well fitted to act as a cordial to a wounded spirit.

EVIDENCES FOR HEAVEN, written in the year 1650, by Mrs. Thomasen Head, for the benefit of her children. 18mo, pp. 101. Price 16 and 22 cents.

Mrs. Head was a native of England, but was living in Ireland in the time of the dreadful massacre of the Protestants there. She was disciplined in the school of affliction, and came out a bright scholar, qualified to teach others the way of the Lord in truth. This little book is rich in Christian experience and real heart-religion.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A part of the ministers and churches of the Presbytery of Elizabethtown has been set off by the Synod of New Jersey, to form a New Presbytery, to be known by the name of Passaic.

Lafayette College, situated in Easton, Pennsylvania, is now strictly a Synodical college, under the care of the Synod of Philadelphia, and Washington College, in Washington, Pennsylvania, is also placed under the control of the Synod of Wheeling.

The Synod of Missouri, at its late meeting, resolved to establish a Synodical College, at Fulton, to be called Westminster College, and appointed the Rev. R. S. Symington agent for its endowment.

The Synod of Indiana met on the 7th ult. at Vincennes, Indiana. The principal business transacted was the agreement of the Synod to the transfer of the New Albany Seminary to the General Assembly, and the renewed recommendation of Hanover College to the patronage of the churches, and to their pecuniary aid in completing the College buildings. The Synods of Kentucky and Illinois have in like manner agreed to the transfer.

The Synod of South Carolina, at its late meeting at Yorkville, have consummated the arrangements made by the last General Assembly for the re-union of Charleston Union Presbytery with the General Assembly. The Synod received the Presbytery into its connexion by a vote of 56 to 17; and afterwards dissolved both that and the Presbytery of Charleston, and provided for constituting a new Presbytery, to be called the "Charleston Presbytery." The proceedings on the occasion are said to have been highly conciliatory. The new Presbytery is to meet in the Glebe Street Church, Charleston, in April next. It will be remembered, that the Presbytery which has now been received, has not been connected with the General Assembly since the division of the Church.

The Rev. James M. Allen, late of Goochland, Virginia, has accepted the office of General Agent of the Virginia Bible Society. His post-office address will be Richmond, Virginia.

Varieties.

Christian Colonization.—A hundred families of Methodist Protestants are preparing to go out to Oregon next spring, with a view to settlement there, taking with them the elements of one or two new churches. They will take with them wealth, and the means of turning the wilderness into gardens and fruitful fields.

RECOMMENDATION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The following action was taken at the General Assembly held in Cincinnati, May, 1850, in regard to the Home and Foreign Record.

Resolved, As the action of the last General Assembly has resulted in the establishment of the "Home and Foreign Record," that paper is hereby recommended, and the Ministers and Churches are urged to exert themselves to place it in every family, as the organ, indirectly, of the Church, on many important subjects.

And in the Assembly held in Philadelphia, in May, 1853, it was

Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors to endeavour to increase the circulation of the "Home and Foreign Record," the organ of the Boards of the Church, in order that our churches may be better acquainted with their respective plans and operations, and be induced to contribute more liberally towards their support.

THE

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME IV. No. 1. | PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY, 1853. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

From the Episcopal Recorder.

"I SHALL BE SATISFIED."

Not here! Not here! Not satisfied! wherever Hope's joyous song is lost in sorrow's moan,
Not where anticipation's light hath never
On the fulfilment of its promise shone.

Not where the light from happy eyes is fading,
Where, on each hearth, the shadow of the bier
Falls darkly, every home with gloom invading,
And chastening love itself with mortal fear.

Not where so many cold, harsh words are spoken,
Not where so few may breathe love's purest air,
Where cherished ties are in a moment broken,
And life's long agony becomes despair.

Not here—where every dream of bliss deceives us,
Where the worn spirit never gains its goal,
Where, haunted ever by the thoughts that grieve us,
Across us floods of bitter memory roll.

Not here! Not here! not where the sparkling waters
Fade into mocking sand as we draw near;
Where in the wilderness, each footstep falters—
I shall be satisfied! but oh! not here!

There is a land where every pulse is thrilling
With rapture earth's sojourners may not know,
Where Heaven's repose the weary heart is stilling,
And peacefully life's time-tossed currents flow.

Ear hath not heard, nor hath eye seen the vision
Of light and loveliness beyond the skies;
Hope is forgotten there in full fruition,
And the heart vainly to conceive it tries.

Far out of sight, while yet the flesh enfolds us,
Lies the fair country where our hearts abide,
And of its bliss is nought more wondrous told us
Than these few words, "I shall be satisfied."

Satisfied? Satisfied? the spirit's yearning
For sweet companionship with kindred minds—
The silent love that here meets no returning—
The inspiration which no language finds—

Shall they be satisfied? The soul's vague longings—
The aching void which nothing earthly fills?
Oh! what desires upon my soul are thronging
As I look upward to the heavenly hills.

Thither my weak and weary steps are tending—
Saviour and Lord! with thy frail child abide!
Guide me toward home, where all my wanderings ending,
I shall see thee, and "shall be satisfied."

Mount Holly, Nov. 19th, 1852. R. A. R.

LIVE FOR SOMETHING.

Thousands of men breathe, move, and live; pass off the stage of life and are heard of no more. Why? They did not a particle of good in the world; and none were blest by them, none could point to them as the instrument of their redemption; not a line they wrote, not a word they spoke, could be recalled, and so they perished—their light went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than the insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die, O man immortal! Live for something. Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love, and mercy, on the hearts of the thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind, as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as bright on the earth as the stars of heaven.—Chalmers.

READING FOR STUDENTS.

The Board of Publication have in press a new edition of the late Dr. Miller's "Letters of a Father to his Sons in College." This book is written in the author's best style, and contains just such cautions and advices, as to the literary, moral, and religious course of a student, as every pious parent would wish to put into the hands of a beloved child.

We present an extract from the chapter on "General Reading." We regret that our limits will not allow a more extended extract.

"Let your general reading be such as is adapted to be useful. Think of the great ends of education. They are to form proper intellectual and moral habits, and to fill the mind with solid, laudable knowledge. And as life is so short, and the field of knowledge so very extensive, we cannot, of course, know every thing; we cannot find time to read all the books which are worthy of being read. Of the many within our reach we must make a selection; and that this selection ought to be made with discrimination and judgment needs no formal proof. The studies prescribed by authority for your classes will occupy, I trust, with indefatigable diligence, the greater part of your time. Need I employ argument to convince you that the reading destined to occupy the interstitial spaces of your time, not filled with prescribed studies, should be of a kind adapted to unbend, and at the same time, to enlighten, to enlarge and invigorate the mind, and to add to the amount of its valuable furniture? * * * You ought to be as choice of your books for what is called general reading, as the prudent man who is in delicate health feels bound to be in the selection of his articles of aliment. There is a wide range of reading, comprehending what may properly be called English classics, with which every educated man is expected to have some acquaintance. * * * To the list of authors of whom I thus speak, belong Bacon, Shakspeare, and Milton, of the seventeenth century, and Addison, Steele, Pope, Thomson, Young, Goldsmith, Johnson, Cowper, Beattie, and a number of others, of the eighteenth; to which may be added Clarendon, Robertson, Hume, and several more who have figured as votaries of the historic muse. In this catalogue I have forborne to insert the names of some writers greatly distinguished as theologians, because, however worthy of universal study, popular feeling does not generally require that they should be the objects of youthful study. But there are two works, even of this class, which I cannot help singling out as indispensable objects of attention on the part of all cultivated thinkers. I refer to Butler's Analogy, and Edwards's treatise on the Will. What would be thought of an educated young man who had no acquaintance with any of the eminent writers just named but by hearsay? True, indeed, a few of these writers are not wholly unexceptionable in regard to the moral character of some of their pages; but their intellectual and literary eminence is transcendent; and when read with discrimination and caution, the youthful aspirant to knowledge and eloquence may derive from them the richest advantages. The truth is, without an acquaintance with the mass of these writers, you cannot appreciate the riches, the beauties, or the purity of your vernacular tongue, or hope successfully to train yourselves to a good style of writing. In these writers, too, you will find a great store-house of fine sentiment, as well as of happy diction, adapted greatly to enlarge and elevate the mind, to impart to it the highest polish, and to prepare it for its best efforts. No matter what the profession may be to which you intend to devote your lives; in any and every walk of life you will find a familiarity with these English classics of inestimable value. No man ever heard Alexander Hamilton or Daniel Webster plead at the bar, without perceiving the potency of the weapons which they continually derived from their acquaintance with this class of writings. Who ever listened to the speeches of John Quincy Adams, or Henry Clay, or any of their noble compeers, in the Senate-house, without recognizing how largely this department of reading added to the richness, the fascination, and the power of their eloquence? It might be supposed, at first view, that the masters of the healing art could derive but little aid, either in practising or teaching their favourite science, from an intimate acquaintance with the best English classics. But the slightest acquaintance with the most distinguished medical writers and teachers of Great Britain, will show the egregious error of this estimate. And who ever attended the lectures or perused the writings of Dr. Rush, of our own country, not to mention others still living, without perceiving what grace and power this kind of knowledge imparted to all the products of his lips and his pen? With respect to the pulpit, I will not insult your understandings by attempting to show that the large and general reading of which I speak, is of inestimable value in its bearing on the matter as well as the manner of the instructions given from week to week, by those who occupy the sacred desk. In short, he who expects to be able to address his fellow men, in any situation, or on any subject, in an attractive and deeply impressive manner, without the diligent study of the principles and powers of the language in which he speaks or writes, cherishes a vain expectation. And he who imagines that these principles and powers are to be learned without the careful study of those writers who have furnished the best examples of both, might as well hope to "gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles."

CONSECRATION OF WEALTH.—It is estimated by Sir David Brewster, that of the free annual income of Great Britain and Ireland not more than £1 in £750 is given for the spread of Christian truth in heathen lands.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. C. C. Jones.

Assistant Secretary—Rev. R. Happersett.

Treasurer—Samuel D. Powel.

Address, Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut st. Philadelphia.

Letters relating to Missionary appointments, and other operations of the Board, including Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.

Donations and Subscriptions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:

J. D. Williams, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.

Thomas Moodie, Columbus, Ohio.

William Rankin, Jr. Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

The Rev. Daniel McKinley, D.D., has accepted the appointment of the Board of Missions, as their Agent. He is well known in our Church, and eminently qualified for this important work. For the present his labours will be confined to the Presbyteries of Northumberland, Huntingdon, Carlisle, Donegal, and New Castle, in the Synod of Philadelphia. His post office address is Chambersburgh, Pennsylvania. Pastors and brethren will doubtless co-operate with Dr. McKinley in every laudable effort to advance this important cause.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON THE NEW YEAR.

Reader! what impressions does this period of time make upon your mind? Does the record on high of the transactions of the past year awaken no fearful apprehensions? In the retrospect, do we see no neglected duties, misspent hours, or abused privileges? Alas! what cause for deep humiliation and fervent prayer! Again we are reminded of the passing nature of time, and of the necessity of working while it is called to-day. "The night cometh." Death is just at hand. In reference to many, the declaration has gone forth, as to Hananiah of old: "This year thou shalt die." What a solemn sentence! And in its execution how many and important the changes!

1st. All the pleasures of life will then cease. Life, although embittered by sin, has, nevertheless, seasons of comparative enjoyment. In the wreck of human nature, there is still some redeeming qualities. Corroding care may press upon the mind; incessant pain may for a time wear away the body; still there are intervals in which life is sweetened, either in the anticipation or in the actual enjoyment of pleasures incident thereto. But when death comes, all these cease. All actual worldly enjoyments—all pleasant anticipations which fill the mind and light up the future—all pass away. None of these can pass the "dark valley of the shadow of death."

2d. All sorrow and pain incident to life will end. This world is truly a vale of tears. From the cradle to the grave there are accompanying sorrows. As all are alike fallen, so are all alike under the penalty. All share the consequences in the wreck of human nature. Truly has it been said "that every heart in this world knows its own sorrow." Sin, and its effects are constantly with and around us. But the Christian pilgrim is animated by the delightful truth that with death all these sorrows cease. Grace has lit up in the breast of every child of God a joyful anticipation of the future. It has given a foretaste of the joys of the redeemed in glory—grace, then glory. "There shall be there no more death, nor sorrow, nor crying, for the former things have passed away."

3d. All means of grace will then cease. This is not only the day, but the place of probation. The little space is here to be filled up in preparation for eternity. Salvation is now offered freely. The Holy Scriptures are given to instruct—the Spirit of grace to renew and sanctify—the holy sacraments and Sabbaths for communion and worship—and ambassadors for Christ are sent to beseech men to be reconciled to him. But all these end with death. To the ransomed spirit in glory they are no longer needed; to the lost they are no longer offered.

> "In that lone land of deep despair,
> No Sabbath's heavenly light shall rise;
> No God regard your bitter prayer,
> Nor Saviour call you to the skies."

Solemn thought! Time bounds the means of grace. Death, to an impenitent sinner, would be robbed of half its terror, were it "all of death to die." But "the sting of death is sin," and its momentous consequences in eternity, where for it there is no redemption, is well calculated to fill the soul with solemn, and fearful apprehensions.

4th. All opportunities of working for God, in the advancement of his kingdom on earth, will then cease. In this work, brethren, we are individually interested and responsible. The Church has a solemn work committed to it to perform, and each member being a component part of that Church, is personally bound to do what, and all he can, to spread the knowledge of redeeming love. Souls are passing away year after year into eternity without a knowledge of God and his salvation. How many during the past year have died, to whom, with comparatively little effort, the word of life might have been sent! How many, at our very doors, have gone down to death without a warning voice, or a helping hand from us, to lead them to the Lamb of God! Alas! how many neglected opportunities for good crowd upon us to-day! Standing now upon the threshold of another New Year, we have a point from which to look back and reflect, and look forward and resolve, in view of the salvation of the immortal soul, by the grace of God to live to him and for him. "The night cometh when no man can work." Oh! the value of time. Who can estimate it? It is a solemn thought, that to many this may be the last year in which we may have the opportunity to work for God. "What our hands find to do," therefore, brethen, "let us do it with our might."

MISSIONARY WORK IN OUR LARGE CITIES.

It cannot be doubted, that there is a manifest awakening to the importance of missionary efforts among the ignorant and destitute in our large cities. We have all too long slumbered over this important work. That there is wealth enough, and facilities for its successful prosecution, with God's blessing, none can doubt. And that there are thousands, and in some of our large cities tens of thousands, who never enter the house of God, is equally apparent. Nor is there church accommodation for them if they were disposed to attend. Perhaps the larger proportion of them are foreigners, and among them are many educated German infidels and rationalists. They are constantly spreading in our community, through their periodicals, and otherwise, the principles of infidelity in all their various shades and forms. It is surely high time that our large cities should take measures to bring more effectually all these various classes under the influence of the pure gospel. As patriots, as well as Christians, we are deeply interested in it; and not only interested, but responsible. Do we sufficiently feel this? The subjoined extract on this subject we take from a recent "Circular of the Domestic Missionary Committee of the Presbyterian Churches of New Orleans." We would, had we room, publish the whole of this admirable paper. At present we give but an extract.

"Past experience satisfies the committee, that the often-tried and never-failing liberality of the churches is equal to all our temporal or pecuniary demands. This pecuniary liberality, however generous or munificent, is by far the smallest ingredient that goes to make up the elements of success. What is most of all wanted to give efficacy to the feeble instrumentalities employed, is a deep-seated, ever-abiding consciousness in the hearts of God's dear children, that while they are fed to the full with Christian Bible knowledge, thousands and tens of thousands are perishing around them, who might be brought to a saving knowledge of Christ, if each professed disciple would only pray and labour as God has given him ability.

"Christian reader! are your faith and talents in such lively exercise, that you feel prepared to meet your share of this responsibility? Does it not occur to you, that your influence may be scarcely felt or needed where you are; while in some of the feeble, struggling churches, or at some of our missionary stations, you might do an incalculable amount of good, where the light of your example would be seen and appreciated, while the genial warmth of your influence would cherish these enterprises into vigorous life?

"Are you doing all you can, or all you might do, with but a little self-denial, to forward this work? If not engaged already in Sabbath-school labour, or being unwilling to go to a distant district and teach in a destitute mission school, you can at least go to your own church, there take a class, and release some more self-denying labourer, who will hasten to help those who are toiling to sustain these missionary enterprises single handed and almost discouraged. Are you not willing to do this, or will 'all, with one consent, begin to make excuse?'

"The destitution of gospel means in large cities is awakening the deepest interest and solicitude of philanthropic Christians. While these cities have been expanding, and their population multiplying with tremendous rapidity, there has been no expansion of Christian effort or increase of moral means, proportioned to the rapidly growing necessities of these multiplied thousands. The tide of emigration is filling up our cities, and the voices of many of our devoted ministers are heard from the pulpit and the press, sounding the alarm, and exposing the folly and evil of that sentimental, fashionable religion of our day, which only aims at centralizing and building costly and elegant churches, where religion exists more in form and appearances than in power and spirit; where seats are so expensive that the poor are excluded, and the fashionable, cold, lifeless professors compromise with duty and conscience, by contributing a few dollars for Domestic Missions, Sabbath-schools, and Church extension, withholding their prayerful and self-denying labours, which alone can accomplish any permanent good.

"In this progressive age, while physical science and physical progress is achieving such mighty wonders, and every thing secular is pushed on with unparalleled energy by its advocates, the Church alone seems almost at a stand still, paralyzed from the apathy of her members.

"The startling fact, published in a late number of the 'Edinburgh Witness,' that, in the city of London alone, it has been ascertained that more than one million of its adult population attend no place of public worship whatever; together with the infidel tendencies of science, (falsely so called,) reveals the secret of England's exposure to the influence and power of Popery. The friends of evangelical Christianity have not possessed 'that goodly land,' which the Lord their God gave unto them; and Papal Europe has poured in her hordes of priests, until it may be truly said, that 'the enemy has come in like a flood.' The solemn enactments of the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, and the proclamation of the Queen, forbidding papal processions, &c., are disregarded and evaded.

"If we would not become a prey to similar influences, let us, in God's name and with his help, employ the power of the gospel; plant its standard, and teach its saving truths throughout our city. This will be greater security to us, than parliamentary enactments and royal proclamations are to the protestantism of England. Let the members of our churches in New Orleans arouse and labour, while our means, though limited, bear some proportion to the work to be done, and not sit supinely still until, with our population growing in numbers and more formidable in iniquity, our feeble enterprises for Christ's cause are engulfed and swept away by the rising tide of worldliness and vice.

"Let us, one and all, sensibly feel, that we are under the eye of a heart-searching God, and resolve that in his strength, we will do more in the service of him, who bought us with his precious blood; rightly employing the means, the time, and the talents he has conferred upon us.

"The committee might adduce arguments and present motives, almost without number, exciting the interest and co-operation of God's people in this great work. Leaving out of view the main object, (the salvation of sinners,) they could show, that the establishment of Sabbath-schools and mission stations in the destitute quarters of our city and suburbs, would have a powerful tendency to elevate the moral and social, and improve the physical condition of the classes to whom they were more especially directed; inducing habits of industry, economy, and temperance, and drying up the fountains of vice and crime, whose subjects fill our prisons, work-house, hospitals, house of refuge, and asylums. And that every one hundred dollars spent in preventing, would be a saving of thousands, now spent in the punishment of crime, and the provision that has to be made for pauperism."

PRESBYTERIAN COLONY TO OREGON.

The Rev. J. A. Hanna, whose letter we publish below, went out to Oregon as a missionary of the Board of Missions, with quite a large colony, principally from the State of Ohio. The colony soon separated, because quite a number of them persisted in travelling on the Sabbath. And here again we have the testimony of God's favour to those who keep holy the Sabbath day; for those who travelled on the Sabbath did not reach the Territory until eight days after those who rested, and were severely scourged with sickness and death, whilst the others were graciously preserved from both—as we learn from other sources. Their trials and difficulties however were very great, as will be seen by the following letter. He has now entered upon an important field of labour, and with God's blessing, may do much in planting our Church and advancing the Redeemer's kingdom in that important Territory.

Clatsop Plains, October 4th, 1852.

My dear Brother—My commission, accompanied with your letter, reached me at St. Joseph, Mo., in which you request a brief history of our journey. It affords me pleasure to inform you that we arrived safely in the Willamette Valley on the 16th day of September. For this special favour we would praise our Heavenly Father, for truly he has been merciful to us.

I have time at present to give but a brief sketch of our journey. A fuller account will be sent to the Presbyterian of the West for publication, which you can see. For a description of the route, camping places, &c., I would refer all emigrants to Capt. R. M. Walker's Emigrants' Guide. The guide is full and complete, and gives general satisfaction.

You will, no doubt, have learned before this reaches you, that our colony were subject to divisions on the Plains. Strange as it may appear, all large companies on this route divide and re-divide. We started with a company of eighty persons and twenty wagons; twenty persons were professors of religion, twelve of whom were members of the Presbyterian church. We resolved to be a Sabbath-keeping company, and this was the point on which we divided. A few of us were fully resolved to observe the Sabbath, but persons on the Plains generally become restless and wish to be moving even on the Sabbath. We had three divisions on this point. At sundry times three parties left us—each left on the Sabbath because we refused to travel on that day; the members of the Presbyterian church chiefly remained with us. Owing to these divisions we were so reduced that when we entered the Cascade Mountains our company consisted of eighteen persons and five wagons. Whilst in these mountains we had sore trials and privations—the cattle dying, the teams failing, &c.; this caused us to scatter and each one to travel as he was able. I had an interest in an ox-team which failed in the deserts, the wagon was left, all the oxen died except one; and at the summit of the Cascade Mountains my mules became so jaded and weak, for want of food, that they were not able to draw my carriage. I was obliged to leave it and all my goods in the mountains until I sent back a fresh team. They were left seventy miles from Oregon City. I walked this distance, the mules being so weak as not to be able to carry a rider. Mrs. H. rode on horseback until her horse gave out, after which she travelled much of the way on foot. We have met with considerable loss in the deserts and mountains; our carriage was considerably broken in bringing it in from the mountains, and since our arrival here we have lost a mule; yet we should be thankful and praise God for his mercies. Mrs. H. and I had good health when on the Plains, and are now quite hearty, probably more vigorous than we have been for many years. We entered the valley alone; the colony is completely broken up. I have been solicited to go and settle in Salem. I hope the Lord will direct me to a field where I may be useful. Soon after my arrival, I learned that Presbytery was to meet at Clatsop Plains on the 2d day of October. Not having time to go up the Willamette and return in time for the meeting, I concluded to come direct down the Columbia to this place, and found Brother Thompson in expectation of the brethren for the meeting of Presbytery. On Sabbath, 3d instant, Brother Thompson held communion in his church. I was with him on the occasion, it was a pleasant and solemn meeting. The little church appears to prosper; they have quite a missionary spirit.

I am quite well pleased with Oregon, so far as I have seen, and the people appear kind and obliging.

I would just say that it is my intention to devote my whole time to the work of the ministry; others have had to resort to teaching, &c. I will probably ride this winter, preaching at points hitherto unoccupied, and no doubt will receive little or no support from the people.

Means of subsistence here are very high. The following are the current prices: Flour $25 per barrel; potatoes $2 per bushel; beef 12½ cts. per pound; butter 75 cts. per pound; chickens $1 each, and eggs $1 per dozen. You will see from these prices that a family cannot live comfortably in Oregon on a very small salary.

There was a great deal of sickness and suffering on the Plains. We passed 168 fresh graves between St. Joseph's, Mo., and Oregon City. As to dead cattle we cannot speak definitely, they may be enumerated by hundreds and thousands. In our company there was but little sickness and no deaths. There was sickness and death with those who separated from us.

We have great reason to be thankful for our mercies, which were many and undeserved. Pray for us.

Your co-worker in the gospel of Christ.

J. A. Hanna.

ANOTHER CHURCH GONE OFF THE BOARD.

The following is one of the many letters which we are constantly receiving, showing the gratitude of brethren and churches for the assistance rendered by this Board. An unusual number of churches hitherto aided are becoming self-sustaining.

"Yesterday ended another year of my connection with your Board as its Missionary at C—— and I am happy to say, closes the connection of this church with the Board; from the fact of its having resolved to become a self-sustaining Church.

In order that you may see that the amount granted this people, by the Board, has not been wholly in vain, I will just state that during the six years now closed, sixty-six persons have been added to this church on examination.

So far as externals are concerned, their walk has been consistent, and we, as yet, have had no cause to regret their admission. If only one-half of these should prove to be the followers of Christ, and are saved from eternal death; would it not amply compensate the Board for the amount granted this feeble church? Yes; I know that every member of your Board would rejoice and bless God, if but one precious soul were saved here through their instrumentality.

In all probability, had it not been for the aid thus received, this church would now not be in existence.

The people here are very grateful for the aid received; they feel that God has thus favoured them; and it is their duty now, to do all in their power for the Board which has so generously assisted them in their time of need.

In conclusion, I would ask you and the members of the Board, to accept my thanks, for the kindness and Christian courtesy which has marked all your conduct towards me, during the long connection which we have sustained to each other. May the Lord bless you all personally, and enable you to press forward in your noble enterprise, until every portion of our land shall be brought under th sanctifying influence of the Gospel of Christ."

Yours in Christian bonds, M.

THANKFUL ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF A MISSIONARY FOR A BOX OF CLOTHING.

Such letters as the following are often received by the Board, and are well calculated to encourage our good ladies in their laudable efforts to administer to the comforts of our missionaries and their families. It was addressed to the ladies who furnished the box of clothing, and a copy sent to this office.

"We have just received a box of clothing, (the fruit of your liberality and labour,) in good condition, containing a good variety of useful and valuable articles. We thank the Lord, and we thank you, for this seasonable supply of our wants. These free-will offerings of clothing are of greater value to the families of missionaries than is generally known; especially to those who have large families.

I have laboured in this State as a missionary, for seventeen years; have assisted in organizing thirteen churches; have supplied at different times congregations fifty miles apart; have many times travelled sixty, eighty, and one hundred miles to preach and administer the Lord's supper; witnessed many additions to the churches, and precious revivals of religion. In all my labours and toils, I have been richly compensated by the full belief that our labours are not in vain in the Lord.

As it respects the five dollar gold piece sent to the "Minister's Wife,"* it was found as described; but the question arose, How shall this precious gift, from one whom we never saw, and whose name we should like to know, be applied to something precious as a memento? Scott's Commentary I had wanted for years; this therefore being something that would be of lasting use to my wife, to myself, and to our children, we concluded to put a little more to the gift and make the purchase, noting the fact in the book. The lady who sent the present has our sincere thanks."

* Note—The money was sent by a minister's wife, who happened to be visiting in the town where the box was prepared, and present when it was closed up.

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES OF ELIZABETHTOWN PRESBYTERY ON DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

The Presbytery of Elizabethtown have long felt the importance of reducing the work of Missions within their bounds to some kind of system. Committees were appointed to visit the churches receiving aid, and endeavour to make such arrangements as would relieve the Board in some measure of the draft upon it, which, however, is not as much as they pay into our Treasury. The following is an extract from their Minutes on this subject.

Resolved, 1*st*. That the reports of the Committees and the final action of Presbytery be based upon the following principles.

(a.) That no aid shall be granted to increase the salary of a Pastor of a single congregation beyond $400 per annum, except in extraordinary circumstances.

(b.) No one church shall in future be recommended to receive more than $100 per annum.

(c.) Except in peculiar cases; such churches as have received $100 for four years, shall be recommended for not more than $75; and at the expiration of two years more, the amount shall not be more than $50.

Resolved 2*d*. That it be deemed out of order for a church to apply for aid to the Board of Missions except through these committees.

Resolved 3*d*. That it be the duty of these committees to labour with the churches, to induce them as far as possible to sustain their own ministers, and endeavour to combine two or more feeble charges into one, where it can be done consistently with the interests of religion.

Resolved 4. That the pastors of our churches be enjoined to make earnest efforts to increase the contributions to Domestic Missions; that thus the really destitute may be supplied with the preaching of the word.

INTERESTING WORK OF GRACE.

From a Missionary in Tennessee.

Several of our Missonaries report a somewhat unusual degree of attention to the subject of religion in their respective fields of labour. Others, of the presence of the Lord in a very special manner, as in the case below. How encouraging and precious are such manifestations of mercy!

"Since my last report I have administered the Lord's supper in both churches. They were seasons of good to the people. At R——, where I laboured alone for four successive days, there was nothing very special. Yet the members of the church were much comforted, and stirred up. Two additional members were received, on examination. At B——, where also I laboured alone for four days and nights, (preaching ten sermons,) there was a most glorious display of the goodness and mercy of our God. We have been favoured, in times past, with many precious seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, but none equal to this late occasion. I have never seen the members of the church so animated and excited. The old, steadfast members, almost without exception, were filled with ecstacy and joy. None, I believe, of the non-professors, who were regular in their attendance, were unaffected. I received into the communion seven persons, on a profession of their faith. Before the close of the meeting several other individuals made a profession of their hope in the Saviour, whom we hope in due time to receive into the church. Many others went away deeply concerned for their soul's salvation. The light of eternity alone can reveal the amount of mercy bestowed on us on that occasion. To God's great name we desire to give all the praise and glory. In consequence of this refreshing, the people have multiplied their meetings for social prayer. In addition to the regular weekly prayer-meeting, in connexion with the Sabbath-school, they have appointed one for every Thursday night, and also one for every Sabbath night. The Sabbath school is doing very well, and effecting much good. A goodly number of the scholars were among the anxious, and several among the professors at the meeting. We are on the eve of establishing a day-school at our church, in which we will have the Scriptures, and their important matters taught. I intend it to be a Parochial school in effect, without the name."

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

CANDIDATES INCREASING ELSEWHERE.

Whilst the number of candidates in our own branch of the Church is not increasing in number, it is gratifying to learn that there is a perceptible increase in some other denominations. Quite a remarkable addition has occurred to the number usually received in one quarter by the American Education Society—as we learn from the Puritan Recorder:

"At the Quarterly Meeting of the American Education Society, last week, forty-nine new candidates applied for aid, and forty-six were admitted upon the roll of the Society, three having been set aside in consequence of informality. This is a very unusual number of new applicants for a single quarter. Although applications of this kind come in more numerously at the fall quarter, than at any other season of the year, the number received at that time seldom amounts to half of the whole number for the year. For example, the number of applications at the corresponding meeting last fall, was twenty-six, while the whole number for the year, was sixty-one. For the year previous, the number at the fall meeting was nineteen, while the whole number for the year was fifty-eight. For a long course of years, there has not been so large a number of applicants at any one time, as at the meeting last week. This fact would seem to indicate that God has heard the prayers of his people, and has put it into the hearts of young men to come forward in larger numbers for the work of the ministry. This increase of candidates is due to no special efforts on the part of the Society. So far as efforts have been made of late, they have been with especial reference to an increase of interest in the churches, in relation to this whole subject, so that there might be a natural basis for an appeal to young men to come forward. And there have been many pleasing evidences, that this cause of ministerial education has taken a new hold upon the minds and hearts of men. But God by his providence makes now a still more urgent appeal in the other direction, and we trust that the churches will not be remiss to their duty, but will come up and nobly sustain a work of such vast and growing importance."

ADDRESS TO THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

At the opening of the session of the New College, Edinburgh, Dr. James Buchanan made an address to the students, of which we find a report in "The Witness." The report will be read with interest, we doubt not, by students in this country.

"The lecturer stated that his address was designed to illustrate a few first principles in theology, selecting those which were of fundamental importance at all times, and especially such as admitted of being applied to counteract and check the existing tendencies to theological speculation, in a direction that appeared to him to be alike unwarrantable and dangerous. Many of the most insidious and seductive errors which appeared in their day might be ascribed either to the partial or total neglect of these principles. It was of the more importance that young men should be placed on their guard, seeing that these errors had found entrance to not a few of the theological halls of England, Europe, and America.

The first proposition he would lay down was, that the supreme and infallible authority of Scripture as the rule of faith, was one of the fundamental principles of theology. The learned Professor showed the entire sufficiency of this rule of faith in the matter of man's salvation, and stated that the principle which he affirmed rested on the doctrine of the plenary inspiration of the word of God. He pointed out the absolute obligation which this imposed upon all men to believe and obey; and contended that there was no rival or co-ordinate authority with the word of God. This was the stronghold of Protestantism, as opposed alike to Popery and Rationalism—a strong hold which should be resolutely defended, since any concession here would amount to a surrender of the very citadel of their strength, and which might be defended against all assailants, simply by making good two fundamental positions—first, that the Bible was in such a sense inspired, that it was really and truly the word and the oracles of the living God; and second, that, being so inspired, it was such a rule as neither required nor admitted of any co-ordinate authority or extraneous supplement in matters of faith.

He then referred to four systems of erroneous opinions at present prevalent; the first of which was, he observed, the most general and comprehensive form of error, viz., that of those who rejected all authority in matters of faith, and with perfect consistency denied that the belief of any definite doctrinal truth was necessary to salvation. This might be said to be the distinctive principle of the extremest kind of liberalism; and as its representative, they might refer to the late Blanco White. The lecturer lucidly and eloquently pointed out the legitimate consequences which flowed from this system of error—how it was opposed alike to the plainest statements of Scripture, and the dictates of a sound philosophy, seeing that authority was recognised in matters relating to things seen and temporal, as well as relating to matters unseen and eternal. He showed the necessary subjection of the human mind to authority in the volume of nature, as well as in the volume of Scripture.

The second system of error was that which ascribed authority to the decrees and traditions of men, making them rival and co-ordinate with the written word of God. This was Romanism; and in illustration of this system of error, he commented upon Dr. Wiseman's lectures "on the Principles, Doctrines, and Practice of the Catholic Church," clearly pointing out the sophisms which ran through them, and the manner in which the Cardinal evaded the general question. Rabbinism, he observed, stood in the same relation to Judaism that Popery did to Christianity, and said that if the oral traditions of the Talmud and the traditions of the Fathers were displaced, one of the greatest barriers to the spread of the gospel would be removed. In this part of his lecture the learned Professor clearly pointed out, that while the Saviour in general reprehended the use of traditions, and told the Jews that when these were at variance with the old Testament Scriptures, they ought invariably to be rejected, Dr. Wiseman adopted a course of precedure the very opposite.

The third system of error, he remarked, was that which made reason the ultimate arbiter and judge in matters of faith, or Rationalism, as represented by James Martineau; but observed that, from the length of the lecture, he was unable to enter upon it —a remark which was also applicable to the fourth system of error, the doctrine of a Subjective Creed, or that which placed the principle of authority in the inward consciousness of men of spiritual insight or spiritual discernment. As regarded the last branch of his subject, however, he referred the audience to two very able articles which appeared in the twenty-first and twenty-second numbers of the North British Review, on Morell's Philosphy. The lecture, which occupied an hour in the delivery, was of a most masterly and learned character, and contained a number of passages of surpassing beauty. It was frequently applauded throughout.

LOW SALARIES.

There seems to be but one sentiment, at home and abroad, among all denominations of Christians, on the injurious effect of stinting the salaries of ministers. The ministers of the Established Church of Scotland have been suffering of late a diminution in their salaries, brought about by some political changes and the peculiar mode of computing payment.

On the subject of the decreasing salaries, Dr. Lee made these remarks: "He would now ask the House to contemplate what must be the consequences of such a state of things. In the first place, it appeared to him, that ministers must lose their influence. They all know the passage in Proverbs where it was said the counsel of the poor wise man was despised. In the second place, they must become a body of comparatively illiterate men. This would very naturally and inevitably result, where no means existed of procuring literature. And thirdly, while every dissenting body in the country was making the most strenuous efforts to increase the incomes, and consequently the status and influence, of its clergymen, what result could be expected, without such efforts on the part of the Church of Scotland, but that Dissenting ministers must ascend in the scale, and established ministers descend? Were they prepared to allow a process to go on that would destroy them, without an effort at least to prevent it? Again, they were directing their attention to the subject of raising the standard of acquirement in theological students, their future ministers; and no doubt that was highly desirable; but how was it possible it could be accomplished if the scale of living was reduced to a point which rendered it not possible to admit of its being done? The most disastrous consequences to the Church would result if this evil were not met."

LINES ON THE DEATH OF A STUDENT.

Lines suggested by the sudden death of a student of Andover Theological Seminary, who had the missionary work in view.

I hear the call of millions;
It comes o'er sea and land,
It comes to you, my brethren,
Haste! bear a helping hand.

I hear the cry of millions,
Pleading for living bread,
Oh the millions! millions! millions!
Who hasten to the dead!

I hear the wail of millions,
From many a heathen shore;
Oh the millions! millions! millions!
They sink to rise no more.

I hear the shout of millions,
Descending from the sky,
The hosts of ministering angels,
To welcome you on high.

ON PREACHING AND THE END OF PREACHING.

Such a manifestation of the truth as tends to affect the conscience, is the proper and immediate end of preaching the gospel. If this is not the proper and immediate end of preaching, what is? Doubtless the chief and ultimate end is the salvation of men, in a way that is subservient to the divine glory. But how is this to be effected? Not, surely, by pleasing and amusing mankind; nor by flattering and deceiving them; but by instruction and persuasion. Men are to be taught the way to heaven, and to be persuaded by all rational and scriptural arguments to walk in it.

The truth really exhibited will naturally commend itself to the conscience so far as to gain its assent to duty and its dissent from sin; to make it approve of what is right, and condemn what is wrong. We are not, however, to expect that the truth alone, without a divine influence, will convert the soul; yet it will awaken the conscience, and these awakenings and convictions ordinarily precede conversion, and render it more probable that the subject of them will attain to the true grace of God; in this sense, the faithful exhibition of the truth happily tends to the great end of preaching, which is the salvation of souls in the way before mentioned.

It is by a faithful exhibition of the truth, that sinners are to be awakened and led to repentance, and saints are to be edified and quickened; and so the salvation of men is to be effected. A.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

A GREAT ACADEMICAL WORK.

The Presbyterial Academy of Palmyra Presbytery, though only a year old, has already accomplished an incalculably great work, as will be seen from the following report of the Principal, the Rev. JOHN P. FINLEY.

"Our Scripture and Catechism lessons are still considered the most important recitations in school. We have a free conversation on the portion of Scripture read each morning. Thus we have read together forty-two chapters of Genesis, and expect to continue regularly through the Bible. God has greatly blessed us thus far in our enterprise. We hang out no dubious colours. We are known as Presbyterians attempting to establish a Presbyterial Academy, and no denomination, so far as I have heard, supposes we are a set of 'bigots.' During the recent visit of God's Spirit in our church here, sixteen who were then, or had been students of the Adademy, were received into our church. Two others who then united, have since become students. For these things we thank God and take courage."

Who will not agree with us in saying, that the institution which, while advancing its students in secular knowledge, has been instrumental, under God, in nurturing sixteen in the ways of practical piety, has done a GREAT ACADEMICAL WORK?

GOOD INFLUENCES OF A SCHOOL.

A great principle, lying at the basis of all our measures for education, is, that religious truth exerts a salutary influence. Even when conversion does not ensue, within the educational period, the good results of the faithful inculcation of divine knowledge are manifest in a general improvement of character. The following Report from one of our institutions will be read with interest.

"These young men, with but one exception, I have known before they came into our school, and the happy influence it has had upon those of them who have been longest in, in a moral point of view, is so palpable as to be subject of remark. They have become staid, sober, and remarkably studious, which, from their previous history, is quite remarkable. A pious and widowed mother observed to me that she had noticed with pleasure the great change going to school had made upon A. B. and C. of our scholars, and she would not hesitate about any expense if her son (who was somewhat wayward) could be induced to go and do likewise. A few weeks after, he came, and already appears to be absorbed in his studies, and a different boy. I may say of all our scholars thus far, they are studious beyond what I have ever noticed in the same number. There are at least one dozen, who are now engaged in teaching, who were qualified for their work whilst with us. Some intend to return and prosecute their studies further, and are teaching to procure means.

Our scholars, if not pious, appear to be serious minded. They are punctual in their attendance upon the public means of grace, and manifest no disposition to shrink from religious instruction. In contemplating what has already been done, I cannot but fondly hope that God will, in his mercy, grant to them his renewing and saving grace, and that our school may be the blessed instrument in sending forth some at least, who shall in due time be engaged as heralds of salvation. Our more advanced class, I think all of them, design entering college.

The amount of religious instruction is as follows: At the opening of the school, a chapter is read from the Scriptures by all who are capable of reading well. This is followed by prayer from the Principal. This is the case every day except Monday, when this exercise is followed by a recitation from the Bible, on a lesson previously prepared. The school is closed by singing only. The catechism is recited by all the scholars during the week, but to most of them now it is familiar."

OUTSIDE WORK OF A SCHOOL.

A chapter, instead of a paragraph, might be written on the outside work of Presbyterian institutions. We design at present only to illustrate the fact that our schools are patronized, and well patronized, outside of our Church. They always have been, and they always will be, as long as they are good schools. The cry of bigotry, sometimes raised inside the Church, has very little response from sensible people who want their children well trained. As an illustration, read the following extract of a letter from one of our intelligent elders.

"We think the school is accomplishing much good. We have before said, and may repeat, we regard it as permanently established, independently of all the State may do for public schools. We will give you a statement of attendance for two terms, ending October 15, 1852, by which you will see that the school is able to operate outside the Church as well as in it, the Shorter Catechism to the contrary, notwithstanding.

During these two terms there have been seventy different scholars in attendance. Aggregate attendance, four thousand three hundred and thirty-three. Average attendance, nearly sixty-two days. Both parents of twenty-two scholars are members of our Church. Of six others the mothers only are members. The parents of fourteen others are Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists and Episcopalians. The parents of the remaining twenty-eight are nonprofessors, and none of them attend worship at our Church except the parents of five children. Thus you see we have an opportunity for usefulness."

WASHINGTON COLLEGE, PA.

The Trustees of Washington College, Pa., have agreed to the proposition of the Synod of Wheeling, by which the institution is to be brought more intimately in connexion with the Presbyterian Church. Dr. J. W. Scott has been appointed President, and the endowment of the institution will be undertaken on a liberal basis, mutually advantageous to the College and its friends.

The following official announcement has been made to the public, of the objects of the friends of the College in seeking an ecclesiastical relation. After some preliminary statements, the document proceeds:

"From the foregoing statements, it will be perceived by all candid persons, that this whole transaction partakes of the nature of a mutual contract, in which both the parties concerned are to give and receive specific advantages. Whilst, however, the undersigned are of the opinion that the state of the case, as thus given, will commend itself to the approval of the community generally, they are not unwilling to offer, more fully, some of the reasons which induced the Board to consent to this union with the Synod, for the satisfaction of those who may deem such an explanation desirable.

1st. We refer to the present aspect of the whole subject of collegiate education in our country. That serious changes have of late occurred in the circumstances surrounding Colleges generally, cannot be disputed by any persons, who are familiar with their history. Such institutions have been greatly multiplied, and consequently a ruinous competition prevails among them. Religious denominations have, for the most part, reared or adopted Colleges of their own, upon which their patronage is now chiefly bestowed. And because of these, and kindred influences, it is practically found impossible to sustain and advance such institutions, upon the old plan, in a manner worthy of the progress of the present age. In this respect, all are more or less similarly affected. Few Colleges—if indeed any—have escaped the pressure of these circumstances, and generally, they have been compelled to seek a formal connexion with some religious body, or to aim at endowment, in some other way. And this very fact is sufficient, at a glance, to show that the equilibrium of a fair competition, in the case of unendowed institutions, is destroyed, and that they are therefore left to maintain the contest on vastly unequal terms. Dickinson, Allegheny, and Lafayette, of our own State, to say nothing of many in other States, have adopted, with success, the same course which we have now chosen. In view, therefore, of this state of things, we may safely ask whether the rights and advantages of the whole community have not been consulted, in placing Washington College under the care of a denomination of Christians which will sustain it—the same denomination, too, by whose efforts, mainly, it has been established and conducted until the present time?

2d. The plan adopted, contemplates the erection of a still higher standard of education. Intelligent men have generally felt and deplored the want of advancement, in this respect, which has resulted from the crippled pecuniary condition of most of our literary establishments, west of the mountains. The salaries of Professors have necessarily been too low to command the services of the best qualified men. The libraries, philosophical apparatus, &c., have generally been too limited and imperfect. And a prevailing disposition, in the community, for cheap, rather than adequate education, has seriously retarded the spirit of progress itself. In enlisting more effectually the patronage of a church, which has always been distinguished by an enlightened and liberal policy in this respect, we offer the best possible pledge, that the instructions of our College will be both comprehensive and thorough.

3d. The religious influence, which will be thrown into the institution, under the arrangement now adopted, is deserving of a prominent place, in these considerations. That influence will not be narrow and sectarian, but broad, evangelical and liberal; yet it will be decided. The Presbyterian Church has a history, in connection with the management of education, to which, with no shame, we may appeal, as the index of her spirit and action. In mixed Colleges, denominational rivalries must necessarily hinder, to a great extent, efforts to exercise sufficient religious restraint, and to impart sufficiently distinct religious instruction. Even in points of common and practical agreement, and of confessed importance, there are tendencies, not apt to be altogether inoperative, to restraint and fear, when vigilance and fidelity are loudly demanded. And it is even a greater hinderance still, that young men so commonly come to a College constructed upon a general and secular basis, with the impression deeply fixed in their minds, that science is the only legitimate subject of collegiate attention, and that religion has no proper place. Under those and kindred influences, a course of study in college is acknowledged, on all hands, to be a perilous experiment to the moral views and habits of young men. Certainly no just efforts should be spared in counteracting, as far as possible, by all proper means, the power of temptations so strong and so multiplied as those which surround the ingenuous youth, who is separated from the guardianship of a pious home, at the most critical period of his whole life. What Christian parent would refuse to send the son of his love and prayers to a College, because special attention is to be given there to the kind and faithful inculcation of religious truth, a sedulous care is to be exercised over the morals of students, and it is made an avowed aim, to win their hearts to Christ; whilst at the same time, the conscience of each is left without trammel, in adhering to the church of his fathers?

4th. We are now naturally brought to the last point demanding our present notice—the relation in which our College is hereafter to stand to other denominations. We would indignantly repel the insinuation, that its doors are to be any less open, than ever before, to all persons of whatever Church, who may desire to enter them, for the purpose of receiving a liberal education. The charter under which we act, no less than sound policy, would forbid such an exclusion. Neither will the conscientious preferences of students, on the subject of religion, be disregarded, nor their liberty taken away. That the Synod of Wheeling, in taking Washington College under her special patronage, designed primarily to furnish a suitable intellectual and moral training, for the youth of Presbyterian families, is freely admitted; but we have the best authority to say, that all other youth are invited to come and partake of the advantages of such a training, upon precisely equal terms. The benefits of the institution are not to be confined to one branch of the Church of Christ. "Assuming the right to think and act for ourselves in religious matters," says the President of the Board of Trustees of Lafayette College—which is also a Synodical College—"we freely accord to others the same right, and no one shall be refused admittance into our College, or denied any of its privileges, immunities, or advantages, for or on account of his sentiments in matters of religion. The profligate, vicious, and profane, however, come not within this exception, nor can the atheist or infidel find a place amongst us. To all such our doors are closed." This declaration we approve and adopt.

Happy, ourselves, in the prospect which now brightens in the path of Washington College, and congratulating the friends of literature and religion upon the enlarged blessings which may be expected to proceed from it, to the Church and the world, we subscribe ourselves,

Very respectfully, &c.,

JAMES I. BROWNSON,
A. D. CAMPBELL,
T. M'KENNAN.

ZION SEMINARY, MISSISSIPPI.

The Committee appointed by the Synod of Mississippi to examine the fifth annual report of Zion Seminary, reported as follows:

"That it is matter of pleasure and gratitude to learn that said institution is still in a highly prosperous condition. The committee have examined the accounts and find them correct."

EDUCATION IN SYNOD OF MEMPHIS.

In the narrative of the state of religion, adopted by the Synod, the following paragraph occurs:

It was gratifying to learn that one of the Presbyteries had received by voluntary transfer, an interesting Female Institute, now in successful operation. It belonged to a close corporation, and the buildings, &c., of the Institute were worth $5000 or $6000. A proposal was made to Synod to receive another "Institute" in another part of our territory. This is also like the first one named, under the control of a close corporation, and is now in successful operation, and has valuable buildings, apparatus, &c. The establishment of a College, however, was the principal subject of discussion under the head of education. The members of Synod seemed to be of one mind, that, if possible, we must have a Synodical College. One member, and one who has some experience in collecting funds, said he had no doubt, he could for this object collect with ease $50,000. The whole subject was committed to an able and efficient committee to consider and examine the whole matter, and report to Synod.

DES MOINES COLLEGE, IOWA.

The Synod of Iowa received under its care Des Moines College, which had previously been under care of the Presbytery. We glean the following particulars from "The Presbyterian Herald."

A report from the Trustees of Des Moines College, together with extracts from the proceedings of the Presbytery of Iowa, in relation to this Institution, was presented to the Synod, and, on motion, read and accepted; whereupon the following action was taken:

Whereas, The Presbytery of Iowa has tendered Des Moines College to the Synod of Iowa, according to the articles of association, therefore,

Resolved, That Synod accept the same, and take the oversight thereof.

After some discussion the whole subject was laid on the table for further consideration.

* * * * * *

A committee of seven was appointed to make an investigation into the condition of the College, to examine the articles of association (or corporation) and see if any change would be desirable upon them, and to submit to Synod for consideration any measures which, in their judgment, would tend to promote the interests of the College.

The committee on Des Moines College reported, which report was accepted, discussed, amended and unanimously adopted.

[The prospects of this institution are now considered fair and encouraging. The average number of students during the past year has been forty-five. The Faculty consists of the Rev. J. C. Sharon, Vice-President and Professor of Greek and Hebrew Literature; Rev. J. H. Dinsmore, Professor of Mathematics and Natural Science; and Rev. F. B. Dinsmore, Professor of Latin and English Literature.]

McDONOUGH COLLEGE, ILLINOIS.

At the late meeting of the Synod of Illinois, the President of McDonough College, the Rev. Dr. FERGUSON, in behalf of the Trustees, submitted a report to Synod, which was committed to Messrs. J. V. Dodge, Stafford, Clelland, Reynolds, and J. G. Bergen. This committee submitted the following resolutions for the adoption of Synod.

Resolved, 1. That Synod have heard with pleasure of the prosperity which has attended McDonough College during the past year, and would recommend it to the patronage of our congregations.

Resolved 2. That the vacancies in the Board be filled by the following persons, whose term of office shall continue for four years:—Rev. A. B. Church, Rev. A. Coffey, and Rev. F. N. Ewing.

Resolved 3. That the request of the Board for an appropriation of $400 be approved; and that this Synod hereby recommend to the Board of Education, that they make an appropriation to that amount.

Resolved 4. That Synod regard it as important to the interests of the institution, that it be endowed as speedily as possible; and that it be recommended to the Board to employ a suitable agent for this purpose, or such other means as may secure this end.

WESTMINSTER COLLEGE, MISSOURI.

The Synod of Missouri, at their last meeting, resolved to establish a college at Fulton, Calloway county. The "St. Louis Presbyterian" gives the following particulars:

The Committee appointed at the last meeting to select sites for a Synodical College, reported, nominating, as suitable for that purpose, Richmond, Boonville, Fulton, and St. Charles; but advising that the location of the College be postponed until the next meeting of the Synod. The minority of the Committee also submitted a report, recommending the Synod, at this session, to locate the College. The reports were accepted.

Propositions for the location of the College at the places above named, were laid before the Synod. After considerable discussion, the following resolutions were adopted, under the operation of the previous question, viz.

Resolved, That Synod adopt the report of a majority of the commissioners, so far as to accept the nomination of Richmond, Boonville, Fulton, and St. Charles.

Resolved, That the roll be called, and that members be allowed to vote for any one of the places nominated.

Resolved, That a majority of all the members present be necessary to a choice.

The roll was then called, and a majority of the votes was given to Fulton. The vote stood, 32 for Fulton, 18 for Richmond, and 3 for St. Charles.

The Synod, after engaging in prayer, elected a Board of Trustees, consisting of eighteen persons, and appointed the Rev. R. S. Symington the agent to endow the institution on the scholarship plan.

RICHMOND COLLEGE, MISSOURI.

We understand that the Presbytery of Upper Missouri, not satisfied with the location of Fulton, have resolved to establish a college at Richmond, and have appointed an agent to labour for its endowment by scholarships.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, December 15, 1852.

China Missions.—Letters have been received from Canton, September 27; Shanghai, September 16; Ningpo, September 4. By these letters we learn the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Byers at Shanghai, and Miss Knight at Ningpo, after a comfortable and speedy voyage. The affairs of the Missions were going on as usual.

Siam Mission.—A note from Mr. Mattoon at Bangkok, August 19, speaks of the continued welfare of the missionaries, and mentions their anxiety to be joined by more labourers.

India Missions.—Letters have been received from Lahor, October 4; Saharanpur, September 6; Agra, September 6; Futtehgurh, to October 7; Mynpurie to October 7; Allahabad, September 14. The missionary families were generally in the enjoyment of usual health, and their work was marked by no special change. Mr. Campbell writes from Saharanpur, "I am happy to tell you that we expect to baptize two young men from the orphan school next Sabbath, and to restore to membership one who had been suspended for some time. Thus the Lord is giving us occasionally some encouragement in our labours, some first-fruits of a larger harvest." Mr. Forman at Lahor says, "We want another preacher. The whole Panjáb ought to be visited by a missionary, and if there were another man here, I should be in favour of one of us spending the next seven months in itinerating."—Of the East Indian school lately established at Agra, Mr. Warren says briefly, "Boys and Girls, above 40 and 20," which as to numbers is quite a good report.

Africa: Corisco Mission.—A letter from Mr. Mackey, of September 4, has reached us. This date is a fortnight later than was acknowledged last month, but there is no additional news of special interest.

Mission to Chinese in California.—A letter of the Rev. W. Speer of November 15, mentions the safe arrival of Mrs. Speer and himself at San Francisco. Their voyage was a very favourable one, and religious services were conducted on ship-board, which were attended with apparent interest by the passengers. Mr. Speer was able to enter at once on labours for the benefit of Chinese in the Hospital at San Francisco, from twelve to a hundred being generally under treatment. These poor people received his instructions with delight. And the object of the Mission was regarded with great favour by the community at large. After further observation and conference with the ministers of our body in California, the plans of effort would be matured. At present, every thing looks encouraging.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

EXTRACTS FROM THE JOURNAL OF THE REV. J. PORTER.

Influence of the Missionary work at a Fair in the Panjab.

April 6th—9th.—These four days were spent at the mela at Jwala Mukhi, which continued to increase to the last. Still it was not as large as the one held in October; that being considered the principal one of the year. The additional security, to property and person, afforded by the British Government, induces many to go, who formerly would have remained at home. On the other hand, the imperceptible change that is stealing over the minds of the people, detaching them from idolatry, causes a decrease in the attendance. As far as possible, with the few labourers we had, the Gospel was made known, by the distribution of books, conversation and preaching. Many listened with apparent interest; some seemed to be convinced; and one or two agreed to accompany our native brother to Jalandar, as inquirers. This mela's work is done; the Gospel has been proclaimed in many a heathen ear: the word of God will be carried to many a far distant town and city; influences have been exerted, that, like the pebble cast into the water, will continue to roll on to the edge of time; nay through eternity itself. In the evening, leaving Golok Náth and Qádir Baksh behind, till the close of the mela next morning, we marched on our way homeward, seven miles, to the Biás, which we reached just at dusk, crossed, and pitched on the left bank. . . .

Remarks on this tour, and on the Missionary field in the Panjab.

15th.—Having set off last evening at sunset, we rode all night, and reached home this morning about 7 o'clock, somewhat fatigued, but thankful for the kind protecting care that had been over us, and the many comforts that had attended us, during our two months' wanderings, but especially for the many opportunities granted of publishing the glad news of salvation. I have not been able to preach as much as on former tours. This has not been owing in the least to the want of opportunities, nor to any unwillingness on my part to embrace the opportunities afforded; but entirely to an affection of the throat, contracted while travelling in America and speaking on the subject of missions. I daily felt under the necessity of keeping quiet, and committing the principal part of the preaching to my fellow-labourer, Q. Baksh. With the small amount I did, my voice was taxed almost constantly beyond its strength.

The field traversed was mostly new ground. Nearly two-thirds of the march to Lahor; that is, from the Biás to Lahor, from Lahor to Guzrat, the farthest point to the north-west, and back again; and from Amritsar to the Hills, embracing some three hundred miles in all, are all regions over which the missionary's foot has not before trod. Here in many cities was salvation proclaimed for the first time. Here crowded attentive assemblies can be obtained, whenever he, whose "feet are beautiful upon the mountains," is disposed to publish "glad tidings of good."

Never perhaps in any former itineration have I met with so many incidental encouragements. The indications of the coming morning do awaken emotions of faith and joy in the heart. Notwithstanding all the sad experience I have had of the utter listlessness of native character, and the very little apparent success of our missions hitherto; yet I cannot but carry about with me the abiding belief, that if we had heralds of the cross sufficient to encompass the whole land, Jericho would not be gone round seven times, till the walls would "fall down flat," and Zion in her wonder, amazement and triumph, would exclaim: "These, where have they been!"

Present aspect of the Sikh Religion.

The Sikh religion is as truly a religion of the sword as that of Mohammed, and in some respects even more so; for all the religious rites of the latter may be observed where the head of their religion is not a military leader; but the Sikh ceremonies, in order to their proper observance, require that the religious head be the head of military power, and that power in the ascendancy. This fact needs to be understood to be able to appreciate the effects of the late war with the British; and to understand the present position of the country. The Sikh military power is gone, and with it the possibility of performing properly the religious rites which it upheld. This the Sikh feels and acknowledges; and in this respect the British arms, in two short campaigns, have done more towards the overthrow of this religion, than many years preaching could have done, unless extraordinary power attended it. Those campaigns have been the opening wedge. The Sikh power is crushed, doubtless never to rise. Their religion therefore can never flourish. Now is the crisis in their history. Now is the field white unto the harvest. Now, if ever, they must have the gospel. Would that I could make those young men, just entering the ministry, who are looking around for some quiet home, in the bosom of friends, hear the Macedonian cry; and that Jesus himself would speak to them with power, and put his own Spirit within them, to fit them for this field of labour, and send them forth to reap the harvest.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

A MELA AT SINGRAMPUR.

Occasion and place of the festival—Appearance of the crowd.

On the 28th of May I went to an interesting mela at Singrámpúr, in company with Gopeenath Nundy, Hánúkh our catechist, and four of our readers. Of this mela I intend giving you a description.

There are two festivals of this kind held annually, one in the cold, the other in the hot season. It was in the latter time that we went there. The Hindus believe, that this festival is celebrated in commemoration of the important (!) event of the goddess Durgá having descended from her heaven, the Kailásh, in order to visit her relations, on this day. The fearful heat, which we generally experience in the month of May, had become in a measure abated by some showers of rain which had fallen, and fortunately, the sky was cloudy, which made the heat at least bearable.

Singrámpúr is 16 miles distant from Furrukhabad. In itself it is but a village, but it has become celebrated, not only because it is situated on the banks of the Ganges, but chiefly from the fact, that close to a few temples a number of dirty fakírs with a Mahant or leader, have fixed their place of residence. Hence it has become a famous resort for pilgrims. The Mahant is known to be a deceiver and a hypocrite, and a few years ago narrowly escaped being sent to jail, on account of some wicked act of his; yet his success in feigning himself a saint, and imposing upon others, is very great; hence great multitudes flock to the place, to worship there, and to present offerings to the fakír.

We pitched our tent in a mango-grove, being surrounded by natives, men, women and children, all dressed in their best and gayest clothes, who together with their horses, bullocks, carts and carriages, presented the most motley and striking appearance. On walking through the different parts, and reconnoitring the mela, we saw not far from us a temporary bazar, or rather a row of booths erected for the occasion, in which there were clothes, toys, fruit, eatables, sweet-meats and other things—all covered with dust—for sale, spread upon the ground or upon platforms. Here and there swings were erected for the amusement of the people; and altogether the mela presented not so much the appearance of people having assembled for religious purposes, as of having come in pursuit of pleasure. I was forcibly reminded of Bunyan's Vanity-fair. The constant din and noise, together with the incessant beating of tom-toms, and the tingling of rude brass plates, which the natives call music, now and then interrupted by the discordant blasts of rude trumpets or horns, all this, together with the noise produced by the people's calling loudly to each other, has such a bewildering effect upon the visitor, that he scarcely knows at first what he is doing or saying.

Strange Scenes; hideous looking Saints; their pretensions and character.

His attention is now and then arrested by strange scenes. He sees, for instance, here and there two women, sitting or standing, embracing each other, one of whom is crying, or rather howling in a dreadful manner, so that really for a time you can forget the din of the mela. You naturally imagine that some distress or great affliction causes such a fearful lamentation, but upon your inquiring, you learn, that this is an expression of joy, caused by the meeting of a mother with her daughter at the mela, after having been separated for some time; and Hindustani etiquette requires that the daughter must first make such a howling, hanging on the neck of her mother. You then also can understand why these cryings are sometimes so forced and unnatural, for tears are not always so readily forthcoming as rules or etiquette would demand it. Another sight, and rather a disgusting one, presents itself to you almost everywhere by a certain class of men, that look more like brutes than human beings. They are almost, nay sometimes entirely naked, having the body besmeared with ashes; upon the forehead, breast and arms, some singular white, red, or yellow marks, sometimes in the shape of a curve, sometimes in that of a fork; the hair matted, or at least hanging down in great disorder, with a hollowed gourd in one hand and a pair of tongs in the other; a face bespeaking ignorance and vice, and eyes—if they have still a lustre—expressing stupidity, and yet slyness, greediness and yet contentedness, impotence and yet lust, independence and yet cringingness, with an air of sanctity intended to hide the expression of vice; they rather appear to be some infernal beings in human shape, or at least men that wish to appear as disgusting and frightful as possible. You inquire who they are, and you hear, to your utter astonishment, that these are Hindu saints or fakírs. You ask, why they go without covering, or nearly so, and whether they have no shame; and the answer of these singular saints is, shame is only where there is sin, but we being without sin, or having at least our passions in due subjection, know nothing of shame, why then should we put on clothes? But why then, you continue, do you make yourselves so filthy? Why do you rub your body with ashes, and mat the hair &c. &c., and they will tell you, perhaps, not only with the air of a saint, but also a philosopher: "All visible things of this world are vain and transitory. There is nothing beautiful and nothing ugly. There is only one really existing thing which is worth our consideration, that is the mind, and that mind, within me, and you, and every one, is God. Why then seek for cleanliness or external beauty in a man whose mind is absorbed in God?" You hardly know what to answer, but your wonder and astonishment knows no bounds when you hear, that these ashes upon their bodies are not common, but sacred, and why? because they are the ashes of burned cowdung, which with the Hindu is sacred. The horrid-looking marks on their foreheads, surpassed in hideousness only now and then by the marks that sin impresses upon their faces, remind you of the passages in the book of Revelation, where you read of the mark of the Beast upon the forehead of the wicked. Places of pilgrimage generally abound with these creatures, because there they collect often a great deal of money by begging. With very rare exceptions these fakírs are generally the offscouring of Hindus, and a pest to the community. Yet they have immortal souls, and also unto them the gospel is preached. Though they stand so very low, yet now and then we meet with a sincere fakír. During the twelve years that I have been in India, I remember having met with two fakírs of that kind, and these two became Christians. They are now both catechists, one in Benares the other in Tirhoot. Of these I shall give you an account perhaps at some other time.

But to resume the thread of my narrative. Continuing to push our way through the mass of people, of whom, by the by, a very large proportion consisted of women, the most bigoted of the votaries of Hinduism—we approached with them their most sacred place, where they bathe, and where their temple is situated; but here a sight presented itself to our view which is difficult to describe. Masses of people, men, women and children, young and old, high and low, are all crowded together on the banks of the Ganges, or in the river, washing themselves in the muddy water of the Ganges, (which has been stirred up by thousands of other worshippers,) now and then diving, and every now and then taking a sip, thinking thereby to cleanse their polluted souls; at the same time murmuring a few words or sentences from their Shastras, or the name of their favourite god. The passage in Mat. vi. 7, came forcibly to my mind whilst viewing this revolting spectacle. Here you see fathers with their little children, whom they, perhaps, with great danger and difficulty, have brought upon their heads or shoulders through the crowd, forcing them into the river, notwithstanding their crying and opposition; and washing and dipping them in order that they also may have the benefit of the heart-cleansing waters of Ganga. Among them there are a great many young men, who, while they appear to be deeply engaged in their religious ceremony, look about with a sinful eye upon other objects that attract their attention; for men and women are all bathing in the same place.

A great many of the worshippers bring some kind of offering with them; rice, fruit, flowers, cowries, &c., which they throw all, or partly, into the Ganges, giving the remainder to one of the Brahmans, who are present in large numbers. Intermingled with the people in the river, you see also cows, calves and kids, either standing in the water, kept by a man, or held in the arms of the worshipping Hindu in the river. These are also offerings; and the Brahmans take great care that the goddess Ganga may devour none of them: for whilst these animals are led by the offerer into the water, the Brahman, with an eye beaming with delight in the anticipation of receiving these presents, stands in front of them, in the water, waiting for the desired moment when its proprietor lets the rope go out of his hands. I have been told that the fate of little kids, at such times, is often not to be envied; and any one may conceive what will be the consequence, if, perhaps, half a dozen of such Brahmans, after the worshipper has thrown the kid into the river, seize it with a brahmanical grasp, each one wanting to claim it. One's attention is also attracted by another class of people, standing in the river, namely by the divers, who every now and then disappear under the water, to pick up from the bottom of the river, money which has been offered to the goddess as goopt-dan, or a "secret gift." This money, some Hindus, whilst bathing, drop into the river, but so that no one may perceive it; which makes the act very meritorious.

Now looking upon these thousands of deluded creatures, bathing, murmuring, offering, &c., all for the good of their souls, produces even in one who like me has seen it so often, a feeling of sadness, which cannot be described. And whilst feeling every desire to help them and lead them to Christ, our heart sinks within us, when we think of the magnitude of the work to be done by us, and our insufficiency. Oh for more zeal in the work and more earnest prayer, that God may pour out his blessing upon us! Without this all our efforts are in vain.

From the bathing-place we went to the temple. There we saw multitudes pressing into the door to get a view of the idol and offer rice or something else. We did not enter it, as we had often seen similar abominations. Close by the temple the before-mentioned Mahant or head-fakír has his seat. There, on a platform, within an octangular brick enclosure about a foot high, and under a red canopy, this wretched saint sits almost naked; forehead, arms and breast marked with the signs of his god, with an expression upon his face, which seems to imply, every one must worship me and offer me their money. Close by his side, on a heap of ashes, he has a large piece of wood, still smoking; and every one who offers him money, receives a little of his sacred ashes. Money was readily offered to him by the Hindus, who threw it into that enclosure. I heard from Babu Gopeenath Nundy, that on such a mela-day this fakír realizes sometimes eight hundred rupees, or about $400 dollars—a sum to a Hindu worth ten times its value in America or Europe. The man knew us already, having seen us before, and did not return one answer to our questions. He knew we were padrees, and that we were opposed to all his tricks and wickedness, being fully aware of them. Not far from the temple, standing upon a heap of stones, we addressed the people, who surrounded us in large numbers, and listened as attentively to our words as the present circumstances would admit. We distributed also a small number of tracts to persons who could read.

From there we turned homewards, but soon a new sight presented itself to us. Upon a small platform there were about fifty ugly-looking idols, big and small, placed where they could be worshipped. On one side stood their proprietors, four dirty fakírs, with rude musical instruments in their hands, playing and singing most lustily, at the top of their voices, in praise of their gods, to induce the people to present their offerings. The most zealous among them was a blind man. Before the group of idols a fifth fakír was sitting with a plate of boiled rice and a jug of water. Numbers of people offered their money to the idols, or rather to the fakírs, and received in exchange a few grains of rice and a small spoonful of sacred water.

Turning away from this disgusting sight, we all ascended a high platform close by the bathing-place, and preached from there, that not the waters of the Ganges but the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin. One man opposed us much, but was at last silenced, and we had there a good opportunity of preaching the gospel to a large crowd. After that we returned to our tent, and there with but little interruption we preached from 9 o'clock in the morning till 4 o'clock in the afternoon. When I became tired Gopeenath preached, and on his ceasing I continued, and so alternately. Our catechist Hanúkh, and our readers, but chiefly the first, assisted us admirably, partly by addressing the people, partly by reading tracts to them. At last we, all feeling tired, were obliged to cease. We distributed all our tracts, about 1500; and when at last we saw a good many people leave the place, to return home, and others preparing to do the same, we also left and reached Furrukhabad in the evening. May the Lord bless the preached word to the salvation of sinners and the glory of his name!

REPORT BY THE REV. J. J. WALSH: OCTOBER 7, 1852.

The Mission Church.

During the year, six have been received on examination—two have been dismissed to other churches, and two have been expelled. We have also lost one member by death, and another is under the discipline of the church. Thus you see we have had our joy and sorrows intermingled. In regard to those expelled, we would remark that they had for a long time given us dissatisfaction, as manifesting but little, if any, of real spiritual life; but we could not fix on any one particular thing, by which the discipline of the church could be brought to bear upon them. The parties are man and wife, and were at length expelled on account of immoral conduct. They have been for three or four years or more, employed by one of the Europeans at the station, and removed from under our immediate superintendance. This case, as well as other circumstances, proves that it is not advisable for our native Christians to leave us and seek employment elsewhere, and that for their good and the good of the cause, we should try to keep them under our vigilant care. We have already given you an account of Cornelius, the one under censure, and therefore it is not necessary that we give any more particulars, save that we trust that this discipline will result not only in his good, but also redound to the purity and spirituality of the church. It is with melancholy and yet cheerful feelings that we refer to the case of Elizabeth Maynadier, who died on the 5th of March last; she had suffered for a long time from consumptive symptoms, but her death was from another cause, and unexpected. Her infant child soon followed her to the grave. And we here record our tribute to her consistent walk and exemplary life. Our whole number now is ninety-six, and there have been baptized during the year sixteen infants. Our Sabbath and Wednesday evening services have been continued as usual and without interruption. On Sabbath mornings our service is throughout in English, and though intended for ourselves and families, has not been without benefit to many others. In the evenings we have had our services in Hindustani, with a congregation composed of our native Christians and servants and others in our employ. The attendance has been very good, and we think our people are increasing year by year, both in knowledge and consistency of Christian character. We have the largest native Christian congregation in Northern India, and cannot but feel encouraged by the contrast between what we are now, and what we were when the mission was established, a little more than thirteen years ago. Then we had a single missionary, with only two converts, and these from other stations, and no one of all this people seemed to care for the things which made for their peace: now we have four missionaries, one ordained native preacher, and a large Christian congregation waiting upon God in the ordinances of his house, and evidently anxious to honour him by obedience to his commandments. It is a pleasant sight to see our people, cleanly dressed, and with serious and cheerful faces, attended by their children, going up every Sabbath to join in the solemn worship of God's house. The day of small things with us has passed away, and we cannot but feel that our little church is as a city set on a hill, exerting at present a good influence, and destined to make a wide and abiding impression on the heathen population about us. Our Wednesday evening service, which is designed entirely for the benefit of our little flock, has been kept up as usual. The attendance on this service, though not so good as on Sabbaths, perhaps is better than that of week-day services usually observed in America. Mr. Campbell has commenced taking part in this service, and it is conducted now alternately by him and myself. We trust that our church will share largely in the prayers of our whole Zion, and in answer to those prayers our people will prove to those about them as the salt of the earth and the light of the world.

The Asylum and Christian Village.

The present number of orphans in the Institution is thirty-four—three having been received during the year; one has been expelled, and one, who with great reluctance was permitted to return to the Asylum, ran away for the fourth time. Seven couples have been married, five of whom are settled in the Christian village; of the other two couples married, one has gone to Allahabad, and the other is with our native minister, Gopeenath. The past year has been one of great mortality in the school and village. Three of the girls belonging to the Asylum have died, and three grown people and nine children of the village; in all, fifteen people. In this respect we have been much tried; but we are happy to add, that these afflictions have been blessed to many, and in the case of two of our young men resulted in their conversion. Of the three deaths in the village, two were peaceful and happy, and the other quite the reverse. Buldah, though not a member of our church, was, we trust, prepared for the great change awaiting him. He seemed anxious to depart and be with Christ. He has left a widow, and two very interesting daughters, about nine and ten years of age. His history is a singular one. He was one of the orphan boys collected in the time of the famine, and remained in the Asylum about four years, when, for some misconduct, being punished, he ran away, and joined the Musalmans in the city of Furrukhabad. He was taken by the hand by one of the most celebrated Moulvies in the city, and married to one of his slave girls. He remained in the city about a year or more, when he became dissatisfied and troubled in mind, and went to Agra. Not long after his arrival he applied for admission into the Orphan Asylum at that place, and was admitted to the Institution. He soon learned the printing business, and received a good salary as one of the pressmen, and was received into the communion of the church. About a year ago he applied, through Mr. Scott, to be received into our Christian village, as his health would not permit him to continue his labours as a pressman. Consumptive symptoms had made their appearance. He came here; lived in one of the houses of the village, and worked in the tent factory. But his stay with us was very short. In about seven months from the time he came, and after a month and a half of sickness, he died. Besides these deaths we have had a good deal of sickness, which has given us a great deal of anxious thought, and required a good portion of our time. Dr. Guise has kindly visited the sick, and given us the benefit of his professional skill.

The past year has been a very favourable one in a pecuniary point of view, and our profits for the year will probably be larger than ever before realized. This is in consequence of the very extensive order for tents by H. H., the Maha Rájah of Gwalior and his ministers, which amounts to more than 22,000 rupees. Besides these tents, we have received more orders this year than any previous year up to the present time. The making of tents has given us constant employment, and there are now eight or ten of our people who depend on this altogether for employment, and all the villagers with the exception of those engaged as teachers and catechists. The weaving of cloth has not yet been begun, because Mr. Smith of Chitaura cannot spare us any one who is acquainted with the work, and without this we cannot make a commencement. We feel anxious to introduce this branch of labour, as it will give our people constant employment, and can be carried on with very little capital. This department, or work of some kind, is absolutely indispensable. We must keep our native Christians under our vigilant care, and this can only be effected by giving them employment. Another great and very important object to be accomplished is, to keep our people together, and by the power of numbers make an impression on the surrounding heathen population, and this is the only means of its accomplishment. As our tent business must ever be precarious, and as of late other tent factories have been started, it becomes a question of importance how these two objects can be best secured. And having given this subject considerable attention, we feel disposed to suggest the following as most likely to secure the objects in view. It is proposed to take the lease of some large village, near Futtehgurh, for a number of years, and renewable for any indefinite period, and put our villagers in a position to become independent farmers. By giving each a suitable portion of land they could soon, and with very little assistance, acquire a more than competent support, and attain a respectable position in society. By having a missionary and a small church building in the village, their spiritual interests would be well attended to, and with a number of native assistants, the missionary could make his village the center of extensive itinerations. This would soon make a decided, and we cannot but hope, a most favourable impression on the neighbouring villages. The village, if near our station, could be easily visited when required. It would also enable us to give employment to any number of inquirers and others disposed to put themselves under Christian instruction. This plan has been tried at Agra on a small scale, and has worked very favourably. A number from the villages around Chitaura have joined the Christian village, and put themselves under Christian instruction. But what will be done with the present Asylum? is a question which may be asked. To this it may be replied, let it remain. We are likely to receive new accessions every year, and the number of children requiring education is increasingly large. The expenses of the Asylum would be so much reduced, that its entire support would be comparatively very small. It would, in fact, be a boarding-school, to which the villagers could send their children, and pay for their board, &c.

The school continues to be divided into two departments, as formerly; that of the boys and girls. In the girls' department there has been no important change in the course of instruction pursued, though most of the girls of the first class last year having married and settled in the village, it has become very small. The instruction is chiefly confined to the Hindi. The number of girls is very small, and the most of those now in the school are either blind or with some other defect of body, which renders study impossible. They are all engaged in knitting and other work, and those blind listen to the others when they read and recite their lessons. There is an interesting class of girls from the village, about twelve in number, who are taught by Mrs. Campbell. Being of the second generation of our native Christians, and those early instructed, we indulge great hope of their becoming a superior order of women. The youth are the hope of the Church in every land, and with us they are our peculiar joy. The boys' school, for the greatest part of the year, has been under Mr. Campbell's superintendence. The number of boys is thirty-five, who, in addition to the vernacular studies, have been learning grammar, geography, history, and the other important branches of English education. As all the teachers and nearly all the boys in this school are Christians, the influence exerted is of the most beneficial and permanent character; and as the number of children in the Christian village increases, it will become more and more important as an auxiliary in our great work.

But little requires to be said about the Christian villagers. Their deportment has been quite as good as could be expected, considering their position and advantages. During the year we have had an accession of seven families, including six children, and a loss of three grown people by death, and one woman by desertion, who, we are happy to add, was not a member of our church. The men are either employed in their fields or in the tent factory, and the women in knitting lace. These employments give them a good support, and it is cheering to report that all our people manifest a disposition to work, when suitable employment is provided. We find that when our people, both men and women, are constantly employed, that everything goes on very harmoniously, and we therefore have given out thread for the women to knit, though we cannot dispose of it as fast as it is made. There has been a Bible-class formed for the village women, which has been conducted by Mr. Walsh, every Tuesday. The Bible-class for the men has also been conducted as formerly. This is a sight never witnessed in America—the grown people of a whole village assembling weekly for Bible instruction—and a very pleasant sight it is. The Sabbath-school for children has met every Sabbath. In conclusion, we advert with a great deal of satisfaction to the encouraging fact, that our village people have commenced a Bazár school in one of the heathen villages near them. This school originated with them, and is supported in part by them. It was only made known to the Mission when the subscription paper was presented to us as individuals. And the cause of its organization is praiseworthy and creditable to them, as showing a desire to extend the blessings of Christianity, and benefiting one of their number. The teacher employed is a native Christian, living in the village, and all the books and instruction given will be of a Christian character.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

LETTERS OF THE REV. A. W. LOOMIS. NO. VI.

What is done for departed spirits by the Chinese.

From what has been said in the previous letter [see Vol. III., p. 172,] about the importance with which the Chinese regard the worship of ancestors, you may imagine, as is the fact, that it is considered a great misfortune not to have sons, who may survive, to present the accustomed offerings and worship to the manes of the dead. In China, a person without sons born to him, is regarded as extremely unfortunate; and to lose a son by death is the greatest calamity that can be suffered. Daughters are not valued, for the reason that their services are less profitable than that of boys, and when married they go out of the family, and cannot perpetuate the ancestral name, (for it is contrary to Chinese law for those of the same family name to intermarry,) or be depended upon to perform the ancestral worship. Therefore it is that in those parts where infanticide is practised, male children are spared, and females only destroyed.

With many of the Chinese, polygamy is adopted, in the hope of having sons. Others adopt boys. Some buy, and some steal little boys to bring up as their sons. We have known some instances in which children have been stolen from Ningpo, and carried off to other provinces.

But notwithstanding all these expedients there are many left without male descendants or heirs, and who die without leaving provision for the feeding of their spirits after death. These are provided for by charity. Each ward or street provides for its own hungry ghosts. It is believed that all who die without posterity are left without sustenance, or clothing, or money for necessary expenses, and must wander about in the invisible regions, or linger about the place which was their residence while living, cold, hungry, and wretched. The living are actuated not only by pity, but by self-interest, to furnish succour to famishing ghosts, for they believe that if they are not fed and clothed they may cause evil to those through whose neglect they suffer. One festival for their benefit is called seaon e, or burning of clothes, on which occasion they make a profuse display of all kinds of garments, or rather, of coloured paper, cut and pasted to represent in miniature different kinds of garments; also, miniature furniture and figures of servants are prepared of the same material. These are fixed upon strings along the streets, and left fluttering in the wind for a day and night, after which they are burned, together with paper money. Theatrical exhibitions are provided for the entertainment of the ghosts, and feasts with abundance of good things, could they eat them; but there is little doubt that the children and beggars that scramble for the cakes and fruit, after the feasting time for the spirits is over, find that very little of the substantial part has been carried off by them.

Buddhist priests are employed on this occasion, who, by their prayers, profess to obtain, for such souls as are in purgatory, a temporary release, that they may come forth to enjoy a holiday, and receive their share of the food, clothing, and money, etc.

Once when at Canton we witnessed the festival called Ta tseau, it was for the same purpose as that above described. It occurred some time during the month of November, and the display surpassed anything of the kind we had witnessed in other parts of China. Silk and cotton goods of brilliant colours were hung in festoons along the narrow streets; many stagings were erected over the streets on which were arranged small images of men and women, to represent persons of different offices and occupations. Houses were erected of bamboo poles, very high, covered with matting, and the inside adorned with scenery, very well executed, to illustrate certain portions of Chinese history. Glass lamps with lustres, and painted lanterns, of all forms and sizes, were hung near together, and when lighted at night the effect was gorgeous. There were stagings for theatrical performances, others for bands of music, or for the feasts designed for the spirits, where also the priests rehearsed their prayers. After one street had enjoyed this exhibition for a day or two, everything was taken down and moved on to the next street, and put up in the same manner as before; the shopkeepers and occupants of the houses defraying the expense by contributions.

The ancestral tablets of extinct families are not neglected. In each district provision is made by yearly subscriptions, or by a fund established by charity, for providing a place in which such tablets are deposited, and for hiring a person to serve them. In most cases a small temple is built for this express purpose; but in some places a hall in one of the monasteries is obtained, where these tablets are placed, and the monastery paid for furnishing the officiating priest, with the incense, candles, and other offerings.

Besides the annual and semi-annual visits to the tombs, women go alone to wail by the side of the grave of a deceased husband; and this they do monthly or quarterly, on the day of the month on which his death took place. As they suppose the spirit of the dead is in or about the grave, they believe he hears their cries, witnesses their tears and grief, and can exert some influence for their good in answer to the prayers they address to him. With sobs and bitter lamentations they tell over their griefs, and supplicate for some mitigation of their misery. These scenes, though we frequently witness them, are very painful to behold; for the weeping is not always feigned. They indeed howl, wring their hands, and tear their hair. Poor creatures! who does not pity them? Vain are their prayers, and unavailing their grief. Oh that they knew of Him who once mingled his sorrows with the family of Bethany; and who still proclaims, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die." "Believest thou this?" Yes, reader, believest thou this? Then how long shall those widows, in whose behalf I here appeal to you, how long shall they be ignorant of Him who came to bind up the broken heart?

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA AS A MISSION FIELD.

Proposed Missions.

We invite the attention of our readers to the following "Report of a special committee of the Foreign Committee [of the Episcopal Board of Missions] in relation to a proposed mission to Central America." It will be found to contain useful information concerning a region with which we are becoming intimately connected, and its views of Christian duty will commend themselves to the friends of the missionary work.

Here we deem it expedient to recall the attention of our readers to a paragraph in the last Annual Report of our own Board, on page 61. "The Committee have devoted a large share of their attention to the establishment of missions among some of the Roman Catholic States of our own continent. Their plans embraced the appointment of missionaries at several places on the borders of Mexico, and in the South American States. It is with regret they have to report, however, that no missionaries have yet been obtained for these new fields. One excellent minister, under appointment, was constrained finally to decline the service by the state of his health."

It was not deemed expedient, at the time, to publish the details of the measures contemplated by the Committee; their publication might have embarrassed the object in view. Nor do we design at present to furnish these details. But we may state now, without impropriety, that the respected minister spoken of as "under appointment," was designated more than a year ago to Panama; and that the leading design of his mission had reference to the native or New Granadian population, though his duties in the first instance would have been chiefly amongst our countrymen, at Panama and on the Isthmus.

The Committee have not relinquished the design of forming missions in this and other interesting fields on our own Continent. And we hope the insertion of this valuable paper will turn the minds of our readers with greater interest to this subject. What is most needed for establishing such missions, is men of the right kind—men of prudence, energy, and piety, and of health equal to the demands of tropical climates. In answer to prayer, such men will be raised up, and the funds provided for their support.

The Sub-Committee, to whom was submitted the project of a mission to the countries bordering upon the Isthmus of Panama, and to the Isthmus, respectfully report:

The Isthmus of Panama is the north-western province of New Granada, which is the north-western State of South America. Central America bounds the Isthmus on the north. The principal towns in the Isthmus are Panama, on the Gulf of Panama or the Pacific Ocean, and Aspinwall, on the Caribbean Sea or the Atlantic Ocean.

The population of the Isthmus is a mixed race. The proportion of white Spaniards is, probably, not one-third. There are a few Indians. The bulk of the inhabitants are mulatto, white, and negro. It is supposed that the Indian race was rapidly exhausted by the mining operations, and their place supplied by an importation of Africans, from whom the present population has in a great measure descended.

As might be supposed, the preponderating traits of character are African. There is great ignorance, superstition, and animalism. Nevertheless, the infusion of Spanish blood elevates them above the low type of the African race. They appear to have a desire for improvement, and considerable aptitude for receiving instruction. Many exhibit very fair intelligence. The natives who labour on the railroad are quite as capable as the usual run of labouring men; in many instances have been raised to positions of responsibility, requiring skill, tact, and ingenuity. Many of them exhibit a desire to learn to read and write; some have acquired both. Many are inquiring for and anxious to receive books.

Similar remarks probably apply to the condition of Central America. If there is any difference between the two, the condition of the Isthmus and New Granada is the most favourable.

The whole of these countries are under the influence of the Roman Catholic Church, and to it are owing the grievous ignorance and degradation, and the entire want of all true religion, under which the people exist. The small intelligent portion of the people are becoming infidel. The great mass is in the lowest degree superstitious, idolatrous, and given to ceremonials and formalities. The condition of the priesthood is lamentable.

Such a state of religion among the teachers could consist only with the deepest degradation among the people, and the absence of all true knowledge of God. The amount of religion among the natives at work upon the railroad, is observed to be their attention to feast days as days of idleness; even these observances are, in many cases, neglected, since it is found that the company pay for labouring upon festivals. Fast days are not much observed. They are fond of ceremonials and processions. An eye-witness informed your Committee of a circumstance illustrative of this fact. He was sitting with a distinguished native officer on Palm Sunday, when a procession passed, illustrating Christ's entrance into Jerusalem. A negro boy mounted on an ass, bedizened with silver paper stars, and surrounded by an admiring crowd, personated the Saviour of the world. His friend (himself a Romanist) remarked, that he had not seen such religious degradation as exists in that country even in Italy.

As was to be expected, this religious condition has aroused the attention of the more intelligent few. The party now in power in New Granada has arisen upon the ruin of the Jesuits, and is decidedly anti-Roman Catholic, and will afford every reasonable facility for Protestant missionary effort.

A similar spirit of religious improvement is being awakened in other parts of South America. At Valparaiso, on the occasion of a dinner given to the President of Chili, a gentleman from Buenos Ayres offered a sentiment in favour of religious freedom. He said (so it is stated) that since the people were so much indebted to foreigners for improvements in physical condition, the least return would be, to allow foreigners full liberty of worshipping God according to the dictates of their own consciences. The correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser, from which paper we extract the account, proceeds:

"He was right. This is the heavy and depressing load which rests upon and retards this and all the South American nations. The priests are for the greater part illiterate and morally disqualified. And if the people are by law shut up to the miserable religious nutriment which such teachers are able to impart, it is but little better than being shut up to a moral starvation. It is a thousand pities that these people cannot come into a closer contact on this subject with the great North American heart, as it throbs with the sentiment of respect for the fullest freedom in matters of religious belief and practice."

The annunciation of such a sentiment, and the forbearance with which it was received, especially when the character of the audience is considered, is a very encouraging sign. It seems to indicate that before long the influence of the Protestant commercial enterprise of the Anglo-Saxon race will, under Divine guidance and blessing, open stand-points for the faith in the darkest places of the South American continent; portions of the great field which have been left by true Christianity for ages as entirely impracticable.

In the mean while, no obstacle opposes such missionary effort in the Isthmus of Panama. The government, it is supposed, will favour the scheme. At present, the Roman Catholic Church have no ministry labouring there.

But another element is being rapidly infused into the character of the population, not only of the Isthmus, New Granada and Central America, but of the western coast of South America. The immigration from the United States is great. Most pass through to California, but many remain; and many from various causes are scattered through the neighbouring country. The features of character of this more powerful race must necessarily be impressed upon the weaker, either for good or evil.

The American population of the Isthmus is already several thousand. Two thousand passengers may be said to be at all times on the Isthmus. The wayfarers, as well as those who have settled there, especially need the ministrations of the gospel.

The question now occurs, whether it be the present duty of the Foreign Committee to commence missionary operations in this part of the world.

Obvious considerations—such as the pressing need that this immense field should be opened to the gospel; the fact that it is consigned to our Committee, and the contemplation of their worse than heathen condition, appear to answer this question in the affirmative; and when combined with the statements already made, and some which we proceed to offer, will, we think, incline the Committee to conclude that the time for such missionary effort has fully come.

Having in view, and keeping distinctly before our minds, the ultimate purpose of direct missionary labour among the natives of South America, it appears to us, that the most effectual method of resolving that result will be to establish the Protestant Episcopal Church on the Isthmus of Panama.

In the first place, it would serve as a point of observation. An intelligent and judicious missionary there, coming into immediate contact with the natives, would soon be able to form intelligent and judicious plans for our missionary work. At this distance, and with our very limited knowledge, we are incapable of forming such designs with the necessary minuteness.

Again—The Isthmus must always be the central point of southern and perhaps western oceanic Missions. From this point direct communication, as it is established with America, North and West, will soon be opened with the Sandwich Islands and China, and with the various ports along the western coast of South America. A line of steamers has already commenced to run fortnightly, between Panama and Valparaiso.

Again—From the Isthmus a missionary can have direct communication with the interior of New Granada. The workmen on the railroad are all from the central districts of New Granada, generally numbering from 600 to 700. None of these become settlers, but after making a little money return to their homes. Consequently, missionary influence upon them will be readily felt in their (at present) not easily accessible country.

Again—It will not be difficult for a missionary in the Isthmus to reach Central America.

Having well established ourselves at such a central post, we can readily extend operations in any direction which seems advisable, keeping there a point of observation and communication.

Besides—the Americans in the Isthmus very much desire the services of religion: and we do not know by what article of our Constitution, or rule of the Foreign Committee, they are excluded from our sympathies or charity. Certainly the gospel teaches us to preach the glad tidings to every creature; and our Constitution uses the terms Foreign and Domestic, as terms of convenience, not to divide the heathen from the Christian lands. Those brethren who have gone out from the blessings of Christianity can look to no other friends than our Committee.

There are two points which might well be occupied as missionary stations, Panama and Aspinwall.

Panama has a population of about ten thousand, a very small number being white. The Roman Catholic Church being established, although at present no services are held, their Cathedral may be expected to be re-opened immediately on the appointment of the first Protestant missionaries. Although it is probable that no obstacle would be thrown in the way of our efforts, we should not have any further immediate assistance, than partial aid towards the salary of a clergyman. It has been stated with probability that $1500 could be raised among the residents in Panama for the purpose of supporting a minister.

Aspinwall is now much smaller, but is destined to be the important place on the route of the railroad. Its population is two thousand, and is rapidly increasing. It is built on an island, which is based on a coral rock. Its climate is delicious. It is healthy. The municipal regulations of an American town will (it is hoped) under Providence, save it from many of the evils which afflict other tropical cities. There are no water-courses to deposit at their mouths what originates miasmata.

Certain gentlemen are willing to build a church and parsonage and it is confidently stated that the inhabitants will liberally support an efficient, useful man. No guarantee can be given, but there seems no reasonable doubt that if the proper man can be found in six months after his landing, the Foreign Committee will be relieved of his support.

If we are not prepared to establish both stations, that at Panama would almost necessarily and speedily arise from that at Aspinwall.

Your Committee do not hesitate to recommend that the Foreign Committee take immediate advantage of this opening.

From the testimony before us, your Committee think that a married missionary would be more influential than an unmarried one. They judge that if a parsonage would be provided, $1500 would support him. They suppose that a man wholly devoted to his work, of high moral tone of character, and possessing fair talents as a preacher, is wanted; and that any less qualifications would fail of success. They suggest that the minister's wife, in connection, perhaps, with another teacher, might take charge of a school, which would form one of the most influential modes of forming the character of the new people.

Your Committee recommend the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in dependence upon Almighty God, the Foreign Committee will take immediate steps for the commencement of a Mission to Central and South America.

Resolved, That the town of Aspinwall, on the Isthmus of Panama, be adopted as the first station.

Resolved, That the Committee will take immediate steps to send to that part, as soon as practicable, a well qualified missionary.

Resolved, That information of this purpose be given to the Panama Rail-road Company, and they be respectfully requested to co-operate with the Committee, in whatever manner they may deem best.

POLYNESIA: SAMOA.

That portion of the Island of Savaii, to which the present article has reference, appears to have suffered comparatively little from the ravages of the late war; but, on the other hand, from the villages being difficult of access, the inhabitants had scarcely emerged from their primitive barbarism. During the last three or four years, however, they have enjoyed the constant supervision of a resident missionary, the Rev. C. W. E. Schmidt; and the signal and happy change that has been brought about, through the benign influence of the gospel, is depicted in the following communication from Mr. Schmidt, under date Salailua, December 31st, 1851.

"It is gratifying to be able to report that during our residence in this portion of the Lord's vineyard we have apparently not laboured in vain, nor spent our strength for nought. It is true we have met with trials, but they are far outnumbered by our mercies.

Triumphs of the Gospel.

One of the most cheering indications amongst the people of our charge, is the conversion of the principal chiefs, and many other individuals of Faiaai, a village which had formerly been a den of evil spirits, and a nursery of abominable heathen practices and horrid cruelties; it being, at the same time, the principal seat of government in this division of our district. This happy change commenced with the most influential young chief, the ringleader in all sorts of wickedness, who was made to feel, by the power of the word and Spirit of God, that he was a sinner, and thus exposed to everlasting condemnation. The question, 'What shall I do to be saved?' became the great question of his life; and, on learning that the way to salvation is the way of repentance and faith in Jesus, he parted with all his wives but one, gave up many detestable heathen customs, and attended earnestly to the things that belong to the soul's eternal welfare. For some time he had to encounter, along with a faithful teacher, great opposition and enmity from his own father, and from all the chiefs of the village, who tried every scheme to draw him back into evil courses. We tried, however, to encourage and strengthen the new convert, who took refuge with us until the hatred of his father and the other chiefs had partly subsided. This interval was signally blessed to the good of his soul, so that he grew rapidly in knowledge and devotedness to the cause of Christ. He was in due time prepared, under the Divine blessing, for the holy rite of baptism, received into church fellowship, and is now labouring as a teacher in another village. His friends, on observing his steadfastness and consistency, were silenced, and soon followed him, one after another, in setting their affections on things above; so that at present twenty-two inhabitants of Faiaai are sitting, clothed and in their right minds, at the feet of Jesus. Consequent upon these events, a stop was put to the abominable night dances; the adult school became frequented; New Testaments, &c., were eagerly bought; and oil, native cloth, mats, and cinet were joyfully contributed for the spread of the gospel in general, and for the mission to the New Hebrides in particular.

By their fruits ye shall know them.

We are delighted, likewise, to be able to record that not only here, but in almost all the villages of the district, the pestilential night dances, which were reproduced by the cruel war in many a district, are entirely discontinued and forbidden by the respective authorities. Two chiefs, in different villages, destroyed some large houses used for the accommodation of strangers; several wicked travelling parties having, in disregard of their prohibition, practised this heathenish work.

Another indication of the growth of light and knowledge was the joy manifested on the reception of the neatly printed and bound New Testaments; and while some parties elsewhere were preparing oil for a war-boat, our people were purchasing the precious word of God. The number of readers is fast increasing in every village. The divine services are well frequented on Sabbath days, though with less regularity during the week. The Sabbath-schools are better attended, on the whole, by the adult population than by the children. The attendance on the juvenile week-day school is fluctuating; but those children that attend with regularity make pleasing progress. It is very delightful to observe what a pleasure the children take in contributing for the spread of the gospel. Each child brings every Monday morning one cocoa-nut to the school. One-half of the cocoa-nuts thus collected goes to the support of the teachers, while the other half forms the annual contributions of the children towards the spread of the gospel, in which labour of love the teachers, church members, and inquirers, joyfully unite. The children's contributions for the past year amounted to more than one hundred gallons of oil.

Another pleasing circumstance worth mentioning, is the readiness with which the female church-members and inquirers entered, two years ago, upon a plan proposed to them by Mrs. Schmidt, to work unitedly, at stated seasons, for the support of the native teachers in the New Hebrides. They have already manufactured a very large quantity of native cloth and mats in the anticipation of the arrival of the John Williams.

On the whole, we have been able to carry out with effect our plan of visiting unitedly, at convenient seasons, the two principal out-stations, Samata and Falealupo, and of residing some months at each place, during which time I make repeated excursions to the neighbouring villages. The people are well pleased with this arrangement, as both of us thus come again and again into contact with our whole widely scattered flock. We hold annually three missionary meetings at the three principal villages alternately—one in the month of May, and the two others in other suitable months. They are very well attended, and rendered very interesting by the animating speeches of efficient teachers and church-members. By their means we endeavour both to stimulate the zeal of believers, and to gain over to the Lord's side those who are still enemies to the truth. The contributions afford pleasing evidence that the Divine blessing rests upon these our feeble efforts, for they have increased during the last two years more than twofold. In 1849, they amounted to 159 gallons of oil; in 1850, they increased to 400; and this year, they amounted to 600 gallons.

The church likewise had an accession of 46 persons, making a total in communion of 147. The class of the catechumens consists of 90, including some very aged persons. 74 children of church-members, and 28 adults, have been baptized. There have been excluded from church-fellowship, 20; suspended, 5; restored, 18; marriages, 10. Five church-members exchanged the church militant for the church triumphant, having kept the faith to the end. Four young men, who had been under special training, have been added to the corps of teachers; and an efficient teacher has been obtained from Malua. We have thus been enabled to follow up our plans for instructing and ameliorating the condition of our poor people, although our health has often been greatly affected by our over-exertion, and the effects of a debilitating climate.

The way of transgressors is hard.

To this humble record of the Lord's merciful dealings with us, I will subjoin a notice of the awful death of Popotunu, one of the most wicked chiefs of Samoa. He delighted and excelled in every kind of abomination, and had killed many foreigners, of whom several were Americans. (See Captain C. Wilkes's Narrative of the United States Exploring Expedition, page 96, vol. ii.)

Popotunu, being on a visit in his native village, Faiaai, returned one afternoon from bathing; ascending the steep path, he suddenly became giddy, and fell from a high precipice upon rocks, without being observed by a small party which followed him at some distance. His head being most severely wounded, and the whole body terribly shaken; he was lying insensible in his blood for some time, before he was missed and sought after. The people of Faiaai lost no time in removing him to Salailua, where I attended him four days. When he was brought to me, his skull was quite bare, so that I had to sew together nearly the whole skin of his head. He suffered great pain, but although lying at the brink of the grave, he wished, like Felix of old, to put off attention to spiritual things to a more convenient season. After four days, his people conveyed him to his village, Palauli, but he expired shortly after reaching the shore. He died as he had lived. Awful consideration! Popotunu was often hunted after by American ships—a large reward having been offered for his apprehension, dead or alive, on account of some Americans whom he had murdered. All attempts to catch him were, however, unsuccessful, until God Almighty made bare his arm, and arrested him in his wicked career, in the very same village where he had most cruelly put to death an unoffending sick American seaman who had been left in his charge. I endeavoured to improve this awful event for the benefit of the living, by preaching on Matt. xxi. 44.—London Miss. Mag., Nov. 1852.

WOMAN WITHOUT THE GOSPEL.

"One can faintly imagine," says Mr. Tyler, who is labouring among the Zulus, in South Africa, "the pitiable condition of females in heathendom, till he has seen it with his own eyes. The slavery both of body and soul which we daily behold, is most abject." Let us look with his eyes upon some of the scenes which he is constantly called upon to witness.

See that group of females, coarse in features, clad only in the native dress, and offensive to all that is refined and pure in manners, conversing earnestly with a missionary. They are three wives of the man who possesses a neighbouring kraal. He has four others. They have not come, however, to be taught the way of life. They have no inquiry to make in respect to an improvement of their condition. What they wish is, to strike a bargain for the purchase of a heavy Kaffir hoe, which they will pay for by digging in the missionary's garden. He does not want such help; but as it will afford some opportunity, not otherwise easily gained, for him and his wife to do them good, he yields to their proposal.

Behold that company wending their way along the hill-side, in the cold dew of the morning. All but one are women, each of whom carries a heavy basket of corn on her head, while their husband saunters on at his ease. Their destination is at last reached, the baskets are emptied, and their master orders them home, while he wraps the blanket around him which he has thus purchased, and proceeds to his kraal at his leisure.

Beauty has been dispensed with a prodigal hand on the view which now lies before you. Flowers of rare sweetness and delicacy are everywhere springing amidst the verdure that carpets the valley and the swelling hills which surround it. How busy, too, the scene at this time of preparing the ground for seed. But those swarms of labourers, so diligently plying their unwieldy picks in digging up the ground over the valley, are females, the wives of the men who own the kraals that are scattered along the hill-sides. So also are those others, wearily climbing the steep ascents to their huts, with heavy pots of water on their heads. One reason why the men pursue, as their chief end, the object of procuring as many wives as possible is, that they may thus use them as beasts of burden.

Go now to a kraal when the work of the day is done. Are these huts the places where women, capable of such refinement, and with whom we instinctively associate so much delicacy of feeling, must lodge? And yet, comfortless as they are, they might be put up with, if love too had her abode there. But you can discern slight tokens of affection. The husband does not welcome his wives from their toil with any manifestation of regard, and few are the acts of sisterly kindness which they perform for each other. Nay, you have no cause for being shocked at that harsh contention which begins to arise. What should hinder, what under the circumstances could hinder these wives from quarrelling with each other and with their husband? Must not jealousies of necessity burn between them; must they not often look upon him as, what in fact he is, a selfish, lazy, unfeeling tyrant? And often does he resort to the tyrant's weapons, and inflict serious beatings on those who ought to enjoy his protection; so that at times they endeavour to escape from his power, in the forlorn hope that they may fall into the hands of some one who will treat them with more of consideration.

Shall not these wretched ones have our sympathy? Will we not stretch out our hand to lift them from their degradation? How tender as well as constraining is the appeal which their condition makes to woman's heart—woman as she is blessed by the gospel? That which has availed to make woman's condition so pleasant a one in our land is of equal efficacy for them. On some few places it is beginning to take effect. If supplied to them in the fullness with which it is in our power to bestow it, woman there will soon occupy her appropriate sphere in a multitude of happy homes.—Ch. Adv.

LET THERE BE LIGHT.

Much ignorance prevails respecting the doctrines of the Presbyterian Church. It is the province of an intelligent and prudent colporteur to dispel unfounded prejudices, and exhibit the truth in its beautiful harmony with Scripture and reason. A colporteur in Michigan gives the following account of his success in this cause:

"I do hope the Board may find a more efficient colporteur for this field, not that I wish to withdraw from the work, for it is that in which my soul takes delight. The man we want here, is a minister; that the labours of the missionary and colporteur may be united. From the knowledge I have of Michigan, I could not encourage the Board that any other would have much better success than myself. Are there not some young men in the Eastern States, who are about to enter, or have entered the ministry, who would be glad to come and gather the many almost and altogether Presbyterians, with whom I daily meet, and teach them the truths of the Gospel? Pray the Lord that he may direct the steps of such an one to us.

"I find it is much to the advantage of the cause, that the colporteur be acquainted with the people among whom he labours, as well as with the character of the books he carries. 'Sir,' said a lady, not long since, 'did you not call here about a year ago?' I answered in the affirmative. 'Then I owe you an apology; I did not understand the character of the colporteur enterprise. Had I, I should have treated you with more attention.'

"I find, too, the colporteur of the Board needs to be familiar with the doctrines of our Church, as well as wise in the manner of defending them. The imprint of Presbyterian Board of Publication is often the signal for some to 'give Calvin a thrust.' A minister who was in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church, taking up the Confession, read from chapter III, 'God from all eternity did, by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will, freely and unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass.' 'Absurd! horrid! who can believe that?' He was about to make some further remark, when I asked him if he would be good enough to read the remainder of the sentence? He read, 'Yet so as,' &c. After finishing the sentence, he paused for some time, and asked if that always was there. I answered, 'always.' I handed him a cheap edition of 'The Great Supper,' saying he was welcome to that little work, (as he had stated previously that he was out of funds,) and hoped he would read it attentively. In January, I was urged by a minister and his elder to turn from my destined point, and labour in a little village. Here was a protracted meeting, where, after having conversed with many, I found some who were trusting in their own merits. On Sabbath, in the absence of the minister, I read the tract entitled 'The Sin-bearer,' after having showed it to the elder. There was deep attention as the inquirer was directed to 'Him who bore our sin in his own body on the tree.' The unbidden tear started from many an eye. After I closed, a man arose and remarked, 'There were some solemn truths in what the brother had just read. But we were not all Presbyterians, nor Baptists, nor Methodists, neither are we all Pharisees; and he believed the sinner had something to do.' He was the class-leader. But our Methodist friends are not all such, as will be seen from the remarks of another, at the close of the same meeting. 'Thank God, brother,' said he, taking my hand, 'I am glad you read that sermon; it was the best we ever had here, just what these young people needed here. I know not who you are, nor where you come from, but I believe God sent you here. Will you sell me that sermon?' I handed it to him, saying he could have it in welcome, as its price was less than a penny. He handed me sixpence, saying, 'it was well worth that.'"

DESTITUTION IN THE WEST.

In a letter from one of our clerical brethren in the West, the following passage occurs:

"The destitution of Presbyterian preaching, and of religious works, not only within the bounds of this, but in all the Presbyteries, is truly deplorable. In many of the mountainous counties contiguous to this, seldom, if ever, do they hear preaching of our denomination, and rarely have they been visited by colporteurs. The demand is urgent and pressing for good religious works, to be scattered to counteract the baneful and dangerous influence of novel reading, religious error, and infidelity. * * * I would, therefore, urge upon the Board the importance of occupying this field, as speedily as possible, with men and books."

Such urgent appeals are often made to the Board, from various parts of our country, and they often cause us most deeply to regret that our means are so limited. Will not the churches furnish the Board with more ample means, in order to enable them to supply the destitute with the "men and books" which are so earnestly desired?

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES OF THE SYNOD OF ALABAMA ON THE SUBJECT OF COLPORTAGE.

The Committee on Colportage made the following report, which was received and adopted:

The Committee on Colportage are deeply impressed with a sense of the importance and necessity of the work on which the Synod propose to enter. They have given the subject their anxious attention, and as the result of their deliberations, offer the following plan of operation for the adoption of the Synod:

I. That the Synod appoint a Superintendent of Colportage.

II. That a committee of three be appointed, who shall live in such proximity as to meet monthly, or oftener if necessary, to be called "the Financial Committee," whose duty it shall be

First—To commission all colporteurs, and to fix the amount of their salaries.

Secondly—To provide the Superintendent with the necessary means for him to carry forward the work, yet so as not to involve the Synod in debt.

Thirdly—To endorse all his orders for books.

Fourthly—To receive the quarterly reports of the Superintendent, and to audit all his accounts.

Fifthly—And to report to the Synod annually, in detail, an account of all their doings.

III. It shall be the duty of the Superintendent

First—To look out the right men for the work, and to take the entire charge of all the colporteurs within the bounds of the Synod.

Secondly—To take charge of all the books belonging to the Synod; select his depository or depositories; make out all orders for books, and fill all orders from colporteurs to the extent he may deem best, and assign to each his field of labour.

Thirdly—To require monthly and quarterly reports from every colporteur, and he shall himself report quarterly to the Financial Committee, giving a complete and full account of all that has been done. He shall, also, make a similar report to each Presbytery at their regular meetings.

Fourthly—To instruct all the colporteurs under his care, that they shall give no credit except upon their own responsibility.

IV. There shall be collections in all our churches at an early day in behalf of this cause, and the amount forwarded to the Financial Committee. And that the sum of $1,000 be placed at their disposal without delay.

By order of Committee.

R. NALL, Chairman.

INTERESTING STATEMENT.

A Colporteur of the Board in North Carolina, gives the following interesting and cheering account of the fruit of his labours:—

I have now been acting as colporteur, under a commission from your Board, about three years. During this time I have visited and prayed with thousands of families; I have sold more than $2,000 worth of books. Sometimes my faith has been weak and my heart discouraged; and I have been ready to conclude that I was "labouring in vain and spending my strength for naught." At other times I have thought that I could see manifest indications that God was blessing the books circulated to the good of souls. But I hope I have some modesty, as well as some humility; and perhaps this has caused me to shrink from reporting such instances as came to my knowledge, of apparent good accomplished by the books, for fear I might seem unduly to magnify my office.

But of late, things have taken such an interesting turn that I must be pardoned for speaking somewhat of them. There are, in the field of my labours, two Presbyterian churches. In each of these congregations there is a classical school of the highest order, and patronized by most, if not all, the southern and south-western States. In the bounds of these two congregations I have had most success in circulating our books. I have supplied and re-supplied them, and have been more successful of late than ever before—having just sold within ten days $110 worth of books.

During the past summer there began to appear evident signs of seriousness in these congregations. This seriousness from that time has been gradually growing, and within the last two or three months not less than seventy-five persons have been led to cherish the fond hope that they are the children of God. Among these are four of my own children, who, on last Sabbath, became members of the same church with which their mother and I have long been connected.

One interesting fact in this gracious work of the Spirit is, that between twenty-five and thirty of the young men in the two schools mentioned above, are among the number of those who have professed conversion to God. And perhaps a still larger number of them give evidence of deep seriousness. No one can estimate the influence, for good that may be exerted by these young men in future years. That the books of the Board have been instrumental, to a greater or less extent, in this work, there is no room to doubt. Statements made to me by some of the subjects of this work, render this fact sufficiently obvious. But how far these books have been instrumental, and how far the faithful ambassadors of Christ have been instrumental, of course it would be presumption in me to attempt to settle. These are things which we shall not know until that day arrives which is to reveal the secrets of all hearts.

I do feel, I trust, thankful, and never so much encouraged as at present. I think I can see manifest indications of a golden harvest to be reaped from the "Word of Truth," sown through the publications of the Board.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Romanism as it is. An Oration delivered by the Rev. John Cumming, D. D., of London, in the Theatre Royal in Liverpool, Oct 13, 1851. 72 pp. 18mo. 6 cents. By mail, postage paid, 8 cents.

It would be impossible, in a sixpenny pamphlet, to give a complete view of the protean forms of modern Romanism. In this oration, Dr. Cumming chiefly adverts to things that had fallen under his own observation, and so gives freshness and originality to a vigorous and condensed view of the subject. Among the incidents which he details is his interview with the distinguished Romish convert, Mr. Spencer, and his controversy with Father Belissi. That the reader may have some notion of the change which conversion to Popery works, we will extract a few sentences.

"One day I was sitting in my study preparing my sermons, as I always do, for the ensuing Sunday, when the servant came and said that there was a very strange-looking gentleman at the door, who wished particularly to see me. As I was one of the governors of the Scottish Hospital, I thought it might be some one who had called for a recommendation, and had come in some unprepossessing aspect, which had given the servant a bad opinion of him. I told him to show him into my study, and presently in came a gentleman in most extraordinary attire, with no shoes to his feet, with the exception of leather soles, to which thongs were attached that passed between his toes and met at the ankles, with a singular mediæval and old-fashioned robe, a sort of cape over his shoulders, and a broad slouching hat. He bowed in a graceful manner, and I said, 'I believe I have the honour of seeing the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Spencer.' He bowed and said, 'Father Ignatius, if you please."

Our space will not permit us to proceed. But the reader will perceive that we have the conversion of the nineteenth century into the fifth—a responsible being, but a little lower than the angels, into a portion of a vast machine, an automaton on wires.

Dr. Cumming notices in succession the claims of the Romish Church to be the exclusive patron of the fine arts, her pretence to miracles, to perfect unity, to venerable age, to constant visibility; and after adverting to the character of her doctrines, proceeds to prove that she is an "idolatrous" and "an intolerant and persecuting Church."

On this last topic the Editor of the Board of Publication has appended the whole of a leading editorial of "The Shepherd of the Valley," a Roman Catholic paper, published at St. Louis, Mo., which more than admits all that Dr. Cumming contends for; and at the same time gives due warning of what we may expect should that portion of our citizens who are now so anxious to serve their country ever gain the ascendancy. From it we give a short extract:

"Well, then, is this doctrine of toleration a Christian doctrine, or is it not? does it come from heaven or hell, from God or the devil? do we see any thing of it in the Bible, in the Fathers, in the actions or writings of the saints, in the treatises of the doctors of the Church? was it heard of before the birth of Protestantism? has it not been condemned by the Council of Constance, and repeatedly by the supreme Pontiffs? is it any thing more than a convenient theory, got up that Catholics living among Protestants may meet with less ill-will? are not the French philosophers and their disciples its most zealous advocates; is not Gibbon full of it; has it ever had any thing more than a theoretical existence, except where it has been practically impossible to carry into active operation the principles which it condemns? was St. Thomas right when he said that 'it is a much worse thing to corrupt the faith, by which life is given to the soul, than to falsify money, which is an assistance to the temporal life?' Did he reason correctly from these premises, when he argued that temporal princes might justly punish convicted heretics? Have we stated anything rash, erroneous, offensive to pious ears, or savouring of heresy, in the extracts given above; is our opinion, as to the consequences of the spread of Christianity in this country, improbable; may we not expect the Church and Christian rulers to act again as they have acted; is it not our boast that the Church never changes, and is not her history an open book, which all may read, which we cannot close if we would, and of which we are accustomed to say that we have no cause to be ashamed?"

May I go to the Theatre? By the late Rev. John Macdonald, A. M., Missionary Minister, Calcutta. 33 pp. 18mo. 4 cents.

The reasons why none should go to the Theatre are stated by the author with remarkable clearness and force. We wish that every one who is either in the habit of visiting the theatre, or who is tempted to go there, would seriously read this little tract. If any Christian parent has a son or daughter who evinces a disposition to go to the theatre, let this seasonable treatise be placed in his or her hands, and by the blessing of God it may be instrumental in preventing immeasurable evil.

The following extract will exhibit the style of the author, and may perhaps induce our readers to procure and read the work itself:—

"How many ruined young men date their first steps in ruin from the time when they began to frequent the theatre! They were at first comparatively pure and free from open or decided vice;—but play-going completely altered their habits of thinking and acting. The victims of imagination all day, the victims of fascination all night, their minds have become intoxicated, debilitated, and unfitted for the active duties of life. This vitiated state of mind prepares them to become the prey of the toper, the scoffer, the harlot, the gambler, the embezzler, the gentlemanly beggar who lives by constant borrowing, and the gentlemanly friend who lives by constant lending. The youth becomes intimate with the swearer, the Sabbath-breaker, the infidel, and the liar; with these he meets, and spends his hours of rest, and money more than his own. Midnight hours, restless slumbers, noon-day stimulants, a weakened body, a jaded mind, neglected work, a doubted character, suspected honour, unpaid debts, offended friends, a lost situation, all come in train of the play-house, where first he learned to laugh at sin, to take pleasure in the imitative representations of human iniquity. This fact is so well known, that no merchant would appoint as a confidential money-clerk a youth whom he knew to be addicted to play-going; he would consider the temptation to evil too great for him to withstand: and he knows that play-going never stands alone when it is habitual. How many young men, or men once young, are now tossing and heaving to and fro on the billows and breakers of town-life, who call the theatre their first seducer, no one would believe, unless from circumstances he has been compelled to see it. It is told of an ingenuous youth, that after a struggle he prevailed over his better self so far, as to find himself at one of the entrances to a play-house; but, to make sure, he raised his eye to the transparency that hung over the avenue, and read these words, 'The way to the Pit!' The Pit! the Pit! flashed upon his mind, and remembering earlier days and better feelings, he hurried back to his home, he fled from the 'Pit.' Men may say this was weak and foolish, be it so; there is a folly that is better than wisdom—a weakness that is better than strength; for it is written, 'The foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men; for things that are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things that are not, to bring to naught things that are.' The word 'Pit' saved a youth from ruin! Go, ask the merchants of our large cities about these things, and let their counting-houses and banks be our witnesses."

My Own Hymn Book. Illustrated with fourteen engravings. 72 pp. sq. 16mo. 25, 30 and 40 cents.

This Hymn Book is designed for young children and is admirably adapted to interest and instruct them. Every child ought to have his "own" Hymn Book, and learn to sing such beautiful and pious songs. They refine the affections and are among the best means of exciting devotional feelings.

As a specimen of the Hymns, we give three stanzas of the following.

A LITTLE CHILD MAY BE USEFUL.

I may, if I have but a mind,
Do good in many ways:
Plenty to do the young may find,
In these our busy days:
Sad would it be, though young and small,
If I were of no use at all.

One gentle word that I may speak,
Or one kind, loving deed,
May, though a trifle poor and weak,
Prove like a tiny seed;
And who can tell what good may spring
From such a very little thing?

Then let me try each day and hour,
To act upon this plan,—
What little good is in my power,
To do it while I can.
If to be useful thus I try,
I may do better by and by.

An Address to Students, by the Rev. James Hamilton, London. 26 pages, 18mo. 2 cents.

This address is marked by the usual ability and eloquence of its distinguished author. Its counsels, admonitions, and exhortations are well adapted to the class of persons for whom they were intended. What food for profitable reflection is furnished in the following passage!

"Should your mind already be made up that the Bible is the word of God, lose not a moment in devoting yourself to God's immediate service. So long as you live to yourself you live in sin, and you only commence a truly happy and noble life when you begin to live to God. And for his dear Son's sake, a holy and merciful God is unspeakably willing, not only to receive you into his service, but to make you something more than a servant, even his own son. And happily for you, whatever be your tastes or talents, there are endless fields in which you may exercise them, and still be serving God. The great thing is personal devotedness. It was this which hurried Martyn and Thomason away to the missionary work, and which made Spencer and McCheyne such burning and shining lights at home. It was this which shed such a halo round jurists like President Forbes and Sir Matthew Hale, and which interwove its fragrant myrtle with the laurel crown of Haller, and Hope, and Boerhaave. It was this—the feeling that their pen was not their own, but that they were bound to glorify God in their authorships, which actuated at once Foster's iron energy, and Cowper's enchanting elegance, and has imparted to their books more than human perpetuity and power. And though they never passed forth to active life, it was their undisguised devotedness, that relation to a beloved Redeemer, which they neither vaunted nor concealed, which gave a lustre to the college-life of students like John Urquhart and James Halley, and gave to genius the momentum and majesty of pervasive piety. And, my dear friends, is there any thing else for which you are content to live? College honours? Hear a senior wrangler: "I obtained my highest wishes, but was surprised to find that I had grasped a shadow."—(H. Martyn.) A seat in the English Cabinet? Hear a Secretary of State, (Lord Melville,) when a friend wished him a happy New-Year: "This year had need to be happier than the last, for I do not remember a single happy day in it." The Chancellorship of England? Hear him who longest held it, and most dearly loved it, (Lord Eldon:) "A few weeks will send me to dear Encombe as a resting-place between vexation and the grave." Fame? "They came from all lands to hear the wisdom of Solomon," but the famous philosopher summed it up, "Vanity of vanities, vanity of vanities, all is vanity." But pray the Lord to teach you a nobler end, and a more excellent way. Pray that he would make you zealous for himself, and enable you to diffuse his glory through the earth. And do not rest till you feel in your secret soul that something grander prompts you than the love of money, the love of title, or the love of power. Let that motive urge you which fired evangelists and strengthened martyrs, to which earth owes its most splendid virtues, and to which heaven owes all its earth-born citizens. Let the love of Christ constrain you, and then you can neither live too long, nor work too hard, nor be summoned from the world too soon.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Rev. Joseph A. Copp, recently installed over a congregational church in Massachusetts, still holds his relation to the Presbytery of Long Island.

The Rev. Thomas Morrow, of the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa, has joined the New-school Presbytery of Newton, Mississippi. The St. Louis Presbyterian says he was, at the time, under charges by the former Presbytery for "disrespectful, irregular, and disorderly conduct towards his Presbytery."

The Rev. J. W. Shields, of Belbrook, Ohio, has received and accepted the appointment of Agent for the American Bible Society for the State of Mississippi.

The Rev. Thomas McIntyre, of the Presbytery of Columbus, has been appointed Superintendent of the Indiana Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, at Indianapolis, and has moved to that place.

The Rev. Griffith Owen has been stricken from the roll of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, as no longer a Presbyterian minister in good standing.

The new Presbytery of Passaic was constituted on the 11th ult., at Patterson, New Jersey. The Presbyteries of Newark, Rockaway, (New-school,) and Elizabethtown, and Passaic, now exist within the same territory which but twenty-eight years ago embraced only one, the Presbytery of Newark.

PREMIER AUTHORSHIP.—It is to be placed to the credit of Lord Derby, the English Premier, that he has published a little work, entitled Conversations on the Parables of the New Testament, for the use of children. It was republished in this country, and is a genial and earnestly pious work. It may be that this little labour may be of greater value, and more deserving of credit, than any of the deeds of his Lordship's political life.

SUCCESSOR OF DR. NEVIN.—The German Reformed Synod, at its recent meeting, made choice of Rev. Dr. Bernard C. Wolff, as Professor of Theology in the Mercersburgh Seminary, in place of Dr. Nevin, resigned. Dr. Wolff occupies a high position in the denomination, and is understood to be uncommitted to either of the parties to which Dr. Nevin's speculations and course have given rise.

THE BURMAN DICTIONARY.—The Burman Dictionary at which Dr. Judson worked so long, and with such a desire to complete it before his death, is about to be accomplished by another hand, the Rev. E. A. Stevens. About three hundred pages quarto are already printed, and it is progressing at a good and steady rate.

REV. WILLIAM JAY.—From the last London Banner, we learn that Rev. W. Jay, of Bath, has resigned his pastoral office, to take effect from the 30th of January next. This is the sixty-third anniversary of his ordination. He is in feeble health.

A NEW COMMENTARY ON THE SONG OF SOLOMON.—Prof. Hengstenberg of Berlin is now preparing a Commentary on the Song of Solomon. His mind is fully made up in favour of the canonical character of the book, and he reasserts the old allegorical interpretation of the Song, which the orthodox critics have so generally adopted. He is hard at work on this undertaking; everything promises its speedy completion. Nothing can exceed the enthusiasm and delight with which he speaks of his employment. He says he has hopes that the commentary will be finished and printed early in the coming spring. A publication on this subject from such a source will excite attention in this country and in England, as well as in Germany. We are informed that Professor Burrowes, of Lafayette College, Easton, Pa. has a work in preparation on the same book.

FATHER MATHEW'S TEMPERANCE MOVEMENTS A FAILURE.—It is grievous to see one new feature of Irish life disappearing, before the echo of the world's admiration has died away. The relapse of the people into intemperance is indubitable and very rapid. Everywhere we are told that the temperance begun in superstition and political enthusiasm, was maintained only by the destitution of the famine time; and everywhere we see but too plainly that the restraint was artificial and temporary. "Now that they are better off," we are told, "they are taking to drink again;" and, so it seems, by what we see in the towns and by the road-side. We never believed that such a process as that of self-government could come complete out of such an act as a vow, or such an impulse as social sympathy.

THE EXPEDITION OF LIEUT. LYNCH.—Lieut. Lynch is to visit the western coast of Africa, to make inquiries and arrange preliminaries, with reference to an exploring expedition to that coast and the adjoining country. This is a measure of the deepest interest, as to the evangelization and civilization of that continent.

RELIGION OUR BEST SUPPORT ON THE JOURNEY OF LIFE.

Whoever undertakes the journey of life, though he may have set out with many pleasing anticipations, soon finds that there are difficulties to encounter, and serious obstacles to overcome. It does not turn out to be the smooth and delightful road his youthful imagination may have pictured before him, but a difficult and rugged path, in the progress of which he easily becomes wearied and exhausted. Even in the most favourable circumstances, where an unusual share of prosperity falls to our lot, a sense of weariness and exhaustion is soon experienced in the pursuits of the world. We soon learn to view its objects with comparative indifference; the novelty and attractiveness they wore at the earlier periods of life, gradually disappear, and in the place of the original ardour of pursuit, we come at length to experience little else but sensations of dullness and apathy.

In addition to this, there are trials and afflictions to be met with in the progress of life, under the depressing influence of which we are liable to sink down into despondency and gloom. If we carry our minds forward, moreover, to the later periods of life, the melancholy prospect of old age is presented before us—old age, cut off from the usual sources of earthly enjoyment, and oppressed sometimes with a load of infirmities, sufficient to render existence itself a burden.

Looking upon human life in this light, apart from any divine consolations and supports—viewing it as attended with many trials and difficulties, afflictions and disappointments, it may not be inappropriately compared to a rugged and uneven path, along which the traveller pursues his toilsome, weary way, and in the progress of which his strength becomes entirely exhausted. In the word of God, human life is often viewed under the image of a difficult path, in the prosecution of which the most vigorous soon begin to show signs of weariness and exhaustion, and which none can successfully surmount, but those who are favoured with the special assistance of heaven. "Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall, but they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint."

By dwelling upon some thoughts connected with this subject, we shall obtain a renewed impression of the value of religion—we shall discern, moreover, the folly of those who attempt to prosecute the difficult journey of life, in a reliance simply upon their own strength. Let religion then be considered under three several particulars:— As supplying the defects of the world; as compensating the losses and trials of the world; and as providing for the decline of life.

Religion, we say, supplies the defects of the world. It meets that sense of emptiness and vanity which is the invariable experience, sooner or later, of all who try the world as a means of happiness.

When we speak of the insufficiency of the world as a source of happiness, we utter a sentiment that is so often repeated, that it ceases almost to make any impression on our minds. It is from experience alone that we learn the full significancy and meaning of this idea. Experience teaches us that whatever enjoyment the world may afford, it is far from yielding to us a complete satisfaction. The young generally set out in life with high expectations and hopes. They enter upon the pursuit of the world with ardour and enthusiasm; confident, notwithstanding the many predictions they have heard to the contrary, that they shall be able to realize from the world a large amount of happiness. But how soon do we see this ardour to be sensibly abated! How soon does their enthusiasm receive a check! We meet with these same persons at a later period of life, and we find them in all probability labouring under a sensation of weariness and dissatisfaction. They are no longer looking to the world with the same confidence as before. Their expectations of happiness from this source have undergone a sensible abatement, and the only effect of further experience is to deepen these impressions, until the conviction is produced of the entire emptiness and vanity of the world as a means of happiness.

Such is the result that will be finally reached, through a longer or shorter experience, by every individual; and that, too, though the experiment be made under the most favourable circumstances. The most vigorous and successful, those who have the largest promise of happiness from the world, are found to falter and decline upon the path of life. "Even the youths faint and are weary, and the young men utterly fall." This is what we mean when we speak of the defects of the world. We refer to this uniform experience of its insufficiency and vanity as a source of satisfaction and happiness; its intrinsic incompetency, as attested by all human experience, to meet the wants of the soul, to satisfy the cravings of human desire. It is this capital defect that religion supplies. It meets mankind under such an experience as this, and proposes to them objects better suited to their capacities—better fitted, if truly embraced, to give satisfaction and repose to their tossed and agitated minds. It takes up the weary wanderer upon the path of life, and unfolds to him the elements of a better portion than the world can afford. It instructs him in the claims of a higher destiny; opens to him the extent and the grandeur of his spiritual relations, and teaches him to aspire after the "glory, and honour, and immortality" that are revealed to him in the gospel of Christ. In such objects and pursuits as these he finds the fullest scope for his desires and hopes; the best and most rational employment for all his faculties and powers. He no longer experiences the weariness and dissatisfaction that he felt before in the pursuit of the world. He finds his strength renewed. New objects engage his affections; new hopes are awakened in his soul; a new gratitude swells his heart. He devotes himself to the service of God and of Christ, and realizes progressively the delightful experience, that "those who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint." It is here that religion appears to be peculiarly lovely and attractive, as a refuge from the weariness of the world; as a solace and support under the certain, the invariable experience of the vanity of life. She comes to the children of men, not to impair their happiness, but to save them from the emptiness of the world; to proffer to them her own resources of strength and of joy; to elevate them to higher prospects, and to a nobler destiny. She speaks to them in the winning accents of the Saviour, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." From the vain pursuits of a restless and agitated world, she calls upon them to enter the ways of pleasantness and the paths of peace.

OUR REST.

"The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us."

My feet are worn and weary with the march
O'er the rough road and up the steep hill-side;
Oh! city of our God, I fain would see
Thy pastures green, where peaceful waters glide.

My hands are weary too with toiling on,
Day after day for perishable meat;
Oh! city of our God, I fain would rest—
I sigh to gain thy glorious mercy-seat.

My garments, travel-worn and stained with dust,
Oft rent by briars and thorns that crowd my way,
Would fain be made, O Lord, my righteousness,
Spotless and white in Heaven's unclouded ray.

My eyes are weary looking at the sin,
Impiety and scorn upon the earth;
Oh! city of our God, within thy walls
All—all are clothed again with thy new birth.

My heart is weary of its own deep sin—
Sinning, repenting, sinning still again;
When shall my soul thy glorious presence feel,
And find, dear Saviour, it is free from stain?

Patience, poor soul, the Saviour's feet were worn;
The Saviour's heart and hands were weary, too;
His garments stained, and travel-worn, and old;
His vision blinded with a pitying dew.

Love thou the path of sorrow that he trod;
Toil on, and wait in patience for thy rest;
Oh! city of our God, we soon shall see
Thy glorious walls—home of the loved and blest.

DO WE KNOW HOW TO PRAY?

Has not the church almost to learn the power of prayer? What conception have we of believing prayer, which opens heaven? What of persevering prayer, which causes us to stand continually upon the watch-tower in the day-time, and which sets us in our ward whole nights? What of importunate prayer, which storms heaven with its violence and force? What of united prayer, gathering us together to ask help of the Lord? What of consistent prayer, which regards no iniquity in our hearts? What of practical prayer, which fulfils itself? Let but such prayer be understood, let our spirits but break with such longing, and the expectations of our bosoms shall not be delayed. "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear."—Dr. Hamilton.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. C. C. Jones.
Assistant Secretary—Rev. R. Happersett.
Treasurer—Samuel D. Powel.
Address, Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut st. Philadelphia.
Letters relating to Missionary appointments, and other operations of the Board, including Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.
Donations and Subscriptions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:
J. D. Williams, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.
William Rankin, Jr. Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

The Chairman of the Church Extension Committee requests that all letters on this subject be directed to 265 Chestnut street, office of the Board of Missions. This will prevent delay, and place them at once on file, to receive the earliest practicable attention.

Presbyterian papers will please copy the above notice.

SYNOD OF OHIO.

We are requested to state, that inasmuch as the Treasury established by the Synod of Ohio, has recently been abolished, all remittances from the churches within its bounds to the Board of Missions, will hereafter be made directly to Mr. Samuel D. Powel, Treasurer of the Board, No. 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, instead of, as formerly, to Thomas Moodie, Columbus, Ohio.

GRACIOUS INFLUENCES.

In the last number of the Record, we published an extract or two from reports of our missionaries, which referred to the reviving influences of the Holy Spirit in their fields of labour. We then expressed the hope and belief—judging from our letters—that God was visiting our missionary churches with a more than ordinary effusion of his Spirit. Recent intelligence confirms us in this opinion. Not a few allude to serious and marked attention to the subject of religion, as well as of encouraging accession to their respective churches; whilst others speak of the presence of the Lord in a very remarkable manner—of the quickening and reviving of God's own dear children, as well as of the conversion of sinners. This, to the Board, as well as the whole church, is encouraging. It is that for which we labour and pray. Every other consideration sinks into utter insignificance when compared with the conversion of souls to God, and the consequent extension of the Redeemer's kingdom. What we need in all our churches is more of earnest, practical zeal, and fervent prayer for the success of missions. It is to be feared that too many, to a very great degree, dismiss this subject after they have made their annual contributions to its funds. This is apparent from their absence from the concert for prayer. And we are sorry to think, that some of the professed followers of Christ do not even feel enough of interest in it to contribute at all. We hope the number is by no means in proportion to the ten lepers, only one of whom returned to give thanks. The spirit of entire consecration to the Lord, is the true spirit of the Christian—"He became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich." Without this spirit, which includes all the Christian graces and obligations, we are none of His. This spirit includes, as a prominent element, that of earnest prayer—"For all this God will be inquired of." It needs no argument of ours to show the relation between prayer and the accomplishment of God's purposes. It "availeth much." The progress of God's kingdom is "not by might nor by power," but by "his Spirit." This Spirit is given in answer to prayer. Let there be found in our churches generally, sincere and fervent prayer for the success of this cause—that the word preached by our devoted missionaries may be made effectual, and we will soon hear of still greater ingatherings of souls—of true and precious revivals of religion. Nor is this all: the offerings to the Lord will then be in proportion to the spirit of prayer. We will not then be straitened for means to carry forward this work. It is when the love of Jesus burns brightly in the soul, that Christians are ready and willing, yea anxious, to make liberal offerings to the Lord. And not until this spirit of prayer and entire consecration is felt throughout the church of Christ, do we ever expect to see the treasury of the Lord full, or the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

Our object, however, was simply to introduce to our readers two or three extracts of letters from missionaries, in which we have repeated evidence of God's gracious favour. We might give more, but our space will not permit. These encourage us to hope for more copious effusions of the Holy Spirit, for which we earnestly labour and pray.

"Since my last report, we have had a meeting of considerable interest. About the last of October, Rev. Daniel Baker, D. D., was providentially thrown in our midst, and preached for us several days, (from Thursday night until Monday morning.) The congregations were quite good and attentive, but nothing indicative of interest occurred until Sabbath night, except in the case of one young lady. She had been under very deep impressions for nearly two months, (originating in the death of her father), but although free to converse on religion, had not obtained any hope. On Sabbath morning, seeing her weeping as I came out of the church, I stopped to have a few words of conversation, and found her tears, tears of joy. Love to Jesus made them flow. On Sabbath night, there was more interest, and although Dr. Baker had to leave on Monday, I thought best to protract the meeting, and accordingly I appointed preaching for Monday night. More interest was manifested then than at any time previous, and I appointed an inquiry meeting for Tuesday morning and preaching at night. Thus, day by day, was the meeting continued, until Friday morning, when I was under the necessity of closing. The interest was, however, still deepening. There were seven or eight who hoped that they had found their Saviour, and between twenty and thirty who were anxious about their souls, and inquiring 'what must we do to be saved?' The other portion of my field claiming my attention, I was compelled with great reluctance to close on Friday morning. Since the meeting, I have endeavoured to point anxious souls to the Saviour, and hope that two of them have been born again. It is the Lord's work; to his name be the praise."

"In my last, I told you we were confidently expecting a visit from the Lord. Our expectations have been realized. God has visited us, and filled our souls with joy, and our hearts with gladness. Yesterday we had communion in E.; it was indeed a precious time. The Holy Spirit was with us. We received eight persons on examination, and to-night four more came out, two of whom are entertaining a hope; the other two are deeply interested. All these are the baptized children of the church, with one exception. Truly our God is a covenant-keeping God. There are many others deeply concerned, that have not come out yet. We trust God will bring them to himself.

"We purpose having communion at S. in two weeks, and confidently expect a gracious season there also. We have every promise of it; quite a number there are already inquiring, and some are rejoicing in hope. May our expectations be more than realized. B."

"In making out my first quarterly report as a missionary of your Board, I rejoice in being able to state that an unusually interesting state of things at present exist in Mt. B., the church of which I am pastor. Our meetings for religious worship are numerously attended; many are inquiring 'What they shall do to be saved?' and several have, as we hope and trust, passed from death unto life. A few weeks since, three young ladies, whose parents are members of the church, united with us on a profession of their faith; a short time after, one of them was suddenly called into eternity. Several other young persons, about the same time, were called as suddenly, and the effect has been to extend the interest taken in the subject of religion more among the people of the world. I can only hope and pray that God may appear in his glory to build up Zion.

The past fall has been unusually sickly in this part of the country, and several deaths have occurred, some from every class—the old, the middle-aged, and the young, have been called to appear before God. I have been called to stand by the bedside of many of the dying, and we have reason to believe that these calls of Divine Providence have not been suffered to pass utterly unheeded. A general seriousness seems to pervade the minds of many in various parts of the congregation. Some young persons seem to be in earnest in inquiring 'What shall we do to be saved?' The preaching of the word is not without its effects, and God, I hope, is blessing the use of other means of grace to the conversion of souls. Some are rejoicing in a Saviour whom they have recently found. 'What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits to us?' J. M. Q.

"In relation to S. G. It seems to me that appearances have not, at any time since my connection with this church, been more hopeful. Our congregations on the Sabbath, although not so large as in the summer, are usually larger than our winter congregations hitherto have been. But what is particularly hopeful, is the gradually increasing interest manifested by our young people in the study of the Bible, and also in attending our Sabbath and weekly meetings, for prayer and social worship. The leaven seems to be working slowly, though I hope surely.

"Last winter, for the first, we continued our Sabbath-school every second Sabbath, (i. e. when I preached at this church,) This winter we open the school every Sabbath. By most of us, fears were entertained lest the effort might prove a failure; but to the surprise of all, our school never, in the most favorable season of the year, appeared more interesting, and rarely ever has it been larger. We live and labour in hope. May the good Master crown all with his blessing. Pray for us. C."

HOW THEY GO TO PRESBYTERY IN OREGON.

Our readers will, we doubt not, be interested in the extract given below from a letter which we have just received from the Rev. Edward R. Geary, who is settled in Lafayette, Oregon Territory. It sets forth some of the difficulties and dangers to be encountered in planting the institutions of the gospel in these new settlements—trials and difficulties of which many of us know but little. These brethren need the prayers and support of God's people to sustain them.

"Brother Robe and myself had determined (partly to avoid the expense of the river route, and also to explore the coast south of Clatsop, where several points are now attracting considerable attention,) to go over the coast range to the meeting of Presbytery. When brother Robe arrived at the point where we met, his horse was too much jaded to think of undertaking the transit of the mountains, and it was at last agreed that I should proceed in the undertaking with my guide, while he would go by the river. I accordingly made my way to the head of the South Yam Hill Valley, about 35 miles, where I entered the mountains by a narrow trail, and after passing over a precipitous and rocky road, not without much danger to man and horse, I reached the shore of the Pacific at the mouth of Salmon river, some 50 miles south of Tillamook Head. This occupied two days, the distance over the mountains being about 30 miles. The path is much obstructed with the large trunks of fallen timber, it being necessary to leap the horses over nearly two hundred logs; the path is also much overhung with bramble. We were advised to proceed by this route, as the direct route was said to be impracticable for so small a party (there were but two of us). We were also assured that we would find Indians at the mouth of Salmon River, who would swim our horses over, and carry us in their canoes. But when we arrived no Indians were to be found, though there were signs of their recent presence. This was a deep mortification, as it wholly prevented my farther progress. As a last resort, we proceeded the same evening—though the tide had already begun to flow, and the sun was near its setting—down the beach ten miles to Seletse Bay: I there hoped to find the Indians. After being completely wet with the surges, and almost washed away by them, we arrived, about eight o'clock, at a small tide meadow, sheltered from the bleak wind then blowing from the ocean by a projecting bluff. Ourselves and horses were almost famished with thirst, and after seeking about for water and Indians for more than an hour, but in vain, we spread our blankets on the grass, and committing ourselves to Him who guarded Jacob at Luz, we laid down to wait the return of the morning. I early renewed my search for water, and found enough for our own use, but none for our horses. While on this errand, an Indian came to our fire, which we had kindled in the morning. I found out that he was a Tillamook, and learned from him that there were a great many Indians a short way off, over the bay—this he evidently said to intimidate us. I was, however, extremely desirous to accomplish my journey, and determined to go over to the Indians and endeavour to persuade them to take us over the Salmon river and pilot us through. The Indian reluctantly took us over the bay, about three miles, in his canoe—both Indian and white man with gun at hand to guard against surprise. On landing, we were surprised to find but a single wigwam, occupied by the three wives of our tawny friend. He then told us the Indians were about three miles farther off! We did not deem it expedient to seek any farther for them; so letting our Indian know very unequivocally that he must take us back, we returned to our horses, and hastened to take them to a place where they could be watered. That evening we returned to the mouth of Salmon River, and encamped near the shore of the ocean. The rain poured down upon us all night in torrents. We arose in the morning, our blankets and clothes perfectly saturated with water, and after an early breakfast on bread, coffee, and roasted clams, we hastened to re-cross the mountains, fearing lest the swollen streams might prevent our escape from this desolate wilderness. In two days we again reached the settlements in the valley of the Willamette. We failed to reach Clatsop, and there was consequently no Presbytery.

There is doubtless an extensive country about the numerous small bays that indent this part of the coast, suitable for grazing and tillage; its chief importance, however, will be found in its cod and salmon fisheries; destined, I doubt not, to yield large rewards to hardy enterprise.

This is destined to be a great and important country—it is of all things the most important that the pure gospel, in its doctrines and morals, get early and firm footing here. O that our Zion would awake to the magnitude of the enterprise! O Lord, send us who are entrusted with this work at home and here, sound hearts and minds, and lead us by thy own right hand. E. R. G."

LIMITING THE LORD.

It is reckoned, by the Psalmist, among the provocations of God's ancient people, that "they limited the Holy One of Israel," lxxviii. 41. Forgetful of his past demonstrations of power and love in their behalf, they distrusted his ability to help them in prospective troubles. This fault was not confined to them. What unbelief do Christians now betray! What enfeebling timidity characterizes their hopes! What despondency invests their enterprises for the advancement of religion!

By limiting the Lord, we do a serious wrong to him, to his cause, and to ourselves. One might suppose, from our distrust, that God had never interposed his power and goodness for the promotion of his cause—that difficulties could embarrass him—that his purposes could fail. But oh how discreditable and untrue the supposition! Job better celebrates his power—"I know that thou canst do everything," lxii. 2. Isaiah praises him, as "wonderful in counsel and excellent in working," xxviii. 29; Jeremiah declares him to be "great in counsel and mighty in works;" and God himself saith, "is there any thing too hard for me?" Jer. xxxii. 27. The history of his providence and grace attests, that "he doeth great things and unsearchable; marvellous things without number." By limiting the Holy One, both hopes and efforts for the cause of religion are weakened. Hope stimulates the ploughman who breaks up the clods; hope cheers the student at his midnight toil; hope animates the hero on the field of war. Hope for the triumphs of religion rests on the might and mercy of God; and if that foundation be destroyed or shaken, what can the righteous do? What will they do? O let us not depress hope, or discourage effort, by limiting the Holy One of Israel.

True, the heathen world is wide, and full of the habitations of cruelty; darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people; but God hath promised that the heathen shall be given to Christ for his inheritance, and the uttermost part of the earth for his possession. Do not limit the Lord: only believe; he is able to make his promise good.

True, the settlements of our country are widely extended, and are still more widely spreading; our own people are rapidly multiplying, and "nations are running to us." But God, who can make the wilderness blossom as the rose, can also make it rejoice in his salvation. Hope in God and labour in his cause, rather than set distrustful limitations to his power. Sustain, by prayer and liberality, the wise and benevolent enterprise of domestic missions. The Lord hath done great things for us, as a church; let the church be encouraged to go forward in every good work. Let her emulate the lauded energy of the Anglo-Saxon race, and she will achieve higher triumphs, and richer trophies will reward her toils.

REGION OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

May not the friends of Zion here ask with truth and earnestness, what are Christians doing for the spiritual interests of the mining regions of Lake Superior? Has the "Macedonian cry" been heard in behalf of this destitute but important field? Here is a large district which has sprung suddenly into the most intense activity, by the discovery of mineral wealth. From almost every source, thousands are pouring into it, bent only on reaping its gains. And who is there to care for their souls? This single point, (Kreivainona,) within the last four years, has received a population of near three thousand souls; and yet it has but a single Protestant minister, and the occasional visits of a Roman Catholic priest. The population along the entire Lake is estimated at seven thousand, and we have but three ministers for them all. We have here a territory five or six hundred miles in length, by three or four hundred in width—embracing all from Sault St. Marie to seventy miles above Fond du Lac, and only five ministers, (exclusive of those in mission stations,) and only eleven for all—both Indians and whites—in this whole region! The present supply is, therefore, altogether inadequate to the demand. As to the future: what provisions are now making for the population, which must rapidly increase, now that the mines are just coming into general notice? Here we have assembled, as in California, those who hold all the mixed dogmas and creeds of ignorance and superstition—Reason and Atheism, Protestant and Papist. Here, German materialists, of education and intellect, industriously sow the seeds of blasphemy and dangerous error. Romanists ignorant of the Scriptures, become Infidels; and nominal Christians even—members of our congregations and Sabbath schools at home—come here too often to learn soon to profane God's holy day, and abandon all pretensions to religion. Here the Sabbath is almost universally the day for bargains, and trade, and drink. Of five villages on this Lake, every house in one is a tavern, or drinking-house; eighteen months ago this was also the fact in the second; the third is pretty much the same; of the other two I cannot speak particularly. Each of these has its bowling-saloon and gaming-tables, where many pass their Sabbaths gambling for liquor. Around one of these, the writer has seen four little boys, scarcely able to speak plainly, dealing and dashing their cards, with the flaunt and slang of blacklegs. I have sat in the Sabbath-school to teach children whose parents were trading at the store; while the reports of guns firing around would often startle us. On last Sabbath, men worked the whole day. On one side of our cabin, the saw, hammer and plane, rang constantly in our ears. In the afternoon, the agent of the company came to our cabin and sent one off to work, and on Monday deducted that day's wages from another, because he refused to work on the Sabbath. My only object in these statements is to give a true picture of facts, as they exist here. The state of morals here is indeed sad—very sad.

Of all the ministers—four churches and four Sabbath-schools, on the Lake—not one of them are Presbyterian. Can our Church not do something in this vale of moral death? Her children are here—shall she not care for them? Are there not those who will pray for us, and send to us some one or more, to preach the everlasting gospel? Too long has this destitute, but interesting field, been neglected. J. J. S.

CHURCH ORGANIZED.

From a Missionary in Wisconsin.

"In this quarterly report, I have a few items of interest which may be also interesting to you. You are aware that for a year past I have been labouring a fourth of my time in the neighbourhood of the Blue Mounds. Until within a few months past the field there was not very encouraging. With the exception of a few who had been raised by Presbyterian parents, the little congregation was composed of those who cared but little for these things. However, both the size and attention of the congregation have greatly increased. In October last, a petition signed by eleven persons was put into my hands, as a committee of Presbytery, to organize them into a Presbyterian church. After due consideration, we fixed upon last Saturday and Sabbath for that purpose, when the church was duly organized, with eleven persons. Two ruling elders were ordained, and installed on the Sabbath, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. Of these, six were received on certificate, and five on examination. An interesting feature connected with this newly formed church is, that all the members are parents, and heads of families. In one family there are five children, in another four, another three, another two, and another one. All these dear children—with the exception of three who, owing to circumstances, could not be taken out at that time, but who will be presented soon—twelve in number, were consecrated to the Lord in the ordinance of baptism. It was, to me at least, an interesting scene. May the great Head of the Church follow it with his blessing! This church have it in contemplation to build a house of worship. We now worship in an old log school-house, very open, and consequently very cold. But how shall we build? The members themselves cannot do it. Neither can they hope to get much from the vicinity. We only want a small, plain house. Cannot some benevolent friend assist us? We live and labour in hope. Yours, &c.

J. A."

ANOTHER CHURCH OFF THE BOARD.

From a Missionary in Pennsylvania.

Dear Brother—During the last quarter the services of religion were maintained as usual, and with increased interest on the part of the people. At our communion, on the third Sabbath of December, five—four of them heads of families—were admitted to the church upon profession of faith, and five by certificate; and we have reason to believe that the Spirit is striving with others, who we hope will be brought to Christ. My own health has been good, but my dear wife has suffered severely, being brought to the very brink of the grave. However, through the mercy and goodness of God, she is now slowly, yet we think permanently, recovering. May these afflictions be sanctified unto us!

Although the sum we have been receiving from the Board is not large, yet I am pleased to be able to inform you that the sum due for the quarter just past is all that we will expect. Henceforth the people feel able to bear their own burdens, and also distribute to the necessity of others. A contribution of $26 has just been made for your Board, which will make our contributions to the Board $101 since I came here; whilst we have only drawn out $100! This is not so bad for a church that was scarcely known as in existence five years ago, but now able to undertake the work of supporting their pastor with a respectable salary. The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. The Lord bless domestic missions.

Yours, &c., J. A.

AND YET ANOTHER.

From a Missionary in Georgia.

Dear Brother—As my year under your commission has closed, I herewith send you my last quarterly report. We are not going to apply for a commission from the Board for this year, though I expect to continue in the same field. I will be able to receive my support from another source. I will, however, write to you occasionally of our success and prospects in this important field, &c. Yours, &c.,

A. E.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

DAY OF SPECIAL PRAYER.

The General Assembly has recommended the observance of the last Thursday of February as a day of special prayer for the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the young men in the literary institutions of our country. The resolution is in the following terms:

Resolved, That the Assembly recognizes with gratitude the goodness of God in pouring out his grace upon several of our institutions of learning during the past year; and whilst the churches are invoked to pray without ceasing to the Lord of the harvest for the continuance of his favour, the last Thursday of February next is recommended for general observance as a day of special prayer for the Divine blessing upon the youth of our land who are pursuing their studies in literary institutions, and especially that many of them may be called and qualified by the grace of God for the work of the ministry.

The objects in the resolution are two, viz: 1. The eternal well-being of the numerous young men in the institutions of learning throughout our country. 2. The introduction of many of these youth into the ministry of Jesus Christ.

Let each member of our Church bear in mind that the objects of the day of special prayer are inestimably precious and important.

PRAY ALWAYS—PRAY NOW.

Special prayer for the youth of our country implies the necessity of praying always for them, of praying daily. The recommendation of the General Assembly is designed to give increased intensity to habitual supplications. Our Lord has enjoined prayer for the sending forth of labourers into the harvest; and unless his injunction is neglected through ignorance, negligence, or a deliberate undervaluing of its importance, it will be the subject of frequent, if not daily remembrance at the throne of grace. And the salvation of our youth in general, ought it not to be an object of persevering supplication?

Brethren, wait not for the day of special prayer. Pray always. Pray now. If you wait at all, wait in hope; wait praying.

ADDRESS TO THE CHURCHES.

The following article was written in reference to the day of prayer for colleges, a number of years ago, when the Rev. Dr. Cornelius was Secretary of the American Education Society. As an address to the churches, it contains many interesting thoughts. We have altered a few figures and words, to adapt the communication more to the times. It first appeared in the "American Quarterly Register," for 1828, from which it is now extracted.

Dear Christian Brethren—Permit us in a few words, to "stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance." The last Thursday of February is at hand. Blessed day! How many warm and gushing emotions is the bare mention of it calculated to excite in a thousand pious hearts. What though no worldling's pulse will be quickened by its approach; no jubilant peals will usher it in; no far-sighted politician will mark it in his calendar; and it will come and go unheeded by the busy and the pleasure-loving throng; surely the entire Church will anticipate its return, with a deep and thrilling interest. Faith, and hope, and charity will kindle in her eye at its early dawn, and impart a holy importunity to her supplications. Angels, we doubt not, will rejoice in their celestial spheres, and God himself pour down blessings of grace, when he looks and beholds his children wrestling togēther with the "Angel of the covenant."

Shall we stop to prove that prayer is a duty, and that God is moved by it to bestow blessings upon the world which he would otherwise withhold? This might have been needful in a darker age, but "the darkness is past and the true light now shineth." We will not therefore keep you a moment longer, beloved brethren, from the main design of this address. It is to engage, if possible, every Christian in the land to pray for the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit upon our Colleges; and especially to secure for them the united intercessions of the Church on the day already specified, which we hope will be devoted to fasting and prayer by all who love the Saviour.

However we may sometimes find ourselves straitened for want of arguments and motives in discussing subjects of ordinary interest, we feel no such embarrassment on the present occasion. The great difficulty is to select, condense, and arrange our topics, so as within narrow limits to lay the case fairly before your consciences. God blesses and curses the world by human agency; and it is needless to say, that under this economy, the destinies of the church and the state will soon be in the hands of those who are now receiving their education. In our academic halls are the future lawgivers and religious teachers of this great republic; and oh, what unknown interests of time and eternity are suspended upon the few months, or years, which remain of their pupilage. Their piety, if by the grace of God they are pious, is public property, and there is none so valuable in all the investments and securities of the government. So on the other hand, the lax principles and kindred habits of liberally educated men, are more onerous to the public than all the burdens of taxation. Every student in college, of respectable talents and acquirements, may be regarded as the representative of at least a thousand immortal beings, who will be moulded by his opinions and example; to say nothing of the amazing influence, either good or bad, which will go down from him to distant generations. Contemplated in this light, the aggregate amount of good to be gained, or lost, in the short space of four years, baffles the mighty and almost illimitable grasp of imagination itself.

The number of young men now enjoying the advantages of a public classical education in these United States, is estimated at ten thousand. Of course, a large number will leave our colleges within the present year, and go forth to scatter blessings over the face of the land, or to sow it with their errors and their vices. In twenty years the number will greatly increase; and at the present rate merely, will amount, in a single generation, to many thousands! Give us this army of educated men, this immense weight of talent, and energy, and influence, and what is there of ignorance or irreligion in the nation, which could long stand before it? But what cause will this disciplined host be inclined to espouse? Under whose banner shall it be marshalled? Will it declare for Christ and the church, or against both? These, dear brethren, are momentous questions, and will lead you, we doubt not, anxiously to inquire, what is the religious character of the students now in our public seminaries?

It has been stated that about one third of the young men in the New Englaud colleges are professors of religion. Our information from the middle, southern, and western colleges, is much less particular; but, we fear, that a large proportion of the whole ten thousand, included in our present estimate, are not on the Lord's side. More than three to one, probably, are still his enemies; and will in one way or other act in hostility to his kingdom, unless their hearts be changed by his grace. And must the great body of these precious youth lose their souls? Must the churches be without pastors, and the land without pious rulers, and the heathen without missionaries, when there is so much talent and knowledge and influence to be sanctified in our higher seminaries? And what hinders its being sanctified? Who will be answerable for consequences, should six thousand, or even one thousand of these gifted and privileged young men remain unconverted when they leave college? Will not the American church, will not you who profess to love Zion be answerable?

Why should the majority of educated men, nay, why should even a minority any longer throw the weight of their talents into the wrong scale? What withholds the Spirit from descending upon all our literary institutions and subduing stout-hearted sinners? Ah, brethren, is it not our unbelief? Our faith wavers. Our heart is not enlarged. Our mouth is not filled because it is not opened. In reference to the conversion of students during their academic course, we have expected but little, we have prayed for but little, we have attempted but little; and is it strange that but comparatively little has been done? Can you offer any scriptural reason why you should not pray for the conversion of every scholar in our hundred colleges, or why the prayer may not this very year be answered? The time will come, and who can tell how near it may be, when all the talents and science and literature in our great public schools will be sanctified by the Divine Spirit, and when "holiness to the Lord" will be written in all their halls and upon every course of study. But prayer and faith only can bring that day; and whenever the efficacy of holy importunity and confidence in the promises shall be fully tested, "it will come and will not tarry." Why then should we put it far from us, by supinely waiting for it, when our souls ought to be going forth to meet it? Why are not the fountains already purified?

The truth is, dear brethren, and it must be told, that the church at large is not awake to the duty and importance of praying for revivals in colleges. But few Christians, we believe, have yet contemplated the subject in half its important bearings; while the great majority of professors in this country have not hitherto taken any part in the annual concert. It is extremely encouraging to know, however, that since God first put it into the hearts of a few to propose and to unite in such a concert, the holy flame has been spreading from church to church; and from that blessed era, (for we must call it an era,) revivals have become more frequent and powerful in our classical seminaries than they ever were before. Indeed, when we look at facts and coincidences, we find it impossible to doubt, that God has affixed to this concert the broad seal of his approbation. Again and again has that promise been verified, "Before they call I will answer: and while they are yet speaking I will hear." In some instances has the Spirit been poured out on the very day of fasting and prayer, and numbers of students have been "pricked in the heart." In many other cases a deep solemnity has fallen upon colleges, while the children of God were yet upon their knees, and has been manifestly connected with subsequent revivals. One such case, at least, occurred last February. We saw it. If our hearts deceive us not, we felt it: and after a few weeks of gradually increasing interest, the Holy Ghost came down upon the seminary "like a mighty rushing wind." Reviewing the recent history of college revivals, we can no more question that God has heard and answered prayer, than if we were assured of it by an audible voice from heaven. But how much greater things than these might have been done, had there been more prayer, and more faith, and more fasting; had two or three millions of Christians united in the annual concert, and often renewed their supplications in behalf of our colleges.

Permit us then, dear brethren, of every denomination, and in every section of the American church, to be importunate with you in this regard: and we solemnly put it to your consciences, whether we ought, in any case, to take a denial? In asking you to unite with us in fasting and supplication, on the last Thursday of February, we plead for your sons and brothers in our public seminaries, and for your own children also, who yet are enemies to God. We plead for the destitute churches in the older States, and for the scattered population of the West and the South. We plead for all the invaluable institutions of our common country: for the Sabbath, for the laws, for public morality and safety, for all our republican constitutions of government. We plead for the red man within our borders and without—for Africa, and Asia, and the isles of the sea.

Do you then care for your own flesh and blood? Do you love the church, or your country, or the souls of the poor heathen? Do you wish to see a new and holier impulse given to all the machinery of Christian benevolence; and that every part of it may move onward with increasing majesty and power after you are dead? Do your hearts, "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," ever go forth to meet the prophetic glories of the latter day? If so, you will pray, you cannot help praying for the effusion of the Spirit upon all our colleges; for the early sanctification of all their youthful and beloved inmates; and you will look forward with no ordinary degree of interest to that day, which has been designated for united fasting and prayer in their behalf.

God is not slack concerning his promises; the Saviour has lost none of his interest in the welfare of Zion; no encouragement to faith and prayer has been withdrawn. Let the church then "come boldly to the throne of grace;" let her resolve, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me," and how soon will the heavens open over her head! How copiously will they "pour down righteousness" upon the seats of learning, and in receiving pastors and missionaries from them, how will those mourning disciples who have long sat in "desolate places" sing, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."

Here we might close; but it occurs to us with great force, that by striving to fix your thoughts exclusively upon colleges at the approaching concert, we should too much narrow the ground of holy wrestling. Several thousand young men, who will soon enter the higher seminaries, are now pursuing their studies in academies and other preparatory schools. Supposing one fourth of this number to be now pious, which is a large estimate, what multitudes are "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel"—"without hope and without God in the world."

Now all the arguments and motives which should influence the Church to pray for them in a more advanced stage of their education, apply here, even with greater force. For if it is of such amazing importance, as has been represented, that the best talents and learning should be dedicated to the service of God, then this dedication cannot take place too early in life. There is manifestly great advantage in giving the heart to God, before any of those evil propensities and dispositions ripen into habits, which it often costs the converted student in college, long and painful efforts to subdue. A large number who are now unreconciled to God, will become members of our public seminaries within the present year; and how great is the hostile influence which they will carry along with them, if their hearts are not changed—an influence by which some of your own sons may be led away from the paths of virtue and destroyed.

Pray then, Christian brethren, for all the preparatory seminaries as well as for the colleges; that God will revive his work in them; that he will purify the smaller fountains and thus make all the streams which flow into the larger ones salutary; that "our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth;" that they may be "all righteous," and all be made happily instrumental in promoting the glory of God and the salvation of the world.

A PASTORAL LETTER

TO CANDIDATES FOR THE GOSPEL MINISTRY.

Issued by the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church.

PRESBYTERIAN EDUCATION ROOMS,
Philadelphia, February, 1853.

Dear Brother in Christ—It is our earnest desire, in this pastoral letter, to assist the reflections which may naturally arise in your mind, on the day of special prayer, from the inquiry, "What can I do to increase the number of candidates for the ministry, in the Presbyterian Church?" Such an inquiry is obviously in accordance with the spirit of the observance, recommended by the Assembly, and with a true sense of your own responsibility.

1. Permit us affectionately to specify, as an instrumentality bearing upon this subject, the influence of your personal example. A holy life is the crowning excellence of the Gospel plan. It is an argument priceless and irresistible for every thing good. The best recommendation to others of the sacred profession you are aiming to enter, is your own appreciation of it, as indicated by a holy walk and conversation. A candidate for the ministry influences, for good or for evil, the opinions and purposes of others. This influence, generally an unconscious one, is both extensive and efficacious, and needs the careful supervision of the inward principle of spiritual religion. How precious is the example of a classmate, or friend, of eminent piety, in keeping before your own mind the responsibilities of the Christian ministry. His very presence excites awe and reminds of heaven. His life is an argument for his profession. Wherever he goes, he will give a favourable representation of its claims; and commend the pursuit, which he has felt called of God to engage in.

On the other hand, the prejudice which an unsuitable, indiscreet, or godless candidate may excite against the ministry, can never be portrayed in human language. As a matter of fact, such a prejudice has been engendered in many a neighbourhood. Failures are disastrous to an extent far exceeding the computations of the delinquent, and are followed by a desolation which it is always easier to create and to extend, than to repair. Failures are not properly limited to those candidates who cease to study for the ministry, and who turn off into other professions. Some who persevere in their preparatory studies do more evil to the ministerial ranks than those who have deliberately changed their course. Every candidate fails in an important sense, when he produces the impression that he is undervaluing the solemnity and responsibility of the sacred office, or has inadequate qualifications for the discharge of its duties. The world, indeed, is prone to censure severely, and is often uncharitable in its criticisms; and yet, on the whole, its estimate of character is more apt to be too favourable than the reverse. And even if a want of charity were the general characteristic of its decisions, this very perversity would constitute a plea for Christian watchfulness and prudence. A careless word, a hasty temper, and, much more, a guilty act, on the part of a candidate, may fatally impair, in the minds of others, the authority and dignity of the sacred office itself. It is thus possible for a young man, who has not the requisite qualifications of piety, or of intellect, by entering the ministry himself, to keep others out of it. There is unquestionably great need of high personal character, in order to exalt the profession, in the midst of a wicked and gainsaying generation.

Some of the best friends of our Church have expressed their fears lest a too easy access to the ministry, through the system of benevolent aid extended to students, may not have impaired its general character and usefulness, as well as its numbers. Whilst the Board of Education have no evidence of the justice of this apprehension, it is their duty to take warning from every friendly suggestion, and to endeavour to "stir up the pure minds" of the young brethren under their care, on all suitable occasions, and in reference to all proper topics of exhortation. High personal qualifications are necessary conditions in keeping the operations of the Board free from reproach. The evil of encouraging improper candidates extends into the very heart of the prosperity of the Church. Nor is it the least of its results that it reacts against the increase of the ministry.

We, therefore, tenderly invite you to consider the connexion that exists between your own character, and the efforts of the Church to call the attention of her pious youth to the ministerial office. One of the best ways in which you can effectively co-operate in these efforts, is by presenting an example of what a minister ought to be. Let your light shine. Let the graces of your Christian character unite with the dignity of the office, in pleading for good-will toward it. An old writer has said: "That is not the best sermon which makes the hearers go away talking to one another, and praising the speaker; but that which makes them go away thoughtful and serious, and hastening to be alone." So that is not the best candidate who makes the greatest impression for ready wit and polished manners, and deepest intellect; but the one who has most of the love of Christ in his heart, and who adds to the acquisitions of learning the force of a religious character, that represents truth and grace to men.

2. A candidate for the ministry may assist in increasing the numbers of his profession by judicious intercourse with pious and promising young men. The amount of ignorance prevailing in the Church on the nature of a call to the ministry, its claims, its wants, &c., is not inconsiderable. There are comparatively few means of instruction, and the subject itself has its mysteries and sacred difficulties. You have yourself felt the need of friendly counsel in solving its cases of conscience; and perhaps your mind was first called to consider the matter through the timely exhortations of some one, who was interested in doing good. Is there no pious young man within your circle, of the right qualifications, whom you could reach in a similar way? The influence of a good, serious talk, may form and shape his whole future life. Or a letter, addressed to him, may not be without its effect.

There is undoubtedly need of great prudence in introducing and in pressing such a subject. Mischief may be often done, instead of good, in urging young men to become candidates; and even the way of proposing and arguing the claims of the ministry may be repulsive and do harm. But God gives wisdom to those who love Him and who ask for it. When the heart is right, the language is not often wrong. Friendship sanctions, and religion enjoins, the duty of social exhortation; and it is impossible to estimate the good which may be wrought by the timely use of providential opportunities in addressing the mind and conscience. A word, spoken in season, is good. So is a book lent,—often better than an argument, or than a personal conversation of any kind. But the two go well together. You may do an important service for Christ by calling the attention of a friend to this solemn subject through the various channels open to judicious, Christian intercourse.

3. Another mode of promoting the objects of the day of special prayer, is by labouring for the conversion of the impenitent. You have special opportunities, as a candidate for the ministry, of doing good to the souls around you. If in an institution of learning, or its vicinity, where youth are living "without hope and without God in the world," you can have access to at least some of them, with the prospect, under God, of imparting spiritual blessings. No harvest-field has so rich a soil as a college vineyard. The conversion of educated youth, more than any other class, seems, in Providence, to redound to the advancement of the kingdom of Christ. With cultivated gifts, and active zeal, prompt in service and influential by position, they are fitted to do important work under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Some of them, in the common course of providence, may be led to enter the ministry; and others by a religious life and influence may contribute, more incidentally but still effectively, to the same result, in their day and generation. No one has lived in vain who has been the instrument of leading an educated young man to the cross of Christ.

Without confining our remarks to institutions of learning, we may say, more generally, that in proportion as religion flourishes any where, will the ministerial ranks be ordinarily supplied. Whatever agency, therefore, you may have in quickening the Christian graces of others, has a bearing upon the matter before us. The mysterious connexion of causes with remote events need not impair our faith; on the contrary, its certainty is encouragement for persevering zeal. Every effort, put forth to do good to the souls of men, will have some influence—it may be great influence in bringing labourers into the vineyard. Be "always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

4. Prayer is a means, enjoined by the Lord of the harvest, and open to you, as to all. You have access to the throne of the heavenly grace, and are urged to come to it with special supplications. The harvest of the world has an interest in your petitions. Endeavour to pray with an intelligent conviction of the wants of dying millions, of the adaptation of the gospel to save them, and of the scarcity of labourers in the field. Pray, as though momentous interests were depending upon your fidelity; as though your own unutterable pleadings were conditions in the procurement of the blessing. The great deficiency of the Church is in her prayers. And yet here, under God, is her hope. Her dependence is her strength.

It is a great privilege for all God's people to invoke in an especial manner His blessing upon the youth of the Church. The simultaneous offering from so many hearts is well calculated to stimulate each to holy fidelity. If any prove negligent in this great duty, dear brother, let it not be you! Let youth pray for youth! Let a sense of your own gracious privileges make you earnestly solicitous to have others partakers of them also. Be drawn towards those of the same period of life, in affectionate sympathy, and Christian longing for their welfare. They are part of the harvest, of which Christ is Lord. They are sheaves to be laid upon his altar. Our impenitent youth should be remembered before God. Their immortal destiny has a dependence upon what we do, and how we pray. Solemn thought! Let it dwell in the mind along with the memories of a Saviour's love!

5. One more reflection is worthy your consideration, in answer to the inquiry, "What can I do to promote the objects of the day of special prayer?" We beg you to resolve to keep the increase of the ministry near your heart, when you enter upon the active duties of your profession. If ministers do not give a sufficient prominence to this topic, their hearers will not take a sufficient interest in it. Without implying any more than ordinary imperfection in the present generation of ministers, we may rightly exhort you to magnify your office, by labouring with more zeal for its perpetuation on a scale of elevated character and of increased numbers. Pray statedly in public "to the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into his harvest." Preach up the subject with earnestness, discretion, and solemnity. Converse with parents about dedicating their children to God with the unreserve of Hannah. Cherish the young, who may become Samuels and Timothys in Zion. See that a Christian school is established, for their nurture in the Lord, as well as for their instruction in knowledge. And in every wise way keep the ministry high in the thoughts and esteem of the people.

Thus aiming at doing your whole duty, and fortifying yourself beforehand for its performance, you may be permitted in Divine providence to see one, and another, and another, of the choicest youth in your congregation, offering themselves for the work of the ministry unto Him, who calleth whom and how he will.

With these suggestions, which we hope may be profitable in assisting your meditations on the subject indicated by the observance of a day of special prayer, we commend the whole matter to your candid consideration.

The dearth of candidates at the present time, gives an emphasis to whatever of truth may be contained in this communication.

Praying that you may be strengthened with all might by the Spirit in the inner man, and be enriched in all utterance and knowledge, and thoroughly furnished unto all good works,

We are your friends and Fellow servants in Christ,

C. Van Rensselaer,
Wm. Chester,

In behalf of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

DONATION OF FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

The establishment of parochial Schools in a number of our congregations, especially missionary ones, is prevented by a want of funds. Every day is showing the importance of Christian education; and our church has a great work before her in the training of her youth. The Board of Education are happy to announce that it is now in their power to assist in establishing and sustaining Parochial Schools, to an extent not hitherto practicable. By the liberality of a member of the Brick Church, New York, a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars is placed at the disposal of the Board for this particular object during the present year. The name of the gentleman is withheld at his own request; but the necessity of the case compels the Board to call the attention of the Church to the fact of their having received this large donation, in order that it may be made available. The following is the letter:

New York, Dec. 24th, 1852.

Dear Sir—I agree to furnish for the use of establishing and sustaining Parochial Schools in the Presbyterian Church, during the year 1853, any sum that can be advantageously used, not exceeding five thousand dollars, ($5000,) at such times as it may be wanted—the Board giving a few days notice.

I remain your's truly,

The Board of Education, therefore, give notice that they are prepared to make an appropriation, ordinarily not exceeding one hundred dollars for the year, to any school that may be established according to the plan of the General Assembly, and that may need assistance from the common fund. It is hoped that this offer may lead many churches to think of this matter, and to act at once. A reasonable prospect of continuing a school, and a determination to use every means in Providence towards that end, ought to exist before commencing the effort. May the Lord enable our Church to do her whole duty to the young!

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, January 13, 1853.

Missions to Chinese.—We have received, since our last issue, a letter from the Rev. A. P. Happer, Canton, October 28, from which we are glad to learn that his eyes are much better, and that he was able to resume preaching. We have also received a letter from the Rev. W. Speer, San Francisco, November 30, from which extracts are inserted in another column. It will be seen that the prospects of this mission are still quite encouraging. The Chinese have not erected any temples to idols. A man of considerable influence among them as the head of a company, who would probably have been hostile to the mission, has been obliged to return to China on account of his health, and his successor is a young man of fine abilities and promise, who was educated in one of the mission schools in his own country. Another young man, educated in the same way, and one from whom much may be expected, is spoken of as "touched by the Spirit of grace, and feeling deeply on the subject of his own salvation." Mr. Speer had heard of thirteen others, who had been scholars in the missionary schools in Canton province. His visits to the sick Chinese in the Hospital were gratefully received. The question of the location of the mission was still under consideration.

Siam.—Our letters from Bangkok are dated September 14th and 28th. We regret to learn that the health of Mr. Bush was far from being good. He has never fully recovered from the serious illness of last year, and was subject to fever, returning frequently; a change of climate would probably become necessary. The brethren were laying their plans to set on foot one or two schools, regarding them, however, somewhat as an experiment.

India.—We have received letters dated at Lahor, November 4; Lodiana, to October 8; Ambala, to October 12; Saharanpur, to October 23; Agra, to November 6; Futtehgurh, to November 6; and Allahabad, to November 6. As to the health of the mission families, these letters report no material changes; and their labours are going on steadily. Mr. Porter says, "One of our oldest girls in the orphan asylum [at Lodiana] was admitted yesterday to the privileges of the church." Mr. Campbell at Saharunpur says, "Our missionary work here goes on as usual—on the whole encouraging. During the last three months we have been privileged to baptize three adult and three infant members of the church. Our native Christians continue to give us much satisfaction." At Agra quite a desirable measure had been commenced, the establishment of a school for East Indian girls. The only school of a superior kind heretofore accessible to them was one conducted by Roman Catholic nuns. Some recent cases of conversion to the Romanist faith, of scholars belonging to Protestant families, notwithstanding the customary and deceptive profession of not interfering with the religious views of their pupils, have had the effect of awakening attention to the danger of sending children to this Romanist school. Liberal offers of pecuniary means, to assist in providing a suitable building for the proposed school, were made to our missionaries by European friends at Agra; the subject received their best consideration, and they finally resolved to purchase a property, situated near the school for boys of the same class. Urgent circumstances required our brethren to act promptly if at all in this matter; but, although it will involve some additional expense, their proceedings seem to be fully justified by the leadings of providence towards them; and we trust great good will result from both these schools. The East Indians as a class are increasing in numbers, intelligence, and influence. They are natives of the country, inured of course to the climate, familiar with the usages of the people, Christians by profession, and if savingly acquainted with the truth as it is in Jesus, as some of them now are, they may exert an important influence in extending a knowledge of the gospel among the Hindus.

Liberia Mission.—Letters have been received dated to October 9th.—Mr. and Mrs. Wilson had made a visit to Cape Palmas, in the vacation of the Alexander High School, expecting to be absent a few weeks. The vessel in which they were to return was wrecked, and their stay was unavoidably prolonged to about three months. They received much kindness from the Episcopal missionaries at Cape Palmas, gained valuable information concerning their missionary plans and work, and returned to Monrovia in the enjoyment of usual health, where Mr. Wilson resumed his duties in the school. Mr. James' school continues to prosper. More applications were made to fill some seats left vacant than could be granted. He had taken four native children under his care, whom he hoped to retain and to educate in a Christian manner. Donations of clothing for these children, two boys and two girls, would be quite acceptable to Mr. James, who is a man worthy of every confidence and support.

Indian Missions.—Mr. Edmund Evans and wife, and Miss Mary Jane Hagaman, have been appointed to the Choctaw Mission; and Miss Mary Jane Burns, and Miss Maria Shellabarger, to the Chickasaw Mission. They were at Shreveport, La., on their journey, on the 28th of December, and before this, we trust, have safely reached their stations. We are thankful to be able to report the appointment of additional teachers, male and female, who expect to leave for their stations in the spring, and whose names and designation will be then stated. Two or three teachers and two or three farmers are still wanted.

France.—A correspondent writes under date of December 7th, 1852, as follows:

"The change which has taken place in the form of the French Government has not yet affected, either favourably or unfavourably, our missionary work in France; it is certain that we enjoyed much less freedom under the Republican government, than we did under Louis Philippe."

Italy.—The same correspondent says, "It is now a month since our return from Florence, but matters are rather aggravated since we left. The poor Madiai (in prison for reading the Bible) are not yet released. Capital punishment is now in legal force for offences against the religion of the State; and other brethren besides the Madiai have been thrown into prison for Christ's sake. We have been much pleased with the pure, simple faith of our Tuscan brethren, without any admixture of political views. Pray that they may remain steadfast unto the end, and that the word of the Lord may again have free course amongst them."

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. L. JANVIER.

The Gospel preached by the way-side.

Thursday, Aug. 19, 1852.—For two evenings of this week the weather has prevented me from going to the bazár. The rains in the Hills are so heavy that one is often weather-bound not only in the evening, but all day long. This evening toward sunset, rode down toward the principal bazár, by the Kálka road, which takes one some distance past the bazár, and then, by a branch road leads back to it. At the fork of the roads there are a few houses, and there is an open space where people often sit, and where I had occasionally paused and addressed them. Seeing several collected this evening, I stopped and began to talk with them. One came up and began to make remarks about my saddle and clothing, professing to be much pleased, and asking what I had given for one article and another. This was done more probably with a view to gratify me, than from any real curiosity. I told him that it was not a matter of much importance, and that he could learn the prices of those things more advantageously at the shops in the bazár. Another made an unimportant inquiry and received a suitable answer. "But my friends," said I, turning to the people, "I have something to say to you. I don't know who you are, or what you are, whether Musulmáns or Hindús, or if I may in any case know that, it is a distinction that I have nothing to do with at present. I address you as my fellow men, and as involved with me in a common calamity: for whatever else you may be, one thing is certain, you are sinners. I have travelled far, and have found that everywhere men are sinners. Various evidences of this have appeared, and people themselves have acknowledged it to be true. You and your neighbours are doubtless in the same situation." "Yes," remarked some one, "this is quite true." Missionary—"The fact is we all belong to a sinful race; you and I are of one stock; our first parents went astray from God, and from that time to the present all their posterity have been a rebellious and unholy race. If you ask even a person who is living a godly life, what he thinks of himself, he will tell you that he finds himself very bad, very corrupt." Native—"Yes, this is correct." Missionary—"And those who say this speak the truth: for there is a great deal of evil still in them, and their eyes are opened to see it, while others are blind, and know not the depravity of their own hearts. If then such is the case with those who are comparatively good, what must be the condition of others who have never thought on their ways, but who are yet living in all their sins?" Native—"They must certainly be accounted great transgressors."

After dwelling a little on this subject, and endeavouring to impress it by several illustrations, I remarked, "This then is the state you are in; sunken in sin: practising it day by day, as a matter of course: violating the claims of truth, honesty, purity, love, and, in short, doing whatever carnal desire, or carnal interest may prompt. How are you to escape? How are you to get out of this condition? What remedy is there?" Native—"There seems to be no remedy." Missionary—"And there is another difficulty that I must bring to your notice; God has a quarrel with you for your sins, a most just and righteous quarrel. You are exposed to his wrath and curse, and what can you do to satisfy him? Even if you should now promise to sin no more, how would you blot out the long, black list of sins already committed?" Native—"We can do nothing toward that. We have no power to cancel it." Missionary—"True you can do nothing, and not only so, you have no power to cease from sin: that is, you have no power to make yourselves better. You have this evil depraved heart, which still goes on sinning. What then will you do?" No one was prepared to answer the question. One or two who spoke, seemed to acknowledge very sincerely that it was a difficult case.

I then proceeded, at some length, to set before them the way of salvation, and ended by saying, "I will tell you who this Saviour is. It is he from whom I am called. You call me an Isái (Christian), and Isá (Jesus,) from whom this title is taken, is the Saviour I am telling you of. He it is whose name you and I and all men ought to take, for He it is that has redeemed us." Thus far there had been a good degree of silent attention; some seemed quite interested; and when the statement respecting the cancelling of man's debt by his surety was made, it seemed to be received and acquiesced in, as a most suitable and satisfactory arrangement. But so soon as the name of the Saviour was brought forward, the opposition of the heart to the truth, and to Him who is himself the Truth, the Way, and the Life, began plainly to appear. "No," said one, "Christ has no such power as this. Christ himself will need to have intercession made for him." Much of this sort was said, and with such earnestness and loudness of voice, that I desisted, till their vehemence should spend itself a little. One said, "You do not yourself follow Christ, and what you preach is not true Christianity." This last remark referred of course to the charges they are accustomed to bring against us: viz., eating pork, drinking wine, shaving, and the like. For many of these poor creatures appear really to think that Christ really forbade us to do all these things. And though we do not drink wine, yet they know that we defend the legality of doing so, while they think it is prohibited: and still farther, many of them think that if we were true followers of Christ, we would be Mohammedans, for they have been told that Christ foretold Mohammed, and directed his followers to receive and believe on him. Thus in triple darkness are they encased.

I replied, "My dear friends, you had better be calm, and hear me a little. The things you are saying are not new to me at all. Many have said the same to me before; and long before leaving my own country, I knew who and what served as the reliance of Mohammedans. Were it necessary, the claims of Mohammedans, Hindus, and Sikhs, might all be examined, but the whole night would not be sufficient for the purpose. Besides, you speak without consideration, and without inquiry. You have never examined the grounds on which Christianity rests, but on hearing it proclamed, with all its blessed offers and promises, you thus thoughtlessly oppose it." To this they listened pretty well, and I added, "Now I have a word to say, to which no one can take exception; let him that is still living in his sins, and who has derived no benefit from his religion, consider seriously whether there may not be some flaw in it; and let it be the daily business of each one of you to look to him, who is the gracious hearer of prayer, and entreat him to bestow light and grace, and to manifest the truth to you: and may he graciously guide you." So saying I left them to him with whom is the residue of the Spirit.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

THE UNITARIANISM, PANTHEISM, AND POLYTHEISM OF THE HINDUS: BY THE REV. A. H. SEELEY.*

There is no nation which can with greater propriety be called polytheists and idolaters than the Hindu; at the same time, there are none who, not only in their writings, but in their daily intercourse, more strongly assert their belief in the existence of one eternal and unchangeable God. I have met with but few persons in India who would not assent to the doctrine of our standards—"There is but one only living and true God." Brahm, the name of the supreme spirit in the religion of the Hindu, is represented in their sacred books "without beginning or end, eternal, that which is, and must remain unchangeable, without dimensions, infinite, without parts, immaterial, invisible, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, enjoying ineffable felicity." Another writer says, "Brahm is placable, glorious, the Creator, the Preserver, and the Regenerator of all things."

It will be seen that the natural attributes are here ascribed to Brahm, but not the moral. No allusion is ever made to them. The voluminous writings of Hinduism may be searched in vain for them. Most of them are not mentioned at all; others are spoken of but to be renounced. One writer expressly declares that "love does not enter into the divine nature at all; he loves no one, he hates no one; and no one can be like him until he ceases both to love and to hate."

How cold, cheerless, and repulsive, is this representation of the character of the Deity. There may be that in it which we fear and dread, but there is nothing that we can love or reverence. His omnipotence may astonish us, or his eternity may strike us with amazement; but if he has no moral attribute in his nature, and manifests no moral sentiments to the world, we cannot worship him, we cannot love him. It has been well said, "that a god without moral attributes, must be to man in his present state the same as no god at all. Practically, the delineation of such a god could only be equivalent to the promulgation of a system of atheism." Even the natural attributes are applied to him in such a way, and are taught in connection with so many other and contradictory doctrines, that many of the words in use produce not the least impression upon the conduct, worship, or manner of life. The language of the Hindu scriptures on this subject, does not convey corresponding ideas. Absurd as it may seem, still no fact is more evident from the Hindu writings, than the one that terms are applied to Brahm, which declare him to be without attributes. A god with attributes and without! These opposite states, however, are declared to be successive, not contemporaneous, but how the change can take place in consistency with the immutability of God, it is very difficult to comprehend. The Hindu, however, declares that his existing with attributes is so momentary that it cannot properly be called a change.

At one time Brahm exists Sagun, or with attributes, at another Nirgun, or without attributes; he primarily exists without attributes: this is his proper state. Then he is the one in such a sense, that no other one can possibly be. Brahm then is not only the only being in the universe, but he is the only possible being. When he exists in this state, then all other existence is impossible. He then, according to every system of Hindu philosophy, exists in a deep, profound repose. "Even consciousness would be an invasion of his unity," "which, according to the Hindus, is so absolute that it excludes the existence even of an idea or notion." Hence Brahm is one in every imaginable sense, for there is no other god, there is no angel, no creature human or divine, and no external world. There is nothing but Brahm, and he is incomprehensible. Such is the supreme spirit of the Hindus in his original and perfect state—in the state Nirgun.

Brahm, however, does not always exist in this state. He does not for ever remain without attributes, motionless and alone in the succession of ages. He awakes—how or by what means we are not told. He next becomes conscious of his existence, and breaks the deep and universal silence by declaring that "Brahm is." He is then immediately invested with attributes, and "the desire of being many arises in his mind." "At once, though himself void of form, he in sport imagines a form—it is the universal form, or the ideal form of the subsequently manifested universe. This idea of form is succeeded by volition, and the ideal form becomes actually manifested. The wish conceived by Brahm to 'become many' was immediately efficacious in causing him to assume the apparent reality of all those multitudinous existences and forms which constitute at once the souls of men and the objects of materialism." Another writer says Brahm no sooner assumes attributes than he puts forth an almighty act, not for the purpose of creating out of nothing—for this is never taught or believed by a Hindu—but to produce from his own divine essence the varied universe." By this is meant all creatures, all things, all the innumerable deities of the Hindu scriptures, all spirits, good and bad, men, beasts of all kinds, and all inanimate nature. These are all formed from the countless host of essences thrown off from the mysterious Brahm by his own energy. According to this system, every thing that exists, or seems to exist, is but an illusory manifestation of the Deity. "All things are but illusory manifestations of the divine essence."

Here we come, then, to the doctrine of pantheism, a spiritual pantheism taught in the clearest and most unequivocal manner. While Brahm is everything, everything is Brahm. This doctrine lays the foundation for the stupendous system of idolatry which prevails throughout India; it is perfectly compatible with every form of idol worship, and, indeed, is the foundation of those arguments by which idolatry is constantly defended by the Hindus. For if everything be God, and God be everything, then an idol is God, and God is an idol. This is not a mere idle speculation of Hindu philosophers: it is not a dead theory, but it is living and active, it is talked about, reasoned about, and believed in. As soon as Brahm has thrown off these essences or parts of himself, of which the different orders of creatures and things come forth, he lays aside his attributes, and sinks into his original state—a state of repose—a repose so deep that it is not disturbed even by a dream. He of course can have no care for the world, or the creatures that are in it, for he hears nothing, he sees nothing, he cares for nothing. As such, he cannot be an object of worship; none are so besotted as to worship him—not a temple in India is dedicated to him. The good and the bad are alike to him; he can neither reward the one nor punish the other.

Again: it is held that as the innumerable essences are thrown off from Brahm while in a state of activity, or while possessing attributes, and as this is not his most perfect state, these portions of himself carry with them an imperfection: "though preponderating in different degrees, either according to their respective capacities, or the retributive awards of an eternal ordination." As an instance of this imperfection, it is said, that as Brahm has awakened into consciousness of his own existence, so there does inhere in each separate soul the conviction of its own distinct and independent existence. This the Hindu declares is a delusion. "Brahm exists, and he alone; all else is illusion, deception."

This theory is like the former, in holding that nothing but Brahm really exists; but it differs from it in this: That whereas the former holds the material and spiritual universe to be a real immediate manifestation of the whole Deity, the latter maintains that the spiritual universe consists of isolated, though physically unseparated portions of the Deity; while what is supposed to be the material universe has no existence at all. The Hindu knows that his senses sometimes deceive him; he therefore concludes that they always do. If I look, he says, into the Ganges, I can see the sun; or if I cast my eyes upon a sandy desert, I may see a beautiful expanse of water; but it is not really a sun which I see in the river, or a lake of water I see in the desert: it is an illusion. My senses deceive me. Well, then, such are all the phenomena of the external world. They are all illusive appearances.

Again: according to another theory, all beings were evolved from the substance of Brahm, by successive developments. The advocates of this theory maintain, that from him directly nothing but pure spirit did or can emanate; but from the first developments others were evolved successively, less and less pure in their spirituality, until things which we call and regard as material were last of all evolved. This to most minds would teach the doctrine that matter has sprung from spirit, and illustrations given by Hindu writers seem to strengthen the idea. They say, "as plants spring from the earth, as hair of the head grows from the body, so does the universe from the Unalterable." Again, we are told "to look at the spider and his web. Of what is the latter composed? is it not an expanded portion of the very substance of the spider's own body? And is it not by an exertion of the little insect's energy that it has been drawn out?" So, says the Hindu, is the universe drawn or spun out by the energy of Brahm, from his own substance.

Again. The difficulty of conceiving how spirit can act upon matter, has led to another theory, called by Dr. Duff the mythologic system:—It does not exist independent of all the rest. "It presupposes one or other of them as the alone substratum on which it could rest. It admits of being engrafted on any one of them. It is altogether a grosser scheme." "The Pantheistic and Mythologic theories unite not merely in way of juxtaposition, but of intimate incorporation." Upon the character of Brahm, this system agrees with all the rest. But it teaches that when Brahm desired to put forth his almighty power, he simply drew forth from his own essence three distinct beings or hypostases, which at once became invested with corporeal forms. Thus the celebrated Hindu triad, Brahma, Vishnu, and Shiva, came into existence. Brahma is called the Creator, Vishnu the Preserver, and Shiva the Destroyer. Respecting this triad, one of the sacred books declares, "that they were originally united in one essence, and from one essence were derived." Brahma, being constituted by the supreme Brahm, the Creator drew forth from him (Brahm) the principles of all things; hence this theory teaches upon this important point the same doctrine as before noticed. It only teaches it in a little different way, for in the execution of the work assigned to Brahma, he drew out or caused to emanate from the substance of Brahm the various principles, atoms, and germs, which, according to the third system, are supposed to have emanated spontaneously, so to speak, from his substance. These principles, atoms, and germs, Brahma collected in the celebrated Mundane egg, from which, in due time, and by various tedious and most difficult processess, the universe was hatched. Brahma is declared "to have entered this egg along with these principles and atoms, and there sat, vivifying, expanding, and combining the elements for four thousand three hundred millions of solar years." "During this amazing period, the wondrous egg floated like a bubble on an abyss of primeval waters—increasing in size, and blazing like a thousand suns. At length Brahma, who dwelt within, burst the shell of the stupendous egg, and issued forth with a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, and a thousand arms." With him came forth all the elementary principles, having been fully matured into one harmonious whole, in the form of the present glorious universe. What then is this universe? It is but a harmoniously arranged expansion of the essences or principles which were educed or evolved from the divine Brahm. On this account the world is constantly spoken of by all as a manifestation of the eternal Brahm. So we come to the same conclusion, that everything is Brahm, and Brahm is everything.

* Whatever of interest this article possesses is owing more to the different authors whose works I have consulted and freely used, than to the writer. I am chiefly indebted to a work on Hinduism, by Dr. Duff, Calcutta Review, No. 7, Ward on the Hindus, and the Vishnu Puran.—A. H. S.

Such is the account of the supreme god of the Hindus, and the origin of all things. Notwithstanding the length of this article, I wish to say a few words more in reference to Brahma, the first person in the Hindu triad. Brahma is properly the educer or arranger of all things. By a species of eduction from the substance of his own body, he gave origin to the human race, consisting of four distinct genera or castes. From his mouth came forth the Brahman, the highest and the noblest of all earthly creatures. From the same source came the Veds or holy books; these books are declared to contain all that it is necessary for mankind to know. Of these sacred books the Brahmans are the only interpreters; indeed, none else are permitted to read them. From the arm of Brahma came the second caste, called (Kshattrya) or military caste. From his breast came the Vaishya caste; this includes all merchants and agriculturists, and constitutes the third caste. The Shudra is the last and lowest caste, and constitutes the servile class. Thus, by the decree of God, the human race, according to the Shastres, are divided into four classes, genera, or castes, which differ, not by accident, but in essence. The first are the Teachers, the second the Defenders or Warriors, the third the Producers, the fourth the Servants. No one can rise from lower to the higher. Neither is it possible for one to sink to a lower; if a man loses caste, he sinks below caste. A Brahman cannot become a Shudra; if he loses caste, he sinks even below the most servile; he becomes an outcast. There is no greater sin that a man can commit than attempting to rise to the caste above him, and the most terrible denunciations of the Shastres are denounced upon those who attempt to do so.

Brahma is not only the educer of man as above stated, but "he is father of the gods;" the upper worlds are peopled with gods and goddesses, the sons and grandsons, daughters and granddaughters, of Brahma. These gods have different degrees of rank and power. They are of all colours and all shapes. Some are human in appearance, some part human and part brutal. They ride through the regions of space on all sorts of animals, on buffaloes and lions, on sheep, rats and peacocks, on serpents, geese, and vultures. They have from four to one thousand arms and eyes. In their hands they carry all kinds of weapons. Among them are gods of war and gods of peace; gods of wisdom and gods of folly; gods of good and of evil; gods of cruelty and wrath. The whole number is said to be 130,000,000!

But the time is hastening on when these gods and goddesses, when even Brahma himself will cease to be. The time is coming when all things will pass away and become absorbed again into the incomprehensible and supreme Brahm.

Thus I have attempted, in the briefest manner, to give the character of the "great Brahm," the origin of all things as well as their end. I leave the subject for Christians to meditate on, praying that they may feel more, and pray more for the 150,000,000 of Hindus who are the slaves of this stupendous system of idolatry—a system that is still vigorous and active, but which we know will pass away before the light and power of the gospel.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS OF THE REV. W. SPEER.

Cordial reception—Chinese in the Hospital—Measures under consideration—The location of the Mission.

Writing from San Francisco, November 15, 1852, Mr. Speer says, "I have been greeted here by persons of all denominations, and of no denomination, with great cordiality. A warm interest is taken by the mass of the community in the purposes of this mission." He then states:

The first means of doing good which Providence has opened, is the religious instruction of the patients at the State Hospital. There are generally under treatment there from twelve to a hundred Chinese, who have been brought down from the mines; the majority affected with disorders, which have assumed a chronic form. I have been received with much delight by those at present under treatment, and have distributed to each a copy of Dr. Milne's tract, "The Two Friends." For the present I wish to spend a portion of every afternoon with these men.

No steps have been taken yet to open a school or chapel; nor have I, in the few days I have been in the city, had the opportunity of forming many acquaintances among the Chinese residents, or ascertaining their views of these measures. They have as yet erected no idol temples, so far as I can learn. It is a gratifying circumstance that there are here several young men who have been instructed at the mission-schools among their countrymen. Two or three of them are spoken of as intelligent and influential men, who may prove of much service eventually to the missionary cause. Chinese tracts sufficient for present use, have been furnished through the Rev. P. Buell, part of them from our press at Ningpo. A sien sang, or teacher, may probably be procured without difficulty. I have heard of one qualified person, who would be willing to engage in that capacity.

The first important question presenting itself on our arrival was that of the location of the centre of my missionary efforts. [This question is still under consideration. San Francisco will probably be judged the most suitable place. All the Chinese emigrants pass through that city. At the interior places, they are either limited in number, or transient. The greater expense of carrying on the mission at San Francisco, may be compensated by the liberal interest taken in its operations by the people of that city. The views of brethren would soon be received.]

Interesting Notices of Chinamen.

Writing at San Francisco, November 30, Mr. Speer says:—

Since my letter of the 15th, I have made the acquaintance of some of the leading Chinese. Hitherto, one of the most influential men here was Norman Asing. This man's character was not good; he professed to be a Roman Catholic; and he would have been an obstacle in the way of spiritual good to his countrymen. But within a short time he has been attacked with repeated hemorrhages from the lungs, has resigned his office of the chief of one of the large companies into which all the Chinese enter, and is about embarking for his own country. It is an interesting fact, that his successor, just elected, is Tong Achik, who is an intelligent young man, educated by an American missionary at the Morrison school in Hongkong. This is the individual whose efforts last spring in behalf of his countrymen, were the chief means of turning the tide of public opinion in their favour, when those unfriendly to them made the attempt to expel them from the country. And if he remains here, there is no man whose influence will be more felt among the large bodies of emigrants of his own race already in the State, or coming in the spring.

Another young man from whom much may be hoped, is Lee Akan, who spent eight years at the same missionary school. Akan's heart has evidently been touched by the Spirit of grace, and he feels deeply on the subject of his own salvation. May he yet be a burning and shining light among his countrymen in this land. I have learned of thirteen others who have been scholars in our missionary institutions in Canton Province, beside two more that have been baptized, and I met with many of my former Chinese acquaintances. Hwang Apo, the boy who clandestinely left our school at Canton, is engaged with a brother as a merchant. He is acting as an agent for the sale of goods among the mines. Not long since he was in the city, but I have not seen him yet.

Visits to the sick Chinese—Inquiries as to a school, chapel, &c.

Among my most interesting employments, has been afternoon visits, as often as possible, to the sick Chinese in the State Hospital. They have received them gratefully and joyfully; the books distributed have been read. Some of the patients are men of quickness, and take an interest that I trust will not be unblessed after they have quitted this place.

Inquiries have been made as to a suitable location for a school and chapel, and some consultation has been held with Christian brethren and Chinese friends; but no site has yet been fixed upon. I am in hopes funds may be raised here to defray the expenses of the buildings necessary, and to purchase suitable apparatus. There is much interest expressed in the enterprise by various denominations.

Visits cannot be made to the Chinese engaged in mining without much expense and fatigue, until the rainy season is over. But I have occasional opportunities of sending tracts and gospels to them.

We are boarding yet, and probably as cheaply as we can comfortably, or as we could keep house, while the price of some articles of provision is so exorbitant. We must continue as we are till spring.

Chinese in California—Christian views of the Mission.

We add to the preceding statements an extract from "The Pacific," a San Francisco newspaper, of November 19. This paper, we understand, is conducted by our brethren of the New-school Presbyterian Church.

Over against Canton open the portals of the golden gate. Within this gate our challenge ships have landed from those shores, hundreds at a time in five short weeks! About ten thousand Chinese have, sooner or later, sought among us a temporary home. Some have returned, but only to bring more. Many of them have died. Multitudes will remain. Some have already become citizens, or declared their intention of so doing. They have settlements in all our principal places of trade. They are fast becoming a permanent portion of our population. They are usually peaceable and industrious. They gradually cut off their cue, and assume the dress of Americans. They gradually learn our language. They slowly partake of our energy also. They have shown themselves to be men. On many public occasions they have appeared to great advantage. Some jealousy has at times arisen among Americans to expel them from the mines, but public sentiment has frowned on such selfishness, and given over the evil of foreign labour, if evil it be, to cure itself. They now are permitted, like other men, to pursue their gains. But few Chinese women have yet come over, and those few have come for the gains of vice.

But, as yet, no attempt has been made by this people to establish among them idolatrous worship. We hope they never may. Such an event would pain the heart of the Christian world. Most devoutly is it to be hoped that as they are gradually assuming our dress and manners, and acquiring our language, so they will gradually fall into our religious views and forms, or at least, drop those of their native land. It seems a remarkable providence that has diverted them, hitherto, from the establishment of their own worship. May it not be an indication of the divine intention towards their nation? Seems it not like the way of the Lord for the opening to them of a better temple than their fathers' gods? Is it not because the great Head of the Church intended to follow them hither with one of their former missionaries? We believe it. That missionary, long hoped for by the churches, has come. Welcome, thrice welcome to our shores! * * * Let the churches of California assume the support of this mission, and so enter at once on the wide career of usefulness opening before them.

OMAHAW AND OTOE MISSION.

SAD STATE OF THE WILD INDIANS.

The Rev. E. McKinney, writing at his station, Bellevue, November 11, 1852, describes the difference between the partially civilized tribes of Indians in the southern part of the Indian Territory, and the wild tribes of the north. He had previously spoken of having "no intelligence from our Indians, since they started on their hunt," while "the few families left behind them have supported themselves mainly by stealing from us and our neighbours." Then referring to the Narrative of the Visit to the Southern tribes by Walter Lowrie, Esq., in the September number of the Record, he thus proceeds:

Those southern tribes are essentially civilized. At home most of the children who are sent to school have received some training of the right kind. And in the communities surrounding the schools, there is more or less of a public sentiment which goes some way to sustain the missionaries in their efforts. At the same time an education is highly prized, and looked upon as furnishing the means of advancement.

Among the wild tribes, the children have not only been at school before they come to us, but the schoolmaster has been the devil himself, displaying himself in an unusual manner. Hence the smallest children we have received have been taught by their own parents to lie, steal, and use the most obscene language—and are adepts in these things from the very womb. There is no such thing as the innocence of childhood among savages. We must lay it down then as settled, that all our Indians are liars, thieves, and obscene—hence we have got to root evil weeds from the start. It is true that all other instructors have to do this, as the human mind is nowhere a blank sheet of paper. But here it is obviously different. Every Indian who comes to the mission is of the like character with the children. They not only lie, and steal, and blackguard themselves, but they teach the children to do it—and each parent among them teaches his own children to do it. If you could be here six months, you would find out that I am not mistaken in these statements. For this reason we are not able to keep a supply of knives, forks, spoons, cups, plates, pans, or to keep the children well clothed. Our expenses are greatly increased by this means; but what is of vastly more importance, the progress of the children is greatly retarded, and a disposition to abscond, or after all to prefer the savage mode of life, is constantly fostered. We get no help in any form, manner, or degree, from the tribes, though they know, and often acknowledge, that we are labouring for their good, and that our course is the only proper one. The general depravity, and all-pervading and overruling selfishness, blind them to their true interests. Hence savage parents will steal from their own children to gratify present appetite, and sacrifice the true and permanent interests of the latter. To do anything here is, therefore, truly a warfare. Our work requires agents—enough of them to surround the children with a wholesome moral atmosphere—to prevent their own depravity from corroding them and outwardly obtaining the mastery, and to counteract the ruinous influence exerted upon them from without.

For the same reasons, we find difficulty in controlling our scholars. If we try "moral suasion," we discover immediately that their pride is fostered thereby; and it soon becomes evident that the children think themselves the most important personages in the world, and get beyond our control. If we draw the reins a little tighter, they think themselves dreadfully oppressed. Work they must, when they leave us, or starve, and therefore we try to teach them to work by giving them something to do. This excites and brings out all the depths of their ill-nature. Everything is done with the utmost reluctance, or, if possible by any shift, is avoided. It is just so with their parents. They send their children to school either to relieve themselves of a burden, or to acquire a claim upon us. Instead of thankfulness for keeping them, except in one or two instances, we have never experienced anything at their hands but a disposition to get all they can. And for this purpose their wits are sometimes most wonderfully exercised. Their labour ordinarily cannot be procured for any price, or else is more of a hinderance than a help. They have not even any thing to sell that we can use, and if they had, they would want three prices. Upon a mission situated in the midst of such a people, there is therefore a constant demand. We are deceived incessantly, and can only preserve enough to supply our own wants, by hardening our hearts and denying their prayers. I give these statements, not because I have been discouraged by discovering their truth in my experience with this people; on the contrary, I have felt from the beginning that God only can renew the heart, and I cannot see why it is any easier for him to regenerate a soul in the city of New York, than it is in the village of the Omahas. They have an influence more on the expense of our mission, and the amount of help needed, than, other things being equal, on the question of our final success. For that reason I have referred to them.

The spiritual state of the Mission School.

You will naturally feel more interest in the spiritual condition of our school, than in any of those matters with which my space has been filled. On this most vital subject I deeply regret that my report must be very meagre. For part of the time during our sickness, we were obliged to omit our religious services either in whole or in part. That was indeed a gloomy time, when we could not have family worship, and the children sat down to their meals without any one to ask a blessing. I don't think we failed to have our Sabbath services more than three or four Sabbaths. For the rest of the time we had our regular meetings, though they were somewhat dull, and not attended by any person out of the family. In fact, I have not felt able to stand up to preach for the last three months, and still retain the sitting posture, even in our most formal services. During part of the season I was obliged to drop our Sabbath evening meeting, which is designed especially for the children, partly on account of sickness, and partly on account of the shortness of the evenings and the abundance of musquitoes.

The attention of our children to any address on the subject of religion, which is sufficiently simple for them to comprehend, is very good indeed. They always seem to listen with solemn earnestness. If we attempt, by a direct examination, to find out how much they understand of what is said, their diffidence is so great that one would think they knew nothing. But they often make remarks which show that the good seed is far from being lost, though it may be buried under the ground. After all their evil traits are described, it may be said with truth that the subject of religion is much before their minds, and some of them at times are evidently concerned about themselves. We have no evidence, however, of the existence of those deep and abiding impressions which ordinarily make the crisis in the history of those who turn to God. The oldest scholar in school says, that he thinks a great deal about the things of religion. I know that he reads the Bible a good deal, and often seeks privacy for this purpose. He has enjoyed more advantages than any of the others, having been at the Methodist mission school, among the Shawnees, before he came here. He will be the first to settle in our village, and at present bids very fair to make a sober and steady man. We have had several visits from a young man called Joseph Ikasáhe, who spent several years in our family, but absconded with a young Pawnee named Timothy, last fall. I have been told by several persons, that Joseph conducted himself with a great deal of propriety after he left us. He says that he thinks a great deal about the things of religion. He talks quite good English, and is able to read the Scriptures for himself.

Hope in the death of a former scholar; its influence on the Missionary—Need of watchfulness.

Timothy had been at school with Mr. Allis before he came to us. He spoke good English, and was employed for a while as interpreter at Fort Kearney, on Great Island. For some reason, which I have not heard, he left the fort, and went to live with some Oberlinites, who are located on the river, about forty miles below this place. There he took sick and died. We have heard that the clergyman of the place, whom I esteem very much, thought that Timothy had experienced a change of heart before he died. The effect of this gleam of light on my mind, in the midst of surrounding darkness and spiritual death, I cannot describe. To think that one of our children was in heaven, I mean one who died at an age when he was able to choose for himself, brought that holy and happy place nearer, at the same time that it brought before my mind even more distinctly than before, the true wants of these young immortals.

Father Kingsbury (of the Choctaw mission) used to ask me, if I did not think it one of the devices of the adversary of souls to save his kingdom, to overwhelm the missionaries with secular cares and business, and thus, in a measure at least, prevent their ministry from becoming efficient. This tendency I have experienced, to a considerable degree, and oftentimes feel greatly humbled by discovering how the adversary has succeeded at times in drawing off my attention from things of eternal moment. This snare is peculiarly dangerous to missionaries, because their circumstances often require so much attention to be devoted to the mere outside of their operations. Of this necessity, our enemy avails himself, illustrating the proverb, "Surely in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird." We sometimes wonder that it is so hard to accomplish anything good, and that so many difficulties must be removed before "the kingdom of God" comes. Every labourer in some good sense can say, "without were fightings, within were fears"—yet it is only a part of that "tribulation" through which we enter into the joy of our Lord.

EUROPE:—MISSIONS IN FRANCE.

REPORT ON EVANGELIZATION: DECEMBER 7, 1852.

Illness of the Evangelist—Affection of his hearers—A Pastor's Testimony to his usefulness.

Not only is the summer, as is well known, an unfavourable season for evangelization, but, moreover, a serious illness has long confined to his room our excellent friend and brother, Mr. C——, whose missionary activity is so successfully displayed in that field of labour, the department of Isére. . . . On his recovery, he thus speaks of a visit made to one of his stations:—"The Lord was so good as to allow me to go to H——, where the dear pastor F—— was kind enough to accompany me. I will not try to describe what I felt on finding myself again amongst my dear children in the faith. I never could have thought that those dear friends were so attached to me. They shed abundant tears, whilst they pressed me in their arms. The good C—— was incessantly thanking his Saviour, with sobs, because he had heard his prayers, and had permitted him to see me again. O! how good is God, and how much he loves me! During my illness, I could take care only of a few invalids in the town, and of my good soldiers, who came to me whenever I was able to crawl to the barracks."

We had thought for a while to send our brother C—— to another part of the department, where he would have been very useful; but the change was not found necessary. We feel happy that we are able to transcribe here what, on that occasion, the Rev. Mr. F—— wrote to us not very long ago:—"Our brother C—— has now been labouring at G—— and its neighbourhood, these twelve years. But it is only a few years ago that he acquired the remarkable influence that enables him to carry on a work, humble indeed, but good, real, and lasting. How many struggles and trials, before he could have conquered that position! I confess, it is always to me a matter of wonder. I discover almost every day blessings which have accompanied that work, hearing, as I do, the name of Mr. C—— pronounced by country people whom I believed to be wholly strangers to the Gospel, and who show a tract, a New Testament, given to them by Mr. C——, or quote a word, a sentence addressed to them by him. Our missionary, with his pockets always filled with tracts, walks through the streets of G——, meets somebody whom he has formerly seen in some village, accosts him, speaks with him about his soul, gives him a tract. The man relates to his neighbour what has taken place, and Mr. C——, in his progress through the place, on some other occasion, finds two or three willing hearers, and thus it is everywhere. His connexions with some Jansenists have introduced him into several Roman Catholic families, and by that means he has obtained an entrance into many houses at G——, in which the official pastor could never put his feet. Besides, he enjoys the privilege of being very welcome to the sisters of the hospital, and they afford him every facility for speaking even with papists, which is not allowed to the pastor. I have seen the gladdening fruits of his almost daily visits in that place of suffering. The little church of H—— also has become very important. You should have seen as I have, how much our brother C—— is beloved and esteemed in that place. This little church, formed by his care, is progressing; the seeds which he sowed seem to spring up. The last time I was there, I preached to more than a hundred persons," etc., etc.

Piety of an aged Man—Notices of Pious Soldiers.

We see from a recent letter from this dear brother, that his health is nearly restored, but that he is still weak, and not able to take long walks. He had gone, nevertheless, to V——, to see an old man ninety-six years of age, who was ill, and of whom we have spoken in our former reports. It is a wonderful thing, says Mr. C——, to hear him speak so well of the kindness and love of the great God his dear Saviour, (it is his favourite expression.) What good it does to the heart, to be witness of such wonders in the work of the Holy Spirit.

"I had the sorrow to part with one of my dear soldiers, who lately left G——. For more than a year his conduct was exemplary, he was happy whenever he could read the Gospel, and he confessed with great meekness the name of his Saviour, among his fellow-soldiers. He wept much when he departed, and said to me: Is it not natural for a child to shed tears on removing from the place where he was born. It is here that God made me be born again, and you know the trouble I gave you to lead me from error into the light of the gospel."

In a former report, we gave some particulars about another soldier called M——, a chasseur of V——, whose faith and Christian behaviour rejoiced the heart of our brother C——, who had made the gospel known to him. From that time this man continued publicly to show forth his faith. Mr. C——, though ill, saw him many times, and strengthened him more and more in his evangelical convictions, so that this new convert has just realized the desire he had long had, of announcing to others the salvation which he had received for himself, and now acts as colporteur of the holy books. He obtained his dismissal in the month of September, and colports now in the neighbouring department. This is a beautiful result of the labours of Mr. C——.

Change in Stations for the Missionary G.—Notices of his Success at V——.

The stations of V—— and T—— has lately undergone a change in the person of the missionary. Our brother G——, who has directed it until now, had lately been transferred to the department of Saôneet-Loire. Two principal reasons induced us to make this change. One of the oldest stations, that of B——, formerly flourishing, had recently fallen into a languid state, which made us feel the necessity of placing at its head a missionary full of zeal and experience, and we had none better calculated than our brother G——, to instil new life into that important station. The second reason was drawn from the wants of the station of V——. Mr. G—— had for some time called our attention to the necessity of having there a missionary who could at once be a teacher, and open a school. But Mr. G—— had no license for teaching. We have had a correspondence with him on that subject; and though he was grieved to leave a flock which he had so long directed with so much faithfulness, he did not hesitate to accept the new station which was offered to him. The small and interesting flock was not abandoned, however, and it has now a leader who we may hope will be, with the blessing of God, a worthy successor of Mr. G——. It is Mr. H——, who has been for many years missionary and teacher at M——, (Saone-et-Loire), and who settled in last October at V——, with his wife and children. He was very welcome there, and a letter of the brethren of that town, shows us that they are already attached to their new leader. He has displayed great activity; he has held several meetings, visited the members of the church of V——, many of whom reside very far from that town, and also those of T—— and neighbouring villages. He has taken active steps for the speedy opening of a school, the want of which has so long been felt, and desired by many fathers of families, even among those who are strangers to the church. We hope the formalities will soon be over, and that the school will be opened in a few days.

The Church at V.—Interesting Narratives of Grace.

Here is what Mr. G—— wrote us about the church of V——, when he left that station:—"Allow me to recommend once more to your Christian solicitude, this little flock of V——. These friends are not numerous; they are isolated among a fanatical and corrupt population; but their small number and their isolation, entitle them to your interest. There are infirmities amongst them, but, nevertheless, the life of Christ, solid and sincere piety may be found in most of them. There was no great awakening, no sudden and considerable growth, but every year some soul was brought to the knowledge of the truth; and though slow, this growth is not the less solid. The work is on a good footing. The fraternal meetings continue to be prosperous. The assemblies of sisters go on well; and as regards the assemblies for the preaching of the word, the seriousness and attention of the hearers, leaves nothing to desire. Among all the localities of the Isére, V—— wears the more favourable aspect; it requires only to pursue what is begun.

"The following fact shows that God hears our prayers. A man of thirty-five years of age, an engineer in a factory, came to me several times lately, to speak about the word of God, which he possesses, reads, and has taken as the rule of his conduct. Some years ago, this man spent six months at the hospital, in consequence of an accident. During that time, he reflected on his past life. His sins, his forgetfulness of God, presented themselves to his conscience; he understood that he was worthy of condemnation, and that a change was absolutely necessary. He resolved seriously to devote himself to piety; and knowing no better, he followed the directions of Roman Catholic priests, and gave himself to the practices of his church. But he soon felt doubts about the doctrines of Rome. He endeavoured to acquire some light, and being acquainted with a member of our flock, he got a New Testament, read it with zeal, and with a serious purpose of conforming to the instructions that he should find in it. He appears to me to be decided on joining us. His conscience is remarkably upright; he has a strong desire to do the will of God, whatever it may cost him, and his candour is admirable.

"I have spoken sometimes of our friend B——. He had worked for the last year in a paper factory, and in his leisure moments he read the gospel to the workmen. He returned there this year; the master of the house was glad to see him again, as he is an excellent workman; but, said he to the foreman, 'I forbid him to read his book aloud—no proselytism in my house.' But if B—— could no longer read, he was able to speak; and one day having a discussion with one of his comrades, an infidel, the master listened to him for a long time, without being seen, and at last, coming to him, he said, 'Indeed, if it is in your New Testament that you learn such things, I was wrong to forbid you to read it. I am really surprised that the priests forbid it.' He was much more surprised when he heard that B—— had never been to school, and had learned to read only at the age of thirty-six, almost without help; and he was so much satisfied with the conversation of our friend, that he manifested his intention to study also an old Bible which he possesses, and had till then neglected. This B—— is about to undertake the colportage of the Scriptures."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MEMOIR OF THE REV. W. A. B. JOHNSON.*

William Johnson was by birth a Hanoverian. He had obtained employment in London, as workman at a sugar-refiner's in Whitechapel, a business almost entirely engrossed by German hands. The year 1812 was one of very severe trial to him; the high price of bread making his wages of eighteen shillings a week altogether inadequate for the commonest provision for himself and his wife. Almost starving, he threw himself on his bed; and, whilst lying there in despair, a text which had been remarkably impressed on him when a child recurred to his memory—"Call on me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." He thought upon his sins, and dared not call upon an angry God. The next morning, however, brought him unexpected temporal relief. He tried to pray, but "knew not how or what to say, lest he should add sin to sin." His knowledge of English was at that time very imperfect, and he naturally resorted to the German church at the Savoy, then, as now, under the pastorate of Dr. Steinkopff. A Moravian Missionary was preaching—"Is there a sinner here, full of sin, and ready to sink under it? I bid, in the name of Jesus, such an one to come unto Him; for He has said, 'Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The word was meant for him. It went home to his heart. "I could pray—I felt my sins forgiven—I felt 'joy unspeakable and full of glory.' I thought I could have gone to heaven at once; and at last, like the eunuch, I 'went on my way rejoicing.'" About a year afterwards, he witnessed the dismissal of some Missionaries from a chapel in Fetter Lane. "There," said he, "I felt what I had never felt before. First, I saw the unspeakable privileges I enjoyed, and what the Lord Jesus had done for my soul; and, secondly, I saw the misery and wickedness of the poor benighted heathen. Oh, what did my heart feel! Oh, could I but go and help them, and tell them of Jesus! how gracious and merciful He is to poor sinners! I must see others go, but shall I never go? I am married, and have no ability; but still, if I could but go, and tell them of Jesus! 'O Lord, to Thee nothing is impossible: here am I, send me.' These were my feelings that night. I was drowned in tears. I turned myself to the wall, and gave free course to the fulness of my heart. In this state was my mind for some time. 'Oh, if I could but go! Here am I, O Lord, send me!'" (Pp. 9, 10.)

In answer to his abounding prayers, obstacles, apparently insurmountable, were gradually removed. His wife was brought to the knowledge of the truth. He was eventually introduced to Mr. Pratt by Mr. During, himself a very eminent instrument in producing the first manifest successes in the West-Africa Mission; and, having been accepted by the Committee as a schoolmaster, landed in Sierra Leone on May 1, 1816, where he met Mr. Bickersteth, then on his tour of inspection of our Missions there, who fixed his future sphere of labour at Regent's Town, on the higher land—the "Mountain District"—in the interior of the peninsula. Regent's Town had been heretofore called Hogbrook, and no eye but the eye of faith could have seen one point of hopefulness there. "Oh, how have I been cast down this day," says Johnson, on his first arrival, June 14. "If ever I have seen wretchedness, it has been to-day. I was told that six or seven died in one day. These poor people may be indeed called the offscouring of Africa. But shall I despair? No. 'The first shall be last, and the last shall be first.' Who knows whether the Lord will not make his converting power known among these poor depraved people? With Him nothing is impossible. Let me go and tell them of Jesus. His grace is sufficient for the vilest of the vile, for the chief of sinners. Yes, it is sufficient for the vilest cannibal. There are a very few of these people who can speak broken English: the greatest part have lately arrived from slave-vessels, and are in the most deplorable condition, chiefly afflicted with the dropsy. To describe the state of Regent's Town would indeed be impossible. Oh, may the Lord hold me up, and I shall be safe under these difficulties which are apparently before me." (Pp. 27, 28.) The magnetic power of love, however, soon drew these poor naked, diseased savages round him: and then began that course of marvellous activity, whereby it was granted to William Johnson to change this desolate wilderness into a "garden of the Lord." The whole of the temporal care of near 2000 re-captured negroes fell then on the Missionary. Rations and clothing were served out by him. Schools gathered and grew. His house and piazza were crowded at daily family prayer. Buildings rose for education and public worship; and Johnson "went on speaking morning and night, and on Sundays three times," but saw, as yet, no fruit of conversion. But the time was not far distant. In the latter part of the year, Mr. Butscher baptized 25 converts there, and in January 1817 the communicants had reached 41. The breath was evidently stirring the dry bones. The school-register showed a list of 164 boys, 20 girls, and 50 adults. The Governor found the church, built to hold 500 worshippers, so crowded on Sundays, that he desired the erection of an additional gallery. And the congregational singing, that striking outward test of a people's devoutness, was a marked characteristic of the converts at Hogbrook.

These tokens of the Divine approval had rested on Johnson's labours while he was yet a simple schoolmaster; just as the hand of the Lord was with those laymen of Cyprus and Cyrene when they spake unto the Grecians at Antioch, and "a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord." "Excuse my taking the liberty of preaching," writes he to the Committee: "I am not sent out for the purpose, nor have been ordained to preach, and have no ability; but what can I do? My heart is full. If I were to hold my peace, the stones would immediately cry out." (P. 39.) There was no doubt of Johnson's call to the ministry: there had been "prophecies going before on him;" and accordingly, the Secretaries—and the letters of Messrs. Pratt and Bickersteth will be found some of the most valuable pages of the Memoir—announced to him the Committee's wish that he should be ordained. . . . His efforts were now, if possible, increased; and faith, prayer, and straightforward simplicity, bore abundant fruit. Not a week, hardly a day, passed, which did not bring several poor sinners, "with strong crying and tears," to the foot of the cross. There was a marvellous awakening. The emotions of the congregation often interrupted the service, and their pastor was obliged to take precautions to prevent the manifestation of the strong sensibilities of the African. (P. 54.) We are jealous, and rightly, of these "awakenings" or "revivals." Excitement easily supplants principle; hypocrites and self-deceivers are sure to be found among those in whom a real work of grace has commenced; and Satan is on the watch to pervert high-wrought feeling, when enlisted on the right side. But counterfeits do not exclude the possibility of there being sterling coin. Rather do they pre-suppose its existence. There would be no fictions were there no realities. And the authenticity of a "revival" in a dormant church, of an "awakening" in a Mission, is to be tested by asking, What means were used to produce it, and what results did it leave behind? In the present instance, the application of these tests is most satisfactory. The means employed were, the simple preaching of sin and salvation, with much earnestness, directness, and prayerfulness, "testifying publicly, and from house to house, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." And the permanency of the results mark the work in Regent's Town to have been as truly God's, as the existence of "the holy Church throughout all the world" refutes the conclusion of the scoffers on the day of Pentecost—"These men are full of new wine." For the details of that work we must refer our readers to the interesting volume, which we hope they will be induced to peruse. It is replete with instances of the power of the Spirit's grace upon the converted heathen. It had to pass through many fiery trials—sickness, opposition, "false brethren," backsliders—but the fire tried the work of what sort it was. There was "hay and stubble," indeed, that perished in the crucible, but there is no doubt that the ultimate result was "gold, silver, precious stones"—precious souls. Then began the Sick-Relief Societies, so simply described by one of their earliest members—"That is good, brothers: suppose one be sick, all are sick; suppose one be well, all are well." Then those Missionary Associations commenced spontaneously among the converts, which have now raised upwards of 7300*l.* Then arose the first efficient Native Teachers—William Tamba, David Noah, John Attara, and others—themselves some of the ripest fruits of this marvellous awakening. The schools grew on and on; and in six years the scholars were upwards of 1000, and the communicants 450. Tours were made throughout the promontory, and beyond it. The whole colony felt the vivifying influence. The city set on the hill could not be hid. We have testimonies to this effect which are beyond contradiction or impeachment. The authorities at Sierra Leone expressed their satisfaction in a report made in 1819 to the British Government—"Not more than three or four years have passed since the greater number of Mr. Johnson's population were taken out of the holds of slave-ships; and who can compare their present condition with that from which they were rescued, without seeing manifest cause to exclaim—'The hand of Heaven is in this!' . . . If any other circumstance could be required to prove the immediate interposition of the Almighty, we have only to look at the plain men and simple means employed. Does it not recall to mind the first diffusion of the gospel by the Apostles themselves? These thoughts will occur to strangers at remote distances, when they hear these things; and must they not recur much more forcibly to us who have these things constantly before our eyes?" (P. 133.) So again, at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions, 1822, the Chief Justice stated, "that ten years before, when the population of the colony was only 4000, there were forty cases on the calendar for trial; and now the population was 10,000, there were only six cases; and congratulated the magistrates and grand jury on the moral improvement of the colony. It was remarkable that there was not a single case from any of the villages under the superintendence of a Missionary or Schoolmaster." On the following May the 3d, it pleased God to call this eminent servant of his into his more immediate presence. He died on his way to England. His last thoughts were with his beloved flock. "Tell David Noah to do his duty; for if Noah say, 'Because massa dead, I can do nothing,' he must pray, and God will help him, and so we shall meet in heaven." He rests from his labours, but his works do follow him. The workman was taken, but the work "abode." Long was it before Regent's Town had again a permanent pastor. Again and again the climate broke the connection almost as soon as formed; and "grievous wolves entered in, not sparing the flock." At length Mr. Weeks, for a long season, Mr. Schon, and Mr. Denton, were spared to labour there successively, with remarkable diligence and success. On the occasion of the baptism of twenty-three adults, in May, 1845, the Station was visited by the Secretary of the Mission. "The church was quite filled—indeed some were outside—with an intelligent and lively congregation, the singing and responses being loud and general, and the attention during the sermon intense and uninterrupted. I could not help thinking of the first batches of wild, naked, liberated slaves collected at this place thirty years ago by the late Rev. W. A. B. Johnson, when the station was first taken up by the Society. What a great and good change has Regent's Town undergone, when compared with that first beginning!" (P. 417.) The latest returns from the Mountain District report the communicants at near 900, and the scholars at 1477.

* A Memoir of the Rev. W. A. B. Johnson, Missionary in Regent's Town, Sierra Leone, A. D. 1817—1823. With a Preface by the Rev. W. Jowett, M. A. Seeleys. [We understand that this Memoir will be reprinted shortly, by Messrs. R. Carter and Brothers, New York.—Ed.]

Further down that same African coast, in the kingdom of Congo, "mass was once performed in the midst of thousands of negroes;" a church was built; there were two Romish bishops of the royal lineage.* Where is it all now? Dr. Wiseman has told us that the permanence of a Mission is the test of its reality. We accept the criterion.

Truly, Johnson was a burning and a shining light; and the Christian might be well pleased to exchange for his seven years of eminent usefulness and "life in earnest"—he was but thirty-seven when he died—the longer span of ineffectual life often wasted here below. His example is specially seasonable. It shows us how many hidden gems there are, that the world knows nothing of, which are to glitter at the last day in the Redeemer's diadem; it shows us what is the Missionary message which God authenticates and owns; and it shows us the style of man needed as evangelist to the heathen. Preach free grace, and preach it fully, heartily, prayerfully, and you will not preach in vain. We need such men for Missionaries now. Feeble, irresolute, half-hearted men, with little experimental knowledge of their own hearts and Christ's love—these are not the "good soldiers of Jesus Christ." It is in this view that we ask our friends to add William Johnson's outline to their gallery of Missionary portraits, when they wish to know the sort of men suitable for such a work. Here was a man with a thorough sense of his utter worthlessness in God's sight, and of God's exceeding mercy in saving him—"Why," says he again and again, "has the Lord bestowed so much mercy on me, who am so vile and wretched? Oh! why me, why me!"—a man of deep tenderness of soul for lost heathen, exuberant compassion, such as the cold worldling has hardly dreamt of—a man with unwavering faith in his remedy—a man whose favourite text was, 'My grace is sufficient for thee,'—a man entirely self-forgetful, never self-sparing, absorbed in his work, single in his purpose, resolute in its prosecution, with "a deadness to the world, and a devotion of heart to the cause," which seemed likely, in Mr. Bickersteth's estimation—a hope amply realized—"to make him a blessing where God's providence should place him." (P. 23.) Here was a Missionary indeed! We are sure that his biography will be widely read and permanently valued. We need only add, to complete the character of this true evangelist, one other feature which marked him as of the genuine apostolic spirit. In the midst of his usefulness, his thoughts were ever stretching forth to "the regions beyond." "Ah! and how far are our thoughts from those beyond the colony, just as if there were no other heathen in Africa! Oh, my God! revive the spirit of missionary zeal among us. For my part, I feel just like a bird in a cage. O that the Lord of the harvest would open more effectual ways for the conveyance of the glorious gospel into the interior of Africa! I have reason to be thankful, as the Lord has, through my weakness, established a church in this place. I have indeed reason to rejoice that my labours have not been 'in vain in the Lord;' yet I feel uncomfortable: my mind is wandering into the interior of Africa. Is this mere imagination? Why do these thoughts continually follow me? and why are so many hours of the night spent without rest? Lord, hast thou designed me to proceed from hence into other parts of Africa? Here am I; send me." (P. 121.)

We need men of such a spirit as this. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would thrust forth labourers into His harvest."—Church Miss. Intell. Nov. 1852.

USEFULNESS OF COLPORTEURS.

The Rev. Mr. Irwin, of Wheeling, Va., writing to the editors of the Presbyterian Herald, after speaking of the usefulness of religious periodicals, adds his testimony in favour of the usefulness of our colporteurs:—

"Closely connected with this is the important work of the colporteurs of our Board of Publication, whose labours within the bounds of my congregations have contributed in no small degree to my ministerial success."

COLPORTAGE IN THE SYNOD OF PITTSBURGH.

The Board of Colportage in this important Synod have been zealously engaged the past year in circulating the books of the Board of Publication through their bounds. They have put into circulation 20,000 bound volumes, besides Tracts, Catechisms, &c. They have resolved to raise, if possible, this year $5000, to give permanence and efficiency to their enterprise. In an address to their churches, the Committee thus speak of the advantages of this organization:

It circulates the whole truth of our noble Confession, nothing is compromised, or designedly suppressed, which we testify as a church, before the world. The doctrines of absolute grace in the salvation of men, such as election and imputation, the scriptural views of baptism, and the whole system of Church Government and Discipline, which we profess to hold by a divine warrant; all of which are so indispensable to the proper training of our people, are fully set forth in the labours of our Board, and our Board alone. Voluntary Societies cannot, without a breach of public faith, supply our people with such aliment and instruction as this.

We would not insult the intelligence and fidelity of our ministers, elders and people, by arguing the importance of supplying the whole country with these distinctive principles of our profession. Nor need we reiterate the terrible danger, which accrues to any church, that wilfully consents to relinquish or withhold any part of the truth which God has given her to profess and promulge. Sad experience proves, in every age, that such a church will sink lower and lower, on the platforms of conventional compromise, until the very foundations of evangelical doctrine are corrupted and surrendered.

If an evil jealousy towards the Presbyterian Church leads other denominations that profess great purity and strictness, to stand aloof from our Board and our Books, preferring to join their influence to the cause of a general literature, in which these distinctive principles are suppressed, we can only say, that the ultimate gain to our own church, in strength, intelligence, and safety, will vastly remunerate us for the cost and trouble of bearing this burden alone.

The instrumentality employed is under the immediate control of the Church, and is in every way responsible to you. Every true Presbyterian must hold, that the Church, as constituted by her own glorious Head, is adequate, under his blessing, to direct and manage all the instrumentalities that are proper for the instruction and salvation of men. She is unfaithful, if she neglects to control such instrumentalities; and her people are unfaithful, if they withhold from her the means and facilities for accomplishing this high commission. Colportage is employed, at present extensively, to do a work, for which the Church, as such, is responsible to God. Can she allow this work to be done or attempted, without her own immediate control? If so, her responsibilities are borne with perilous and criminal indifference. Is this work of colportage really an "excellent way" of doing good, in the kingdom of Christ? Then it belongs of right to the Church; where alone are entrusted both the means and the end, in achieving the salvation of men. But is it a scheme of doubtful utility, after all, and, like every thing merely human, easily corruptible and quickly abused? Then, how important is it, for us to hold it in check, by the immediate power of the Church; and not leave it under the management of any irresponsible association, nurtured and strengthened by the contributions of God's people, until its heel is planted in the neck of the Church herself, and her own heaven-appointed ministry are disparaged, or ruined by its power!

From the New-York Observer.

THE GREAT DIFFICULTY.

At the recent Colporteur Convention at Richmond, Va., a pastor addressed the colporteurs upon the importance and necessity of maintaining a high standard of personal piety, and going forth to their work in the strength of God's promised grace. He remarked that the most difficult thing he encountered as a minister, and probably the most difficult thing they would encounter as colporteurs, was to maintain at all times a humble, prayerful, pleading heart. In glowing language, he described the power of such a heart, either to remove or rise above the most formidable difficulties, and to go on, from one degree of success to another, triumphing every where through Jesus Christ. "But ah! brethren," said he "the great difficulty is to keep the heart thus before God; to keep it in a truly broken, believing state, so that it can at all times plead the promises and prevail in prayer."

Here is a fact worthy the attention of every Christian. Where the heart is kept with all diligence in a right attitude towards God, and receives the blessings promised to such, success will crown its efforts. No obstacles or enemies can really hinder the usefulness of such a soul. But here is the great difficulty, to maintain such an attitude amidst prosperity—to know that we are useful and successful, and yet retain the simplicity of faith and fervour of love which God imparts to the soul preparatory to great usefulness and success in his service. If that minister, that Sabbath-school teacher, that colporteur, that elder, or private church member, had only kept his heart right with God, he would have gone on year after year in the strength of God, and his usefulness would have been increased a hundred fold. Remember, Christian reader, here is the great difficulty, and as you would be successful and happy in the service of Christ, see that you meet it aright. S. W.

GOOD NEWS.

Extract from a letter received from one of the agents of the Board, and addressed to one of its officers.

"Dear Brother:—I am glad to be informed that you have taken hold of the good cause in which I have been labouring for the past three years, and my prayer is that the Head of the Church may signally own your connection with it by blessing you in your labours. You know from what you have heard, and probably from what you have seen, of the good effects of our publications; what a mighty instrumentality for the promotion of truth is in your hands. From my more extensive travelling over different sections of the Church, I can testify that your confidence is not misplaced. I do honestly believe that our Zion wields no more potent lever in accomplishing the great work to which her Master has called her than the Board of Publication. Wherever I have gone in the colporteur track, I have found not only that our people begin to have a better understanding of our doctrines and government, and love them more, but I have been hailed by the glad tidings of souls converted by their instrumentality. J. M."

WEBSTER'S ESTIMATE OF COLPORTAGE.

A plain, pious colporteur made arrangements to present the objects of his humble mission at Marshfield. When it was ascertained that Daniel Webster was to be at his home for the Sabbath, it was thought expedient to forego the full presentation of this object, that a more elaborate discourse might be preached. At the close of the sermon, the colporteur was permitted to make a brief address, in which he unfolded in great simplicity the bearings of the system of colportage. When the congregation was dismissed, Mr. Webster took the colporteur by the hand, invited him to his house, expressed his regret that he had not occupied the entire service with his interesting narration and appeal, placed $10 in his hands as a donation, and said, "You have got hold of the right string, sir; if such books are not widely circulated among the masses in this country, and the people do not become religious, I do not know what is to become of us as a nation." His comprehensive mind grasped at once the relations of a system combining simplicity, economy, efficiency, and unquestionable benevolence. On other occasions he gave fuller expression to his interest in that enterprise, but never in a more encouraging and timely way.—Am. Mess.

A CHANGE FOR THE BETTER.

A colporteur in Tennessee writes:—"I find that most of the churches within my bounds are becoming more and more interested in the success of the Board. One church, which I visited eighteen months ago, treated me with marked indifference, and gave me no encouragement at all. I visited the same church this fall, and sold a large amount of books, and found that a complete change had come over the minds of pastor and people with regard to our Board and its operations. In fact, I found them as warm friends and as liberal patrons as I have met with anywhere. The same church gave to the agent of the Board over one hundred dollars."

A TRACT NEEDED.

The same colporteur writes, and makes an important suggestion:—"I have wondered sometimes, why, among all the tracts written and published by the Board, there was not one on the evils of novel-reading. I honestly believe novel-reading to be one of the greatest evils of our country, (spirituous liquors not excepted.) They are found in almost every family in the land, and read by hundreds who never read any thing else. Even the children of Christians will sometimes ridicule my books, and say, 'They are too religious for me;' and point to some vile novel and say, 'these are the kind of books for me;' and when I attempt to point out to them the evil and danger of such reading, they will laugh at me and say, 'It is no harm, because the minister has never said any thing against it, or the Rev. Mr. —— himself reads novels, and if it was wrong he wouldn't do it.' One of the principal booksellers in this place told me that it was actually injuring his trade. The public taste has become so vitiated that there is not that demand for more substantial works which had been heretofore."

For the Home and Foreign Record.

QUESTIONS FOR PASTORS.

It does not well become one who has done so little himself, to question his brethren as to what they have done; yet he hopes they will not take it amiss, if in this way he stirs up their pure minds by way of remembrance—for the time is short—and what we do, must be done soon. Let me then ask our Pastors a few questions:—

1. As to the Home and Foreign Record—the organ of all of the Boards of the church—have you made an effort to get it into every family? Do you read it? Do your Elders and Deacons read it? Is it taken and read by your people?

2. As to Religious Newspapers—every family should take at least one good paper besides the Record—have you made an effort to get a good religious paper into every family? Are your Elders and Deacons supplied with good Presbyterian papers? Are your people supplied?

3. As to the Presbyterian Sabbath School Visitor—an admirable paper for children—is it taken in your Sabbath School? Are all the children in your parish supplied with it?

4. As to the Shorter Catechism—does every child own one? And do they learn it?

5. As to the Presbyterian Family Almanac, for 1853—has this found a place in every family in your charge?

6. As to Good Books—Presbyterian books, doctrinal and practical—the books and tracts of our Board of Publication—have they been presented to your people? Have they been offered to them for sale? Have they had the privilege of supplying themselves with these excellent works, and are they supplied? Has every family some of them? And is not the present a good time to attend to all these things, that all our families may be furnished with good and profitable reading? with books and papers which will be useful to themselves, their families, and the public? Let these things be done, then shall Zion prosper, and God shall be glorified.

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Waterloo Soldier: or the Early Life and Closing Days of Farquhar Mackay. By Colin A. Mackenzie. With an Introduction by the Rev. W. M. Hetherington, LL.D. 144 pp. 18mo. Price 22 and 28 cents.

This is a memoir of a Highland soldier, the vicissitudes of whose life displayed, for a period, the malignity of sin, and ultimately the triumph of grace, both in himself, and through his instrumentality in many others. Early left an orphan, he was brought up by his aunt, a grave, God-fearing woman, who did her utmost to infuse religious principles into his mind, but without any apparent success. At the age of sixteen he was apprenticed to a saddler, but soon absconded, and for two years was connected with a gang of daring burglars. Becoming alarmed, he emigrated to Canada, and after a short residence returned and enlisted into a Highland regiment about to be sent out to India. After being engaged in all the battles that resulted in the conquest of Hindoostan, he deserted and returned to Canada—again returned to Scotland, joined a regiment bound for Portugal—was engaged in all the battles fought there under the Duke of Wellington—was made a prisoner by the French—met in prison with a pious fisherman—escaped—shared in the victory of Toulouse, and afterwards of Waterloo, where he was wounded; and while in the hospital at Brussels, was made a prisoner of hope, and subdued into the obedience of the Prince of Peace.

"Returning to the Highlands an altered man, and taking up his abode in a district where spiritual light and truth were almost entirely unknown, the heart of the Highland soldier was moved within him, and he resolved to attempt the arduous task of rescuing his sinking countrymen from ignorance, immorality, and degradation. At first he taught children as in a Sabbath-school, then grown people on week-day evenings, then formed and conducted a prayer-meeting. He became, in short, one of those persons known in the Highlands by the designation of "The Men." His labours, it appears, were honoured with a large measure of success; and he continued to prosecute them with unwearied zeal, till death overtook him in the midst of his exertions, while returning from visiting a sick bed, and struggling through a snow-storm on a bleak heath, till his weary frame sank down to rest, and his spirit returned to God who gave it."

The narrative will be read with pleasure and profit by young and old. It is peculiarly distinguished by a felicitous adaptation of Scripture language and allusions, which display the good taste as well as piety of the author.

The Book of Poetry; illustrated with engravings on Wood, from original designs by Darley, Dœpler, Oertel, and Schuessele. 12mo, pp. 256. Price according to the binding, from $1.25 to $5.00.

This is one of the choicest specimens of typography and artistical illustration which has proceeded from the American press. The paper, manufactured for the purpose, is of a strong and rich fabric, and tinted, and the wood engravings, all original in design, are exquisitely executed. The selection of poetry is, in our judgment, one of the best extant, in which it would be difficult to find one piece of inferior merit. We may add that the present edition is, in this respect, as in all others, a great improvement on the first bearing the same title, so as, in fact, to make it a different book. No more beautiful gift-book need be desired.

"This is one of the neatest volumes we have lately seen. The illustrations are of the highest order of wood engraving, from original designs by Darley, Dœpler, and others, while the selections are from the best Christian poets. The pure sentiment which breathes in every page, and the exquisite beauty of the casket in which the pearls are enshrined, make it suitable for a gift book at the joyous season through which we are now passing."—Episcopal Recorder.

My Own Hymn Book. Illustrated with fourteen engravings. Square form pp. 71. Price 25, 30, and 40 cents.

We are willing to submit this beautiful little volume to the judgment of our young readers, having no fear of any other than a favourable verdict. The hymns are numerous, well chosen, and simple. The merest child can appreciate them. The wood cuts are the very best of the class, and will please the eye of even practised judges in such matters. It deserves, and will, no doubt, receive a wide circulation.

CHANGES OF POST-OFFICE ADDRESS.

The post-office address of the Rev. W. R. Vincent is now Uniontown, Belmont county, Ohio.

That of the Rev. Laverty Grier is Springfield, Jefferson county, Ohio.

That of the Rev. J. B. Ripley is Cleveland, Ohio.

That of the Rev. Levi S. Beebee is Clarksburg, Harrison county, Virginia.

That of the Rev. P. W. Thompson is Vermont, Illinois.

That of the Rev. Mr. Fulton is Independence, Missouri.

That of the Rev. W. F. P. Noble is Bel-Air, Maryland.

LICENSURE.

Mr. Forman, a student of Princeton, was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, on the 4th of January.

DEATHS.

Departed this life on the 19th of December, at Dresden, Ohio, the Rev. William Wallace of the Presbytery of Zanesville.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A proposition for the establishment of a Presbyterian College within the bounds of the Synod of Ohio, has recently engaged the attention of that body.

The catalogue of Princeton Seminary, just published, states the total number of students to be one hundred and twenty, divided as follows:—Resident graduate, 1; first class, 44; second class, 38; third class, 37.

Mr. Robert Senner was received by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, on the 4th inst., as a licentiate from the Welsh Calvinistic Association of Pennsylvania.

The Rev. F. B. Dinsmore of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, having been elected Professor of Mathematics in the Des Moines College, has removed to West Point, Iowa.

We see it stated that Professor Moffat of Cincinnati, and late of Miami University, has signified his acceptance of the Chair of Latin and History in the College of New Jersey.

The Rev. Joshua F. Green of Little Rock, Arkansas, has accepted a temporary agency from the Board of Missions to explore that State, to organize churches where the way may be clear and the Presbytery consents, and to endeavour to induce ministers to emigrate thither.

Varieties.

Jonathan Edwards's Manuscripts.—Few things in literary and theological history are more interesting than the examination of the manuscripts of the great theologian of New England. We passed some time not long since in such an examination, in the study of the Rev. Tryon Edwards, D. D., of New London, who has in his possession nearly all the papers and unpublished writings President Edwards left at his death. Among them was the precious work recently given to the public, on Charity and its Fruits. There are other works remaining, quite complete, unpublished; for example, a series of Sermons on the Beatitudes, a work on Revelation, a large Commentary on the whole Bible, containing 904 pages, a leaf of the printed English Bible being interposed between every two sheets. There is also an imperfect Harmony of the Genius, Spirit, Doctrines, and Rules of the Old Testament and the New, an immense undertaking, which would have been a prodigious monument of theological learning and wisdom, had it been completed. We wish that the work on the Apocalypse might be transcribed and given to the world, and that speedily. Such views of men who gathered their knowledge of sacred things from the prayerful study of the word of God itself, with the aid of the theological treasures in the works of English theologians and reformers, before anything was known of German literature, are invaluable.

All the manuscripts of Edwards reveal, in the most interesting manner, his indefatigable industry and thoroughness in the study of the Scriptures, his entire submission of all things to their authority, and the acuteness and power with which he grappled with the subjects in morals and metaphysics that occupied his mind. There are note-books from year to year, remaining, some of them filled up during the period when he was engaged in controversy against Arminianism, and in the production of his works on Original Sin and the Freedom of the Will. Some of these note-books, or partial student's diaries, or memorandums of thought and study, reveal in a curious manner the scarcity of paper, and the necessity Edwards was under, of enonomizing in the use of it. He used to make rough blank books out of odds and ends, backs of letters, scraps of notes sent in from the congregations; and there is one long parallelogram of a book made entirely out of strips from the margins of the old London Daily Gazetteer of 1743, printed for M. Cooper, at the Globe, in Paternoster Row. It is written close and full, within and without, except the remnants or fringes that had some of the printing retained. There is another most curious manuscript, made out of circular scraps of paper, 147 leaves being in the shape of half-moons, intermingled with patterns of caps, and other such like remnants of housewifery, that after they had served as exponents of the wife's ingenuity and industry in head-gear, answered also for the husband's metaphysics, or first rough sketches of exposition or demonstration in some of the knottiest questions of theology.—Independent.

Records of the Presbyterian Church.—The early Records of the Presbyterian Church, from A. D. 1706 to A. D. 1788, have been published by the Board of Publication, in a handsome 8vo. volume, of 548 pp., price $1 75. The first edition, in movable type, which was printed from the original manuscript Minutes, having been exhausted, the work has now been stereotyped in an improved form, more easy of reference. Every minister, and every elder in our Church, should possess a copy of these interesting annals.

Earl of Aberdeen.—The Earl of Aberdeen is the first prime minister who has not been a member of the Church of England, since the expulsion of James II. from the throne and the restoration of Protestant ascendency by the revolution of 1688. His lordship professes the faith of his forefathers, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

Bishop Ives's Perversion.—The Romish papers are, of course, making a great ado over the reported conversion of an Episcopal Bishop to their ranks. The Philadelphia Catholic Herald states that the change in Bishop Ives's views occurred before his leaving this country for Europe.

"For some weeks past," says the Herald, "this interesting fact has been known privately in this city, although the first public announcement of it has been made in the columns of the Dublin Tablet. Dr. Ives was received in the city of New York by, we believe, the Rev. Dr. Forbes, with whom, we understand, he left a written document, certifying the fact, and authorizing it to be made public at any time.—Shortly after his reception, he sailed for Europe, intending to visit Rome."

Medical Students in Sabbath-School.—We learn that the rare and interesting spectacle of about sixty of the students of the medical department of the University of Louisville, gathered into two classes, and headed and taught by two of their professors, Drs. Yandell and Silliman, may be seen in the Sabbath-school of the Chesnut Street Presbyterian church, every Sabbath morning, diligently engaged in the study of the sacred Scriptures. We doubt whether a similar scene is witnessed any where else in this or any other country.

Oregon.—The Moravians in Ohio are forming a respectable colony for settlement in Oregon, and will start soon, taking with them their minister.

Mission Presses.—At the present time there are no less than twenty-five printing establishments in connection with missionary stations in India; and it is from the facilities they furnish for producing tracts and books, as well as from the liberal donations of the English and American Bible and Tract Societies, that missionaries have been able to publish so much for the instruction of this country. This example, and that of their countrymen, engaged in the periodical press, have led the natives likewise to import presses for themselves, and at the present time, in the presidencies of Bengal and Agra, there are no less than fifty-four presses belonging to natives, engaged in printing vernacular works or publishing newspapers and magazines. Of these, twenty-six are in Calcutta.—Calcutta Review.

English Presbyterian Church.—The Theological College was opened in 1844. Sixty-three students have prosecuted in whole or in part, their studies in its classes. Of these, 12 have been ordained to the ministry in the English Presbyterian Church; 6 are labouring as licentiates in it; 4 are ministers or licentiates in the Free Church; 2 have been ordained as ministers in the Reformed Presbyterian Church; 1 is a minister in the United Presbyterian Church; 4 are ministers in the Welsh Colonization Church; several are among the Independents; others are engaged in other duties.

The Duke of Wellington's Religious Opinions.—We can state from the testimony of one who was cognizant of the fact, that the favourite religious book of the Duke of Wellington, during the last twelve months, was Baxter's Saint's Rest*—a work which, as many of our readers are aware, is one of the most spiritual and experimental ever written. It is a fair presumption, from this circumstance, that the illustrious Duke had, in the latter period of his life, embraced evangelical opinions.—Morning Advertiser.

RELIGION OUR BEST SUPPORT ON THE JOURNEY OF LIFE.

Religion not only supplies the defects of the world, she compensates also the losses and trials of the world.

In the experience of every individual in the progress of life, there are "days of darkness" to be met with. We are liable to sudden reverses of fortune; to grievous disappointment of our earthly hopes; to the pains of sickness; to the anguish of bereavement; to periods, in short, of special and and often hopeless calamity, during which unsupported nature is ready to sink and to be crushed. He who counts upon exemption from such calamities as these, overlooks the inevitable lot of human life. He forgets the necessary conditions of our existence in a world of sorrow and affliction. Not far is a man permitted to travel on the journey of life before meeting with such occurrences as these. The morning of his life may be fair and promising, but it is soon overcast with clouds and darkened with calamity. He finds his way not only obstructed with ordinary difficulties, but misfortune overtakes him; disease enfeebles him; poverty threatens him; bereavement sinks and disheartens him; his "name is cast out as evil." To such and similar calamities is every man exposed, and sometimes they are accumulated at an early period of life, and to such a degree as to overcome the strength of the most useful and vigorous—"Even the youths faint and are weary, and the young men utterly fall," so heavy may be the burden of early and multiplied afflictions.

But what is a man to do at such periods as these, who, having embarked all his interest in the world, has no higher and better hopes to look to in the season of temporal calamity?

His situation is truly desolate, without the supports of religion, for it is religion alone that can afford any adequate compensation for the losses and trials of the world. Religion constitutes an interest in reserve, secure from all the attacks of calamity, to which we are permitted to resort when cut off from the sources of earthly felicity. It opens to us prospects in the invisible world, to cheer us when darkness surrounds our present state. It unfolds the rich storehouse of the divine promises—it discloses to us the hand of a benignant God, disposing all the circumstances of our lot, so that the very hairs of our head are numbered. It teaches us to look upon every thing with an eye of faith, and from the most unpromising events of life to extract lessons of wisdom and grounds of consolation.

But religion does more than this. She not only administers consolation, she imparts additional strength. She makes the most trying occasions of affliction the sources of spiritual renovation. "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength." Yes! it is amidst the weakness and dejection of an afflicted state, that we perceive some of the most beautiful exemplifications of the power of religion.

But there is perhaps no aspect of religion more interesting and amiable than the friendly bearing it has toward a period of life that must otherwise be comparatively helpless and desolate—I mean the period of old age. To the young the world unfolds the gay and flattering visions of hope and pleasure. To those in middle life she presents large and promising enterprises, schemes of wealth and plans of personal aggrandizement. But to the aged nothing appears to be left but a load of bodily infirmities. They have survived the season of personal gratification. They have survived the companions of their early days. They are surrounded by a new and more youthful generation, with whom they have little affinity, and they are liable, under such circumstances to pine under the sense of neglect, and give way to a feeling of loneliness and desolation. How cold and cheerless, alas! is this period of life, when left to the resources of an unsanctified world.

But religion, like an angel of mercy, comes to its aid. She takes up those whom the world abandons, and converts this otherwise comfortless period of life into one of the greatest cheerfulness and serenity. In no circumstances of life does religion impart such an aspect of dignity and veneration. "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness"—"Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God—they shall bring forth fruits in old age, to show that the Lord is upright, and that there is no unfaithfulness in him." Such are some of the attractive aspects under which true religion presents herself.

How false then must be the impressions of those who look upon it as hostile to their happiness—as abridging their enjoyments—and who associate with it ideas only of repulsiveness and gloom. Religion is hostile to no pleasure that can be enjoyed without a blush—to nothing that is not equally opposed to our highest and best welfare. She does not indeed, flatter our sins, nor humour our folly. She is a faithful friend that reproves our sins; admonishes us of our danger, and strives to turn us back to the paths of life and peace. She looks with encouragement toward the smallest indications of penitence and reformation—and to those who commit themselves to her guidance and instruction, she proves a tried and powerful friend; ever present to minister sympathy and support—cheering them in the hours of loneliness—watching by the bedside of sickness—holding the aching head of pain, and smoothing the pillow of anguish and of death.

Fellow travellers on the journey of life, we offer to you the guidance and companionship of Religion, to cheer you on your way. Certain it is, that in the progress of this journey, every human resource must fail—every human reliance give way. Youth, beauty, vigour, health, the joys and pleasures of life, the force of manly resolution, the power of the utmost perseverance, every thing must finally yield to the accumulating difficulties of the way; and at last death will come—perhaps suddenly—perhaps before this year terminates—to close the conflict, and to claim the victory. It is religion alone that will enable us to triumph. She disperses the darkness that thickens around our way, and sheds her light even upon the closing scenes of life. She puts into the mouth of the weary pilgrim, as he expires upon the plain, the triumphant song—"O death where is thy sting—O grave where is thy victory?" Come with us, and we will do you good. Come with us, and your trials will be ordered in wisdom; your losses compensated with spiritual prosperity and support, and the closing scenes of your life will be irradiated with a sacred lustre—a heavenly light, that shall dispel the darkness of the tomb, and brighten at last into an eternal day.

R.

I WOULD NOT LIVE ALWAY.

Our readers will be glad to see, in its original form, the beautiful hymn of Dr. Muhlenberg, of which an altered extract is to be found in most collections of hymns for public worship. We copy from the "Book of Poetry," lately published by the Board of Publication, a volume which needs only to be seen to be prized.—Ed. Home and For. Record.

I would not live alway—live alway below!
O no, I'll not linger, when bidden to go.
The days of our pilgrimage granted us here,
Are enough for life's woes, full enough for its cheer.
Would I shrink from the path which the prophets of God,
Apostles and martyrs, so joyfully trod?
While brethren and friends are all hastening home,
Like a spirit unblest o'er the earth would I roam?

I would not live alway—I ask not to stay,
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way;
Where seeking for peace, we but hover around,
Like the patriarch's bird, and no resting is found:
Where hope, when she paints her gay bow in the air,
Leaves its brilliance to fade in the night of despair,
And joy's fleeting angel ne'er sheds a glad ray,
Save the gleam of the plumage that bears him away.

I would not live alway—thus fettered by sin;
Temptation without, and corruption within:
In a moment of strength, if I sever the chain,
Scarce the victory is mine ere I'm captive again.
E'en the rapture of pardon is mingled with fears,
And my cup of thanksgiving with penitent tears:
The festival trump calls for jubilant songs,
But my spirit her own miserere prolongs.

I would not live alway—no, welcome the tomb;
Immortality's lamp burns there bright mid the gloom;
There, too, is the pillow where Christ bowed his head;
O! soft are the slumbers on that holy bed.
And then the glad dawn soon to follow that night,
When the sunrise of glory shall beam on my sight,
When the full matin song, as the sleepers arise
To shout in the morning, shall peal through the skies.

Who, who would live alway? away from his God,
Away from yon heaven, that blissful abode,
Where the rivers of pleasure flow o'er the bright plains,
And the noontide of glory eternally reigns:
Where the saints of all ages in harmony meet,
Their Saviour and brethren transported to greet,
While the songs of salvation unceasingly roll,
And the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul.

That heavenly music! what is it I hear?
The notes of the harpers ring sweet in the air:
And see, soft unfolding those portals of gold;
The King all arrayed in his beauty behold!
O! give me, O! give me the wings of a dove!
Let me hasten my flight to those mansions above:
Aye, 'tis now that my soul on swift pinions would soar,
And in ecstasy bid earth adieu evermore.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Monthly Report of the Board of Domestic Missions for February, 1853.

1. State of the Funds.—Our missionaries are all paid up to date, throughout the whole field, leaving balances to the credit of the Board in the treasuries in Philadelphia, Louisville, and Pittsburgh. There is also a balance remaining in all the Presbyterial treasuries. Comparing the entire receipts of the present year with those of the past year up to February 1st, there is an improvement, from all sources, of $576.93.

The Receipts for Church Extension have been but $100 the past month! and the appropriations exceed the balance in the treasury $257.62! The applications for aid are numerous, and increasing. Our receipts for Church Extension are $1288 less this year than they were at the same time last year! Funds are greatly needed.

2. Spring Collections.—In a short time, a large number of our churches will take up their annual collections for Domestic Missions, and we trust that their zeal and liberality in this work may not abate. It is not enough that we have funds sufficient to keep our operations afloat and advancing, but we must look forward annually to greater increase, and put such an amount of funds at the disposal of the Board as may enable it to extend its efforts, and sustain them vigorously and liberally, in various destitute regions, where they are called for. A supply of funds barely adequate to meet our expenditures, keeps the Board cramped, and when enterprises are opened to it, they cannot be engaged in at all, or feebly at best, for want of funds. Debt we cannot incur. The Assembly has wisely and justly forbidden it. Our treasury is not as full as it should be, and there is need of a large amount of funds for the successful prosecution of our operations. The Board has been occupying some important points, and is endeavouring to give greater expansion and power to our Church; for these efforts we specially need funds. We would earnestly commend the work so vital to our Church, and so necessarily connected with the best interests of our country, to the favour and substantial support of our officers and members; and ask the brethren to send up their collections as soon as made.

3. State of Religion.—We regret that we are unable to report anything like a general attention to religion in the churches and fields connected with the Board. The state of religion in them differs not from what it is in churches and fields not connected with the Board. We have, however, some encouraging reports, and interesting revivals. It is confessed, on all hands, that our whole Church is in a languid condition, and needs that gift of God—the comprehension of all gifts—the gift of the Holy Ghost. We beseech a remembrance in the prayers of the people of God.

4. Reënforcements.—A minister sails this month for California. With all our anxiety and efforts, we have not succeeded in procuring as many missionaries as were and are now needed for California. Some have offered themselves; but the size of their families, and the expense of their passage out, with the limited means of the Board, forbade our sending them. We hope to procure missionaries in the course of the spring for our most distant and destitute fields. We are happy to state that two young brethren, soon to graduate at one of our Theological Seminaries, have offered themselves to the Board as missionaries for California, and have been accepted.

SYNODS VISITED.

The Board determined to have as many Synods visited on their annual meetings last autumn as possible, and the cause of Domestic Missions brought before the brethren, believing that much good might be done in this manner, and at a trifling expense to the Board. The majority of our Synods were visited.

The individuals who appeared for the Board were, so far as our information extends, received kindly and cordially by the brethren. Some of these meetings were meetings of great interest. In one or two instances, discussions were had on the proper mode of conducting the Domestic Missionary work of the Assembly, and exceptions taken to the action of the Board in certain respects—and which arose mainly from misconception and the want of a proper appreciation of the straitened circumstances of the Board, and its relations in the disbursement of funds to the whole field of its operations—yet there was a unanimous assent to the importance and necessity of the work itself. The Board has reason to believe that the great principles upon which the work of Domestic Missions has been carried on by the Assembly from the beginning, as set forth in their last Report to that body, and reaffirmed by it, are acceptable to the Church at large; and the expressions of confidence and encouragement which have come to us from different quarters, inspire the Board with new zeal in the discharge of their responsible duties.

MISSIONARIES.

The present number of missionaries on the Board, compared with the number at this time last year, is less by 73; 46 less in the office at Philadelphia, and 27 less in the office at Louisville.

This decrease is what the Board anticipated in part; but the Board fondly hoped that the decrease from the natural and proper working of our missionary system, would have been made up by an increase in the ranks of the ministry, and an increase of numbers offering themselves to the missionary work, sufficient to make up and even go beyond the decrease. But, alas! we record the fact that it has not so happened; and consequently wastes lie uncultivated and calling for labourers, that otherwise the Presbyteries and the Board most gladly would have supplied.

The decrease has been occasioned, first, by our missionary churches becoming self-sustaining, and taking the support of their pastors off our hands, and consequently off our lists. So far as heard from, and as closely as we can make our estimate now, nearly 40 of these names have been taken from our lists in this most desirable and happy way. The Church here sees and reaps the reward of her labours and of her wise policy. Of the remainder, some have resigned their charges from ill-health or want of success; others have been called to self-sustaining churches; and others again have removed out of the missionary fields on account of the health of their families, or gone where they could be better supported. Such changes as these have been common from the earliest days of your Domestic Missionary work, and occur every year, and must continue to occur in all time to come. Such changes are going on continually in the settled and sustained ministry of our Church, and we cannot expect any thing less or more among our missionary brethren. They have as much right to consider their health, the interests of their families, their prospects for usefulness, as others, and to make proper changes, which no doubt they do conscientiously. The Presbyteries and the Board in some instances feel the changes deeply. Bright prospects are clouded; but this cannot be helped.

The great work committed to it by the General Assembly, the Board is endeavouring conscientiously and faithfully to pursue—expansion and retention—or, if you please, possession and preservation. Expansion—sending out and fully sustaining missionaries in collecting, spreading, and building up churches in new and destitute fields, and, as much as in us lies, filling our land with a knowledge of the Lord. Thus we spy out and go up and possess the land. Then comes retention. We desire our conquest not to be like the sweep of an unsettled people, but like those who become permanent possessors of the soil. So, after we have founded churches, no matter how long ago, we desire to preserve them in existence, by affording them a judicious supply of ministers and of means—a supply corresponding to their relative claims in view of the great field we cultivate. Thus we preserve our churches. But in all cases we are not able to do it. And why not? Because churches, like other associations of men, or even like individual men, will wax old, and decay and die;—die out naturally, or die out by emigration, or by absorption into surrounding churches. This no power in the Board nor Presbytery can prevent. Other churches are weak and feeble from their beginning, or become so from various causes, so that to give them a minister, and support him over them, would be an unjust disposition of the ministers and means at the disposal of the Board. Consequently they must be merged into contiguous churches, or united in a circle of churches, and so be made a good field—a sufficient charge for a minister; and then, if these churches cannot unitedly support him, the Board will aid in such an amount as may be necessary. This is agreeable to the order of the General Assembly, and reduces such churches to the character and standard of missionary churches.

But while the Board thus carries on its great work, it forgets not that it is required by the Assembly, of every church and field, as early as possible in its existence, and according to its ability, to contribute to the support of its pastor or missionary, and never to cease its efforts until it wholly sustains him. This is our Lord's rule. They who call and enjoy a ministry should support it. If a church cannot support its minister, but must receive aid from the missionary funds of the General Assembly, then, as already remarked, aid will be rendered in proportion to its relative claims and importance; but, of course, will be discontinued just as soon as it can make arrangements for the support of its minister, independent of the Board. All this is plain and just; and the effort of the Board is in connection with, and working in, through, and by the Presbyteries, to carry out these principles laid down by the Assembly, as liberally, kindly, judiciously, and faithfully as possible.

We are obliged still to regret the want of funds for the more liberal support of our missionaries, and for the occupation of new and important points. The Board deeply sympathize with our brethren in the field, and in connection with the Presbyteries, would aid more largely in their support, if it had it in its power. But the contributing churches come not up to the supply. The fault is not with the Board, but with the contributing churches; and having repeatedly pointed out the reason, we must leave the whole matter to the consciences of God's people. We shall make the wisest and best use of the funds intrusted by them to our care. The Rev. Benjamin Ogden, missionary of the Board in Indiana, died in January, and the Board has ordered his salary paid up to the end of his year, (about six months) to his afflicted widow and children.

By order of the Board.

SPECIAL REPORT.

For fear that some of the Special Reports forwarded by mail may not reach their destinations, we publish a copy in this number of the Record, and would respectfully request the brethren who may not receive their Reports by mail, that they would be so kind as to make out their returns and forward them to us in time.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS,
No. 265 Chestnut Street.
Philadelphia, February, 1853.

Rev. and Dear Brother—The period is again approaching when we shall be called upon to render to the General Assembly a report of the operations of the Board of Missions throughout the year, and as the results of the labours of our brethren in the missionary field, must, necessarily, occupy a prominent place in that report, we forward to you the annexed form of a Special Report, which contains the various items on which the General Assembly desires information. Will you be so good therefore, as not only to give us some information on each item introduced, but also make that information as full and as accurate as may be in your power. We would ask it as a special favour, that you pay particular regard to statistical information, and should you be in possession of any interesting facts connected with your missionary work, that you would insert them under the head of "General Remarks." Your report will, of course, include the amount of labour performed under the appointment of the Board, from the 1st of March, 1852, or, if appointed since that time, from the date of your commission.

As it will require some time to reduce into one, the numerous reports furnished by our Missionaries, we earnestly request you, after filling up the blanks and completing your annexed Special Report up to the first of March, 1823, or to the end of your commission if it should close sooner, to return it immediately after date, under an envelope to the Secretary of the Board at Philadelphia. Your punctuality in this matter will greatly oblige us.

Grace, Mercy, and Peace be multiplied unto you in our LORD. Sincerely and affectionately yours, in Him,

C. C. JONES, Cor. Sec.

GENERAL REMARKS.

INTOLERANCE OF ROMAN CATHOLICS.

We publish below a letter from Rev. Dr. L. Giustiniani, dated Cincinnati, Jan. 6, 1853, in which the circumstances of the assault of about two hundred Roman Catholics upon the peaceable assembly to which he was preaching, is given. This outrageous contempt of the laws of our country, and insult to American citizens, was met with manly decision and Christian resolution by the Protestant citizens and clergy of Cincinnati: and Dr. Giustiniani is placed in a more advantageous position for his work than before, and is prosecuting it with zeal and success. To persons brought up under our free institutions, and imbued with the true spirit of Christianity, persecution for religious opinions is most revolting. And it is difficult to make many believe that there is a sect of professing Christians among us, an article of whose faith is, that all without the pale of their church are heretics, under the curse of God, and are justly liable to persecution in every form, even unto imprisonment, tortures, fire, and death! Intolerance is bound up in the creed of Roman Catholics. The history of the papacy in all ages proves it; and even now there are persons suffering imprisonment for their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and their rejection of the dogmas and idolatries of Rome, if they are not dead. We allude to the Madiai in Tuscany. In all kingdoms of the earth, where Roman Catholics bear rule, they are intolerant towards Protestants, and had they the power in these United States, the same spirit would instantly manifest itself. We have had other instances besides the one before us, revealing the existence of this spirit. We desire our ministers, and members of our Protestant denominations, yea, the entire mass of our Protestant population, to be aware of the existence of this spirit among Roman Catholics, and not to be deceived, that they are in faith and practice different in our land of liberty from what they are now and always have been in other countries and in other ages of the world. And moreover, in all cases where their intolerance breaks out in open infraction of our laws, that they be made to feel the majesty and penalty of the laws, and learn obedience for fear, if not for conscience' sake. It is our candid opinion, however, that this intolerance resides chiefly in their foreign priesthood and in their foreign members. They bring their bigotry and intolerance warm with them from Europe—especially from the Roman Catholic countries from which they have emigrated. For the first generation they cherish it: but in the second and third generations, multitudes of them, notwithstanding all the catechizing and instructions of their foreign priests, will get good ideas of liberty of conscience, and will not readily lend their aid in acts of violence against their Protestant fellow-citizens. And the individual to whose prompt aid Dr. Giustiniani, under God, in all probability owes his life—we very much suspect of being a man who, if not born in our country, has lived long enough in it to see the wickedness of the persecuting spirit of Rome. The great body who assailed Dr. Giustiniani's meeting, we understand, were foreigners.

We are not alarmists. In our country, considering the efforts made, and the aid derived from abroad, and the vast emigration of Roman Catholics to our shores, Holy Mother Church makes but slow progress. She loses more than she gains. She finds every thing against her: a free constitution, equal laws, a sovereign people, universal suffrage, liberty of conscience, a free press, public schools, an open Bible, and a holy Sabbath. Let Protestants improve these inestimable blessings, and fill the land with an evangelical ministry, with the word of God, and with zealous endeavours and fervent prayers for the grace of God to render all efficacious, and we need fear nothing. God is with us. Antichrist shall be overthrown. He has promised it, and that promise he will make good. Meanwhile, let us avoid that intolerance which we condemn in others. Let us go forward in acts of kindness to our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, and use every influence of piety and Christian kindness to show them a better way, and to lead them to the faith as it is in Jesus. The Board of Missions will employ all the missionaries it can to labour among them. We commend the interesting letter to our readers.

"At the end of three months, I have the pleasure of remitting to you a short report of what the Lord has done for us among the foreign population, especially among the German Roman Catholics in Cincinnati. September 20th, I arrived in this city. After having presented my letters of introduction to the clerical brethren of our Church, who received me very fraternally, I began my work without delay. I began to visit in the Roman Catholic quarter from house to house, and I found two extremes, the legitimate consequences of popery, infidelity and superstition.

"Armed with the two-edged sword, the word of God, I was not afraid to penetrate into the centre of the enemy's camp, and, how mysterious the way of the Lord is! they received me cordially, and listened to the good news of salvation through Jesus Christ, and accepted thankfully the tracts which I gave them.

"October the 5th, I rented a hall, corner of Broadway and Hunt streets, near St. Paul's German Roman Catholic Church, where I preached to a large congregation, mostly Roman Catholics, which the priests did not approve of, consequently.

"October the 24th. Sabbath morning, the parish priest of St. Paul's preached; but instead of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the salvation of the souls of his parishioners, he dwelt largely and strongly on Giustiniani, your humble missionary. After many abuses, and paternal warnings, that they should not hear the gospel from the lips of your missionary, he gave them the instructive information, 'that I had been excommunicated by the church as an apostate.' You know that excommunication in the Roman dialectic means, 'Death, outlaw, kill him if you can without scandal;' in fact, at the evening service, about two hundred of his stupefied parishioners rushed into the Hall, and scared the peaceable worshippers, who dispersed; then they dragged the table from the platform with the books and lights, and threw them upon the ground, and after many threats and insults, and the exhaustion of the vocabulary of vituperation, calumny, and opprobrium, some cried 'Let us put out the lights.' As soon as said, it was done; as burner after burner was extinguished, the mob shouted and rejoiced.

"I must confess that at the beginning, and through the whole transaction, I was calm, and relied upon the justice of my cause. I knew that I was doing no more than exercising the rights granted me by the Constitution of my adopted country. But when one burner after another ceased to give light, and I heard the savage yells, I felt what it is to fall into Rome's hands; and like Stephen I looked up towards heaven, and implored the blessed Jesus to receive my soul. But he searches the hearts of men, and has promised that he will be with his own to the end of the world. He fulfilled his promise in that very hour. One of the mob, (and, as I am informed) a bigoted Roman Catholic, pushed through the mass of the people towards me, and took me by the collar of my coat, and with a voice almost supernatural, exclaimed, 'I will protect you; he who lays hand on the old man shall die.' He dragged me to the door; all gave way; as if panic-struck, they made room for us, and in that way the Lord rescued me from the hands of the savage followers of the Romish priesthood. You have doubtless read in the journals that our Presbyterian brethren took the matter into their hands, and the Romish priests have found out that their power is not so great in Cincinnati as they had imagined, and that the excommunication of the church of Rome is but a rusty weapon, which has neither power nor point; a poison which does not kill, and an arrow which no intelligent man fears.

"On our mission the circumstance had a good influence; I continued to preach in the same hall, until the brethren rented a little church, which can hold 250 persons conveniently, and on the 21st of November we dedicated it as the 'First German Presbyterian Church.' I preached two Sabbaths in it, and had a full house, but having overworked myself, I became sick, and got the typhus fever, and had to remain in bed for the space of five weeks. On 26th December, I was able to begin my work again, and though the work was suspended for nearly six weeks, I am happy to inform you that divine services are every time better attended, and the Spirit of God has manifested itself among us; five heads of families have experienced the grace of God on their hearts; men and women have promised to serve the Lord with their whole house. We have established a prayer-meeting on every Friday evening, which is well sustained. The next Sabbath, (God willing) we shall establish a Sabbath-school for adults; I have good prospects for success. Our Presbyterian brethren in Cincinnati are warm-hearted Christians; they take great interest in every thing which promotes the kingdom of our blessed Redeemer Jesus Christ, but especially in the German mission. I trust that the Holy Spirit will continue to work among us, and that many will be added to the number of the elect of God."

DO NOT GET MARRIED!

Why not? Hear what we have to say. A gentleman of high standing and long experience, and many years a member of our church, while conversing on the state and prospects of our Domestic Missions a few days since, said, "Why don't you keep your young ministers from marrying?" We replied, "That would be a difficult matter; we have no power, and the Scriptures would be against us." "No," said he—"you have power. Pass a rule in your Board that you will send out no married missionaries into your new field. They will cost you less—be more free to attend to their work—and then the Ladies are saved so much exposure, and sometimes suffering." "But shall they not marry at all?" "O, surely—after they get pretty well settled." "My dear sir—we can pass, as a Board, no such rule. The brethren must be their own judges. We can send only those whose expenses we can meet. Besides, many missionaries' wives fall very little behind their husbands in usefulness." Our friend continued in his opinion. We have no idea of entering into a discussion of this subject. It does not belong to us. We do not believe in the celibacy of the clergy. But the great end of ministerial life is not to get married, that is certain. Consequently there is no harm done to consider that matter in connection with our chosen field of labour. Put the field foremost. There is much weight in our friend's opinion. The Board have been needing missionaries for our distant Pacific fields, and some have offered who could not be sent, and for the reason that they had large families. The Board were not able to meet the heavy expense of their transportation to the field. Single men, or men with very small families could be sent.

A WORD FROM TEXAS: ENCOURAGING.

Last autumn the Board of Missions sent out the Rev. R. F. Bunting to Texas, and the following pleasant extract from his letter of January 18th, will show his feelings and prospects in his field of labour.

Recent information assures us that the tide of immigration to that State from other parts of the Union is perhaps greater than ever, and the demand for missionary labour is thereby increased. We shall be glad to hear from our students in our Theological Seminaries. The wide country is before them: the South-west and West and the Pacific States.

The Board of Missions is looking continually towards the expansion of our Church—the spread of the gospel over our vast territory, and sends out every minister that offers that its means will allow.

"The demand for Presbyterian ministers is great in Texas—the ground is ready—and there are many sheep scattered abroad, but no shepherds. Cannot the Board procure some from the Theological Seminary at Princeton next spring for this State? The climate is mild—and I find my health as good as in any place I have ever been. I feel assured if the brethren only knew how it is, they would come and help us. So far I am delighted with the State, and feel as though I shall make my home here. Send us men if possible, and we will find work for them to do."

And since the above was in type, we have received another letter dated January 26, from Rev. Marcus J. Wallace, another missionary sent out to Texas by the Board last autumn. His letter is taken up with an account of the field he has entered upon; his prospects are good and his spirit of the right kind. He finds Presbyterians scattered through the country, and says, "I like to be engaged in seeking after the stray sheep of our Church." At one of his churches he says, "I expect to labour among the coloured people as much as among the whites:" and closes with the remark: "I hope the Lord has a work for me to do here, and will sustain me."

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

OUR THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS FEWER THAN LAST YEAR.

It is now ascertained that the theological students in the Presbyterian Church are fewer in number this year, than last year. The catalogues of some of the Theological Seminaries, and communications from others, present the following statistics:

	1852.	1853.
Princeton, New Jersey	137	130
Alleghany, Pennsylvania	50	52
Prince Edward, Virginia	12	11
Columbia, South Carolina	32	32
New Albany, Indiana	22	14
Cincinnati, Ohio	14	11
Total Students	267	250

It must be confessed that this is one of the darkest signs of the times. Let every individual Christian ponder over the following thoughts.

1. If our country is increasing at the rate of more than half a million annually, ought our students to be fewer this year than last year?

2. The call for labourers in the foreign field is louder and louder; and yet our Church is making no advance in her ability to meet it.

3. A diminution in the number of theological students is, in general, a sign of declining piety in the Church. Is it conceivable that a healthy state of religion should furnish no increase of power to preach the gospel?

4. A retrograde movement is hard to recover from. It leaves its mark of evil. A continual advance is the Church's true policy and safety.

5. God's sovereignty is to be devoutly owned in all our calamities. The Church has no right to dictate. Her sins justly draw down divine judgments. God's inalienable sovereignty is to be exalted in the humiliation and confessions of his people.

6. How much have I, as an individual Christian, come short in my prayers to the Lord of the harvest! The infrequency of my supplications is not more amazing than the want of heart-felt interest to animate them. Let me feel my responsibilities in the present crisis of our affairs. Let me pray more, and do more, to increase the number of ministers of Jesus Christ!

THE MIND AND THE HEART.

Extract from the Charge of a Presbyterian Minister to a Young Candidate.

Your mind requires diligent cultivation. An educated ministry has long been a leading feature of Presbyterianism. May our Church never be found without this shining ornament; this strong bulwark. "If God does not need the learning of the ministry, least of all does he need its foolishness." "If you are intelligent, you will be intelligible." "Fill the pulpit and you will fill the sanctuary." "God has spread around us the elements which are to be combined and prepared for the nourishment of the body; but these may be combined so as to produce poisonous effects. And so it is in spiritual things. The facts in the Bible exist as the facts in the science of nature do; and we need men of skill to bring them out and exhibit them."

Think of the incessant draft upon a minister's resources; of the diversity of minds upon which he must operate; of the nature of the subjects he is called to investigate; of the consequences of his preaching error and giving a wrong direction to souls. Reflect upon these things, and tell me if a minister of the Gospel does not imperiously need the highest degree of intellectual culture, as well as of heavenly wisdom!

Who are the men that led in the Reformation? who the men that founded the Church in this country? who the men of any age or country, that have exerted a wide-spread and lasting influence? They have been educated men; men of disciplined minds and large stores of knowedge; men given to study.

"His single word," says Randolph of John Knox, "could put more life into a host, than six hundred blustering trumpets."

Your heart, my brother, has imperative claims upon your fostering care. Personal piety, sincere, deep, and growing, is of the last importance to a minister of Christ; it is sine qua non; it lies at the very foundation of his usefulness and happiness. Dr. Payson said, if he had his life over again, he would pray half his time. It is said of Robert Bolton, a Puritan, that "he never delivered a sermon to his people, in public, till he had preached it to himself in private." When ministers feel these special gracious influences on their hearts, it wonderfully assists them to come at the consciences of men, and, as it were, to handle them with hands. Whereas, without them, whatever reason and oratory we may make use of, we do but make use of stumps instead of hands.

Listen how Whitfield expressed himself; "But I pray that I may not go off as snuff. I would die blazing—not with human glory, but with the love of Jesus. I would be just where He (God) would have me, although in the uttermost parts of the earth."—Selected.

FAITH.

Ye who think the truth ye sow
Lost beneath the winter's snow,
Doubt not, Time's unerring law
Yet shall bring the genial thaw.
God in nature ye can trust;
Is the God of Mind less just?

Read we not the mighty thought
Once by ancient sages taught?
Though it withered in the blight
Of the mediæval night,
Now the harvest we behold;
See! it bears a thousandfold.

Workers on the barren soil,
Yours may seem a thankless toil;
Sick at heart with hope deferred,
Listen to the cheering word:
Now the faithful sower grieves;
Soon he'll bind his golden sheaves.

If Great Wisdom have decreed
Man may labour, yet the seed
Never in this life shall grow,
Shall the sower cease to sow?
The fairest fruit may yet be borne
On the resurrection morn.—Selected.

PREACHING, AND TEACHING SCHOOL.

The following communication, taken from the "Watchman and Observer," is reprinted, with a few omissions. Its subject is not free from difficulties, but eminently worthy of consideration. The question is not, whether a minister can preach better by keeping clear of a school, but whether, in many cases, he cannot do more good by preaching and teaching together, than by preaching alone.

As a remedy for the many sufferings of our young ministers, I would, as their brother, suggest what appears to me the only good one, viz: "Where their salaries are insufficient, let them teach school."

This is a good remedy, for

1. Because, as a general thing, a good school can be raised in, or about a weak congregation.

2. It will increase their influence, and their comforts.

3. It will be a blessing to the neighbourhood, and to the whole country, in keeping off those superficial, restless beings, who call themselves teachers, and who are everywhere.

4. They are, or ought to be, well qualified for the duty, and they have time enough to spare, which is otherwise almost lost.

5. They would increase the pecuniary strength of the Church by drawing nothing from her funds for their own support.

6. They would increase their own knowledge both of man and God.

7. They would never be idle. Besides, many a congregation would now have a pastor that is wasting away, simply from the want of means to support the gospel; and many a pastor's charge could thus give employment to two or more pastors, where one is now badly supported.

Brethren, you ask who gives this advice. Let me tell you. It is one who preaches acceptably (he believes) in country, or city; one, who has never been supported by his congregational salary; nor ever expects to be; one who is a preacher and a teacher; and who believes in partly supporting himself, for the sake of a congregation which is not able to support him; one who labours for Zion, and loves you. A Young Minister.

ONE REASON WHY OUR CANDIDATES ARE SO FEW.

A pious layman lays much stress, in a letter, of which we give an extract, upon the neglect of Christian education, as a cause of the small increase in our ministry. His views of the importance of pastoral interest in, and attention to, the young, are according to Scripture.

And first, let me state, that whilst a minor reason why so few are coming forward for the ministry is the worldly state and the worldly prosperity of the Church, and also the poor support which the mass of the ministry get, there is a greater one which I will state, and which I conceive to be this. Whilst the Presbyterian Church and the Dutch Church would be horrified, and would think it a great scandal and a subject of discipline if any of their ministers should admit persons to their pulpit, to preach for them, who had never been examined as to the doctrines they held, or if they were not professors of religion, yet both churches for years have given up their children, the children of the covenant, and the hope of the Church, to be educated, and in many cases to receive their views of religious doctrine, from persons who never have been examined as to their own views of doctrine, and many of whom neither possess nor profess religion. Both of our denominations, are, as churches, sanctioning thousands of teachers, as religious teachers, without examining them; and knowing that many of them are not even professors of religion, they have committed the indoctrinating of our children to them. The result must inevitably be, that our children will look to them as their spiritual teachers, and will not regard the ministry; they will grow up not caring for the doctrines of our Church, and will be more ready to support any other denomination than their own. Not being brought up in the truth, they will naturally turn to those denominations where it is not held up as prominently as it should be in ours. Nor do we gain any thing by attempting to keep our children by cathedral churches, painted windows, and fancy singing by a choir. Not only can other denominations beat us in that warfare, but that is the way to destroy, not to build up Christ's kingdom. Wo to the Presbyterian Church, when the pastors give up the training of the children of their charge to others, and the church uses carnal measures to keep them from straying. Going into a Sunday-school once a month, cannot be sufficient to feed "the lambs," and cause them to know and love their pastor or the truth. The Sunday-school teacher and the colporteur, if our Church is not upon her guard, will in a measure supersede the ministry. Many now hold them as a superior means, and as doing more good than the ministry. There is danger that our churches will not enjoy that degree of prosperity, or that growth to which we should look forward, and may not be enabled to stand forth as champions of the truth, as they have heretofore been enabled to do. We have in a great measure given up the children, and what will become of us? what is to stem the growth of Antichrist in our land? We must make every effort to turn the "hearts of the fathers to the children," and see that our children are properly trained in the family, in the school, and in the church. When the children are taught by the pastor, in person, the doctrines of the gospel; when parental instruction is united with religious education under pious teachers, they will love the truth, their pastors, and their church; and then we may hope that the Lord will bless his truth, and cause it to produce fruit; and then he will send labourers into his harvest.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

DENOMINATIONAL AND OTHER COLLEGES.

A letter has recently appeared, under the signature of Dr. John Maclean, Vice-President of Princeton College, containing an argument against denominational Colleges. His object is to defend Colleges, which, like Princeton and Jefferson, are managed by Presbyterians and whose influence is religious. It is not our purpose to reply at this time to that communication, but simply to suggest that there is ample room for the friends of both classes of institutions to co-operate together in educating the young religiously.

Dr. Maclean, with his usual magnanimity, admits the truth of this suggestion, both in theory and in practice. Whilst he is a warm friend of his own time-honoured institution, he greets with cordial affection the neighbouring one at Easton, which is renewing its youth and rising into eminence. This conduct is courteous, wise, and Christian. The Board of Education have never attacked institutions which have been doing the work of God, on the basis of the management at Princeton, Canonsburg, Prince Edward, Lexington, &c. On the contrary, these institutions have been always recognised as included in the denominational resources, and promotive of the prosperity of our Church.

The principles of all our operations imply, indeed, that the tie which binds Colleges to the Church, and throws the denominational life into them, is most efficacious in securing the great results to be accomplished. At a future time, we may recur to this subject. Our present object is simply to disown hostility to all institutions, not on the denominational basis, whether private or public, which pursue the work of education on religious principles. If Christ be duly honoured in them, we bid them all God speed. At the same time, we think there is a more excellent, certain, and permanent way of conducting Christian education. We also think that the expectation is a reasonable one, that all institutions, founded on the principles of an ecclesiastical connexion, should receive from the advocates of different principles, the treatment openly commended in Dr. Maclean's communication.

REVIVAL AT GENESEO ACADEMY.

RELIGION AND LEARNING.

A remarkable work of grace has been going forward, for some time past, in this interesting institution. God has been pleased to pour his Spirit in copious effusion upon the precious youth, and to bring many of them to a hopeful knowledge of Jesus Christ. There are few places where more good can be done than in such an institution, where religion is brought into daily contact with the young, amidst the acquisitions of knowledge.

The Rev. James Nichols, the Principal of the Academy, a faithful servant of Christ, with the assistant teachers, has endeavoured to keep prominent before the pupils the "one thing needful." The Rev. F. De W. Ward, the pastor of the Church at Geneseo, has also been indefatigable in his labours of love; and the whole work has been conducted with that happy mixture of zeal and prudence, which ordinarily secures the favourable regard of even the worldly-minded.

This memorable revival, which has led about sixty youth in the male and female departments of the institution to turn to Christ, has occurred in season for encouragement at the day of special prayer. May the whole Church begin at once, with renewed hope, to remember her youth at the throne of the heavenly grace, and to labour with all zeal and perseverance for their conversion.

The institution, as our readers probably know, is under the care of the Synod of Buffalo. Christian education is one of God's agencies in the conversion of youth and in supplying the Church with a faithful ministry.

The following authentic account of this good work has been secured as a short record of its history, and will be read with interest by all who value narratives of grace.

Geneseo, N. Y., February 7th, 1853.

Rev. Drs. Van Rensselaer and Chester:

Dear Brethren—We have a communication to make to the public respecting our Academy, of a most cheering and delightful character, and to whom may it be more fitly addressed than to those who have in trust the educational interests of our beloved Church. We shall aim at all allowable brevity in our narrative.

Never has the Academy been in a more prosperous condition as to the number and general character of its students than during the current term. When we saw the rooms fast filling up with youth whose deportment at once manifested a desire and determination to make all improvement of present educational privileges, it was received as an omen of good; but we were little aware of the blessing in store for us, the bestowment of which has caused many a parent's heart to "rejoice with joy unspeakable."

On the 16th ult. were the earliest manifestations of the special presence of the Spirit in our midst. The public services of the sanctuary were over, and the afternoon prayer-meeting held in the chapel was concluded, when a few of the young ladies, unable any longer to restrain their feelings, sought counsel of a Christian, whose heart the Spirit had prepared to receive such a communication, and give the necessary advice. We will not attempt to describe the scenes witnessed within those walls during the subsequent fortnight. God was with us, mighty to convict, and merciful, we trust, to save. More clearly than ever do we understand the promise, "I will pour out my Spirit unto you." Such heart-crushing convictions of personal sinfulness; such abjuring of all self-righteousness; such welcoming of Christ as the only Saviour, and such faith in believing, we have never more fully seen or heard of. It was the Lord's work.

As to numbers hopefully converted, there are at the present time more than sixty, and to a very large extent they all appear well. The Lord alone knoweth them that are his, and he will keep their feet from falling; but we will rejoice over many who afford us most satisfactory evidence of having been "born again." They delight in prayer and religious conversation; they are eager to know and do their duty; and oh! the intense solicitude felt and expressed for those who have not yet come to Christ. The cry goes hourly upward, Make them all willing to come to Thee! Anticipating questions suggested by this narrative, we would return replies to the following.

"What means were the antecedents of this remarkable movement?" None other than those of divine appointment, direct or clearly implied. The Bible is not merely a "text-book" in the Institution, but is taught and studied with a view of learning what "man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man." The Bible and catechism are an integral part of the course of study; prayer and conference meetings are regularly held, though attendance is wholly voluntary. These, in addition to attendance upon public religious worship, have been all the means employed. No multiplied sermons, no extra services, no machinery to accomplish a specified end, but the ordinary means of grace faithfully employed and made effectual through divine influence. If ever a 'revival' were from above, it has been this. The most indifferent spectator exclaimed, "This is not of human origin. Sermons, invitations, appeals, could not produce such results. God is here!" This feature has afforded us great satisfaction, for we can more confidently pray, 'Complete, O Lord, what Thou hast begun.'

"How much has early religious education to do with these results?" Much, very much. At least two-thirds of the converts are from Christian households, where the Bible was daily read and the family altar surrounded by parent and child. Were it necessary we might quote expressions made to us by these young disciples, which would illustrate the importance of home education, and encourage Christian mothers especially in their endeavours for the early conversion of their dear children. The blade we see is, in many cases, the product of seed sown at home by the hand of parental love, accompanied by parental watchfulness and prayer.

"Are any of the young men likely to enter the ministry?" We trust they will. Several have communicated to us their wish and purpose upon this subject, which we would by all means encourage and foster. The Institution contains those whom the Creator has endowed with talents which, under the sanctifying power of divine grace, will enable them to adorn the sacred desk and bless the world. Some of the young ladies are already turning their thoughts westward, with the anxious inquiry, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

"Is not this an evident seal of the divine approbation of the Christian character of the Institution?" We think that it is, and thus is it viewed by all the Christian people of the community. With less of religious instruction and sanctifying influence, we could hardly anticipate such scenes as those which we have witnessed. Surely He would not thus bless what He did not greatly approve.

A few sentences will close our narrative.

We would commend this Institution to the prayers of all who have an interest at the throne of grace. The Lord hath done great things for us; and we would say to all who love Zion, "Come, magnify the Lord with us, and let us exalt His name together." But remember the converts, and pray that they may "endure unto the end;" and remember those who are yet far from Christ, that they may accompany their Christian associates as they journey heavenward.

Let prayer be offered for the Teachers, whose position is alike arduous and responsible. It is due to divine grace to say, that with heart and hand they have united in this good work, labouring night and day, until nature seemed to be able to endure no more. But God has been their strength, and their hearts are full of gratitude and joy.

One suggestion more, and it is addressed to the readers of this narrative whom God has blessed with pecuniary abundance. It is much desired to endow this Institution, that it may retain its Christian character, and perpetuate its privileges from generation to generation. Will you not aid in this blessed enterprise? will you not help to establish that system of education here, the result of which may, with hopefulness, be a recurrence of such scenes as have now been briefly though truly described?

Commending the Institution, first to the God of all wisdom and grace, and then to the unabated interest, endeavours, and prayers of God's people, we remain, dear Brethren,

Yours, with all respect and affection,

F. De W. Ward,
Pastor of Pres. Ch. and Pres't of the Board.
James Nichols,
Principal of Geneseo Academy.

ARANAMA COLLEGE.

ANOTHER COLLEGE IN TEXAS.

We learn that our brethren in Texas are about to establish another College in that growing State. The question of multiplying Colleges is an interesting and important one. How far this policy ought to be pursued must be determined by circumstances. If the Presbytery of Western Texas judge that they are able to sustain such an institution, and if the cause of Christ demands it, all must heartily wish it success. The following account is from the Louisville Herald.

ARANAMA COLLEGE.

The Presbytery of Western Texas have resolved to establish a College with this name at Goliad, located at the head of navigation on the San Antonio river, in Western Texas. This location is three hundred miles west of Huntsville, where Austin College, under the care of the Synod of Texas has been located. The ruins and site of the old Jesuit Mission, called the Aranama Mission, and a league of land valued at twelve or fifteen thousand dollars, have been donated to the Presbytery by the town of Goliad, on condition that they erect, within five years, a College building worth ten thousand dollars. The Rev. Stephen F. Cocke, and A. H. Phillips, Esq., have been appointed agents by the Board of Trustees, to solicit donations for this object. The contiguity of the location to Mexico, and the fact that some Mexican parents have already sent their sons to the preparatory school, and that other influential Mexican families promise to patronize the College as soon as it shall be fully organized, are among the reasons which the friends of the enterprise plead for its prosecution. Upon this ground they expect liberal assistance from the people of the older States. Whether it is wise for our brethren in Texas, who are still so few and feeble in resources, to attempt the establishment of two Colleges, we, at this distance, cannot determine. Certainly if they can secure the education of Mexican youth, it will be worth a great effort to do it.

WEST POINT SCHOOL, IOWA.

The following is an account of the opening of a Christian school at West Point, Iowa.

The first quarter of the Parochial School in this place, closed the 23d day of October last. The number of scholars in attendance during the quarter averaged 25. The course of religious instruction adopted in the school, was the same as set forth in Mr. Woodman's letter to you, viz.: the school was opened and closed each day with prayer; reading of the Scriptures by the scholars, and Bible instruction by the teacher, every morning. All old enough to read were required to recite in the catechism every Monday morning.

We are gratified to find that this kind of instruction met not only the approbation of Presbyterian families, but generally of others who patronized the school. About one-third of the scholars were not members of Presbyterian families. It is not determined yet whether the next quarter will be commenced this winter or in the spring, in consequence of the church building being too cold for winter. The prospects for the success and prosperity of the school are good. We stand in need of the amount promised by the Board for the first quarter, as soon as it will be practicable to forward it.

Yours, &c.

GOOD INFLUENCES OF A SCHOOL.

One of our ministers thus refers to the general influences exerted by a school upon the pupils.

These young men, with but one exception, I have known before they came into our school, and the happy influence it has had upon those of them who have been longest in, in a moral point of view, is so palpable as to be subject of remark. They have become staid, sober, and remarkably studious, which from their previous history is quite remarkable. A pious and widowed mother observed to me, that she had noticed with pleasure the great change going to school had made upon A, B, and C of our scholars, and she would not hesitate about any expense if her son, (who was somewhat wayward,) could be induced to go and do likewise. A few weeks after, he came, and already appears to be absorbed in his studies, and a different boy. I may say of all our scholars thus far, they are studious beyond what I have ever noticed in the same number. There are at least one dozen who are now engaged in teaching, who were qualified for their work whilst with us. Some intend to return and prosecute their studies further, and are teaching to procure means.

Our scholars, if not pious, appear to be serious minded. They are punctual in their attendance upon the public means of grace, and manifest no disposition to shrink from religious instruction. In contemplating what has already been done, I cannot but fondly hope that God will in his mercy grant to them his renewing and saving grace, and that our school may be the blessed instrument in sending forth some, at least, who shall in due time be engaged as heralds of salvation. Our most advanced class, I think all of them, design entering college.

The amount of religious instruction is as follows. At the opening of the school, a chapter is read from the Scriptures by all who are capable of reading well. This is followed with prayer by the Principal. This is the case every day except Monday, when this exercise is followed by a recitation from the Bible, on a lesson previously prepared. The school is closed by singing only. The Catechism is recited by all the scholars during the week, but to most of them now it is familiar.

THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.

The Bible is beyond all controversy the best book of education in the world. It is the best book for the formation of children's minds; the best book for their acquisition and preservation of a pure idiomatic style in their native language; the best book to promote and secure the purposes of family government; the best book to make our children enlightened and good citizens of the Republic; the best book, in fine, to preserve them from all evil, and train them up in all good.

A powerful volume might be written on its excellence as a school book, and on the importance of still keeping it where our forefathers laid it, as the corner stone of our invaluable system of public education. If you take it away, the system not only becomes worthless, but absolutely pernicious. Imbue a single rising generation with the various knowledges of our day, and leave out the knowledge and the fear of God in his word, and you have already made broad provisions for your country's ruin. You have gathered fuel of ambition and irreligion, which any bold mind may set fire to. If Lord Bacon could not talk of knowledge alone, without the mingling of God's truth and love in it, as being a pernicious and dangerous aliment to older minds, much more is it dangerous and hurtful to the minds of children.

Our education needs a religious element; for it is not education alone that will save us, but will merely train a skilful race of gladiators for the arena of political strife. The only source of that element of safety is the word of God. And if you take the word of God from your common schools, you are teaching infidelity and practical atheism to the whole nation. You are filling the mind with elements that, without the safeguard of divine truth, are sure to become fiery, bitter, and poisonous.

In its general influence over the minds of our children, and over the whole business of education, the Bible in our schools is invaluable. It is a constant habitual nourishment, an uninterrupted systematic influence over tender minds at the most susceptible age—as steady, as cheerful, as healthful, as the light of the sun. In this way a great many children are blessed with the privilege of listening daily to the word of God, who, alas, would never hear it read in the family; and this is one highly important reason for maintaining it. It brings the children even of the abandoned, the vicious, and the worthless—of families where no family altar was ever dreamed of—to the daily recognition of a heavenly Father, and the daily table of that bread which he has provided for the soul. This seems acting somewhat in the spirit of the Bible itself. This is writing the characters of Heaven upon the soul deeper than all succeeding impressions. How beneficent, how salutary in all its enlightened and elevating influences, is the daily and appropriate use of the Bible in school!—Rev. Dr. Cheever.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, February 12, 1853.

India.—Letters have been received from Lodiana, December 7; Ambala, December 7; Saharanpur, December 6; Futtehghur, December 7; Agra, December 7; Allahabad, to December 7. The annual meeting of the Lodiana mission was held at Ambala, and was a season of refreshing communion between brethren whose stations are widely separated. At this meeting it was agreed to transfer Mr. Morrison to Lahor, and Mr. Orbison to Ambala. Mr. Campbell of Saharanpur writes that, "On the 7th of last month our excellent catechist, Samuel B. Wylie, was called to his rest. His disease was consumption. He was calm and cheerful under his sufferings, and died in hope of a better world." The examination of the Mission College at Allahabad was held on the 2d of December, and was favoured with the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor and other distinguished Europeans, both ladies and gentlemen, and also of two of the ex-Ameers of Sinde and numerous native gentlemen. The occasion appears to have been one of great interest, and the proficiency of the scholars was highly commended. The Lieutenant-Governor made an address, the substance of which, he afterwards kindly furnished to Mr. Owen; it will be read with warm interest, in connection with the report of the examination in another column. Mr. Munnis was making a journey on the river, partly for health, and partly for missionary work, assisted by one of the native catechists. Mr. Hay was also absent for a few weeks, accompanied by Mirza, preaching at the stopping places on the road—his journey extending to Agra.

Siam.—Our advices are dated at Bangkok, on the 29th of October. We regret to learn that Mr. Bush's health is no better. The missionary work was going on as usual.

China.—Letters have been received from Canton, to November 27; Shanghai, November 25; Ningpo, to November 8. We learn with much regret, that Mr. and Mrs. Byers were compelled to re-embark for this country in the Nestorian, which sailed from Shanghai on the 11th of November—serious pulmonary disease having been developed, rendering it in the judgment of medical advisers, and of his brethren in the mission, impracticable for him to take part in the missionary work. It is with much regret we have also to report the expected return of Mr. and Mrs. Coulter, on account of the failure of Mr. Coulter's health. These returns seem to be the more serious as trials of our faith, because both these brethren, when they left this country, possessed apparently more than ordinary vigour of constitution, and had always enjoyed the best health. In other respects the missionary work was going on well. Mr. W. Martin says of Ningpo, "We have reason to believe that a good work is quietly, but very decidedly going on among the people of this city. When our church was first opened, it was found difficult to preserve order in the audience. Now the audiences, especially at night, are almost as quiet and attentive as those in Christian lands. The night audiences are small, varying from ten to forty persons. Of these many are frequent attendants, and interested, if not anxious inquirers after gospel truth. Some, too, have expressed a desire to profess Christianity, and we hope that we shall have, before long, evidence of their fitness for admission to church privileges. Amongst others, my teacher, a young man of fine mind, expresses full confidence in the truth of the gospel. . . Another young man is in an equally interesting state of mind. I am thoroughly convinced of the sincerity of both of these persons." After referring particularly to the return of Messrs. Byers and Coulter, Mr. Martin adds, "It would be disheartening, both to us and the churches at home, to witness the disablement of so many labourers at the various stations in this empire, were we not sustained by the promise of God, assuring us that he shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment on the earth, and the isles shall wait for his law."

Creek Mission.—A letter of November 15th mentions the admission to the church of three of the scholars at Tallahassee.

Omahaw and Otoe Mission.—We regret to learn that Mr. McKinney's health is quite delicate. His duties have been altogether too severe, and many of them were such as could have been just as well performed by laymen, if the services of men of the right spirit could have been obtained. But we hope for better days for this Mission. Miss Mary E. Woods, appointed as a teacher, reached the station early in December; and when a teacher and his wife, and a farmer and his wife, now under appointment, shall have joined the Mission, we trust our excellent missionary will regain his strength, and the work of the Lord go forward with new vigour.

INDIA: ALLAHABAD MISSION.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. JOSEPH OWEN: DECEMBER 7, 1853.

Examination of the Mission College—Letter of the Governor of the North-West Provinces of India.

Last Thursday, the 2d inst., was the regular time for the annual examination of our Institution.* The Lieutenant-Governor was here, and most kindly presided, and distributed the prizes. Our excellent friend, Mr. H. C. Tucker, sent down fifty rupees in cash, and some books to be given in prizes. Mr. R. Berrill, the hotel keeper, (a Roman Catholic,) gave a newly coined gold sovereign, as a prize for the best student. Rannu Lál, a native gentleman from the city, contributed several valuable books to be given out in prizes. There were present at the examination, besides the Lieutenant-Governor, his Aid-de-Camp, Major Grant; his medical attendant, Dr. Francis; W. Muir, Esq., Secretary to Government, and Mrs. Muir; R. Lowther, Esq., Commissioner of Allahabad, and Mrs. Lowther; Mr. Kinlock, our Civil and Sessions Judge, and Mrs. Kinlock; H. C. Tucker, Esq., recently appointed Commissioner of Benares; Captain Channer, Commissary of Ordnance at Allahabad; Colonel Moule, Commandant of the station, and Miss Moule; Captain Nicolson, of the 25th Native Infantry, and Mrs. Nicolson; G. A. Wright, Esq., Deputy Collector of Customs; Dr. Ross, of Delhi; Mr. Berrill; two of the ex-Ameers of Scinde, one of whom took part in examining the boys in Persian, and expressed himself much pleased with their progress; the five native gentlemen who form the town council; the Kotwál, or chief officer of the police for the city; a native judge from the city; and from twenty to thirty other respectable native gentlemen, most of whom are in the Government service. Besides these there was a vast concourse of spectators from the city, so that the hall and adjoining room and verandah were crowded. After distributing the prizes, the Lieutenant-Governor made an address that gave such great and universal satisfaction that a general desire was expressed to have it committed to paper, and two friends offered to assist me in recollecting and writing it out. In a subsequent interview with the Governor, I expressed a desire to have it in writing, and he very kindly promised to send me the substance of it in a day or two. He has done so, and I have the pleasure of sending you a copy. [This we here insert. —Ed.]

"Camp Phoulpoor near Allahabad, December 4, 1852.

"My Dear Sir—I regret that I cannot comply with your request to give you in writing the remarks which I made on the occasion of your school examination the day before yesterday. The expressions which were used have now escaped me, but the sentiments were those which I always entertain, and which I have, therefore, no difficulty in putting on paper. It will probably be as gratifying to you to receive them in the form of a letter, as in any other mode.

"I only conveyed the sentiments of the party of friends assembled on the occasion, when I mentioned the pleasure we had experienced in listening to the ready answers, and the intelligent expressions of the many youths who were on that day assembled in your hall. But to myself the display was peculiarly gratifying, because I saw before me the realization of all those anticipations which I had previously formed regarding the Institution. A few years ago there was a Government school maintained in Allahabad. It was well endowed by the Government; it was countenanced and encouraged by all the high officers of Government then at the place. The masters were able men, and a considerable degree of proficiency was attained by many of the students, who subsequently proved themselves useful and efficient public servants. But I judged that that, as well as other similar Institutions, did not bring a benefit to the State, commensurate with the charge that they entailed upon it. I felt that they came into competition with other schools, which would probably be maintained by private individuals, without any cost to the State, and that they so far discouraged rather than promoted the general cause of education. I therefore abolished those schools, and concentrated the efforts of the Government on the improvement of the colleges maintained in our cities, where there was ample room for many educational establishments. I that day witnessed the result of this measure in Allahabad. The number of pupils in the Allahabad Government School was under 100, whilst there were 327 boys on the list of the Mission School. Many of these boys had attained a high proficiency in secular learning, and they also received that which the government abstained upon principle (and I consider justly) from imparting—sound and diligent instruction in the truths of Christianity. They had that day shown an acquaintance with Scripture history, and with the simpler Christian doctrines, which would not have been surpassed in many schools in our own Christian land. To you, and to the other missionaries who are associated with you, we owe this very happy result. Under any circumstances, our cordial acknowledgement would be due for labour so faithfully and successfully rendered. But our gratitude is the greater, when we reflect from whence you come, and by what funds you are supported in this great work. God, in his wisdom, has intrusted the government of this great country to England, and thereby has imposed upon her the obligation to make every effort in her power to promote the real good of the people. We fully recognize this obligation, and make some effort to discharge it; but the effort is wholly and utterly inadequate. In our difficulty we find assistance rendered to us by our sister country, or I might say our daughter country, for the mother may well be proud of such a noble offspring. America is bound to this country by no particular ties. You are summoned by no hopes of conquest, you are allured by no hope of gain; but you come amongst us in the spirit of philanthropy and of Christianity, you freely offer us your money, you spend your best energies in our cause, your lives are often sacrificed in the service. It is not at Allahabad only, but at many other stations, even in these provinces alone, at Agra, at Futtehgurh, at Mynpoorie, at Saharanpoor, and in the Panjaub, that you have many earnest and devoted labourers in the cause. You have hereby laid us under a deep obligation to you, which we can never adequately acknowledge, and of which, I trust, we shall all ever show ourselves deeply sensible.

"Such I think, my dear sir, was the substance of what I said. The latter topic is one on which I have long felt deeply, and what I now write to you, I have often expressed in conversation, to the many worthy and pious men who are your coadjutors in the sacred cause. If you think it will be any encouragement or gratification to your friends and supporters in your native country to know that such sentiments are entertained by myself, and by numbers of my fellow countrymen, with whom I am in constant and intimate communication, you are at liberty to assure them that such is the case.

"Accept my best wishes and prayers that you and all your associates may succeed in the great work in which you are engaged, and that your labours may meet with that acceptance and reward from above, which is the only and the sufficient recompense for which you labour.

"Believe me, my dear sir, yours with much esteem,

J. THOMASON."

Rev. J. Owen.

A pious friend in the Governor's camp, and an officer high in the Government service, after hearing the examination, volunteered to write something that I might show you. He saw the Governor's letter before it was sent off to me, and thus writes: "I trust it will be the means of cementing the union between pious people in America and those in Britain, encourage to further exertion, and strengthen your own faith. You are at liberty to have it published in America, where I trust it may be blessed to do much good. With such a letter from the head of our Government, any thing from so insignificant an individual as myself would be quite superfluous." I am sure the kind feeling thus expressed towards us by our English friends, will meet with a most cordial response from our friends and supporters at home. May God unite these two great Protestant countries more and more, and make them more than ever the bulwarks of pure religion and of liberty. I ought to add that the Lieutenant-Governor made us the handsome present of 200 rupees for our Institution.

You will recollect that last year a writer in the Calcutta Review gave the results of missionary labour in India and Ceylon. The same writer, the Rev. J. Mullens of Calcutta, was requested, by the Missionary Conference in Calcutta, to extend his inquiries, and obtain, if possible, still more accurate results. He has done so, and a summary was given in a late number of the "Friend of India," which is here enclosed:

The results of Missionary labours in India and Ceylon.

"There are 22 Missionary Societies. These include 443 Missionaries; of whom 48 are ordained natives; together with 698 Native Catechists. These agents reside at 313 Missionary stations. There have been founded 331 Native Churches, containing 18,410 Communicants; in a community of 112,191 Native Christians. These Missionaries maintain 1,347 vernacular day-schools, containing 47,504 boys; together with 93 Boarding schools, containing 21,414 Christian boys. They also superintend 126 superior English day-schools, and instruct therein 14,562 boys and young men. Female education embraces 347 Day-schools for girls, containing 11,519 scholars; but hopes more from its 102 Girls' Boarding Schools, containing 2,779 Christian girls. For the good of Europeans 71 services are maintained.

The total expense of the machinery which has produced these results, and which includes an European agency as large as the Civil service of Bengal, is £190,000 a year, of which sum 33,000 is raised in India itself."

The Bible called for by Hindu students.—Concerning native agency; important question.

The following fact I had the other day from the best authority. I shall give no names, and you may therefore publish it, as it is a very interesting one. A gentleman of high and noble principle, though not a decidedly pious man, holding a high office under Government not very far from this, set up a school at his place of residence, chiefly at his own expense. He resolved from the first not to introduce the Bible, lest it should keep the boys away. He asked some pious friends in England to assist his school, but they said they could not, unless he had the Bible taught. All went on well, he furnished the boys with all the books and apparatus required, and at length had a nice school-house made ready for them. The day for entering the new school-house was to be celebrated by distribution of sweetmeats among them. This they declined, and said there was something else they wished instead. They said, "You have been very kind to us, and have given us many books, but there is one book which you have never yet given us." "What is that?" he asked. "The Bible!" The Bible was accordingly introduced, and by the next mail he sent the information to his friends in England, and asked for their aid. This, with many other facts, shows that there is a gradual and very extensive change in progress in these provinces.

[Mr. Owen next speaks of the importance of having a native missionary agency established throughout the District.]

The time is rapidly passing, and we must bestir ourselves; otherwise these 1,100,000 people, all within a comparatively short distance from us, will soon be for ever beyond our influence. In Allahabad and Futtehpore we have about 300 pupils under our care, but what are these among the eleven hundred thousands of people here, added to the 600,000 there? What we do we must do with all our might. We can never reach these people permanently by a foreign agency; we may make preaching excursions among them, but the fixed agency for their instruction must be a native one. A part of this is, I trust, in progress in the higher classes in the college, and others are coming on well in the lower classes. It is a question deserving our most serious attention, whether we ought to turn over these youths, whom we have educated with so much trouble and expense, to the State, or try to retain them in our own service. The Government educates its own servants in its own colleges; shall we not try, as far as possible, to keep in our own service the most valuable of those whom we educate! I mean not only the Christians, but others who may render us important service in teaching secular knowledge. Hitherto we have had room for such in our Institution and in the Futtehpore School, but in these our ranks of teachers will soon be full, and then what shall we do with the promising and intelligent young men who will soon want situations? Can we not establish a system of village schools in this District, and eventually in that of Futtehpore, where these young men may be employed in teaching secular learning, connected with catechists and preachers, who will impart to the schools the proper Christian element? These schools would form excellent nuclei for the preaching labours in the district of any of the missionaries from the station. This subject has long been on my mind, and I feel that we ought to try to do something of this kind before very long. The experiment of Yúnas at Phulpúr was successful so far as it went, but it is relinquished for the present. But my hope and prayer is that not only this will be resumed, but many more taken up and carried forward with zeal and success.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

LETTERS OF THE REV. A. W. LOOMIS.—NO. VII.

Chinese Funeral Ceremonies.

When a death occurs, there is always lamentation in the house; often indeed such lamentation is heard where death has not come; but when some member of a family is taken violently ill, or his life is despaired of, friends give utterance to the most violent and boisterous expressions of grief, both as expressive of their sorrow, and in supplication to the spirit of the person that it would not depart from the body in which it has been wont to reside. Men, however, are seldom known in this loud manner to express their grief; it is the women, and sometimes the children with them, that are expected to perform the wailing. The practice of hiring mourners at funerals prevails in China to a great extent.

At a house of mourning in our country, we expect stillness and solemnity, but in China a house of mourning presents a very different appearance. The hall, or principal room of the house, or booth, put up for the occasion, is furnished with tables which are plentifully supplied with provisions—a band of music, or a company of men with cymbals and horns, some of which give a sound resembling that of the bagpipe—a company of women wailing after a prescribed form, but making the most distressing noise, and even this not all sincere, for they may be diverted by any strange occurrence, and cease wailing occasionally for a chat with each other, or with friends that come in, while children are at play about the house, and the men engaged in conversation. The feasting which follows after the return from burying the dead could not be distinguished from a marriage feast, except by the white garments and caps of some in the company.

Several days elapse generally before the corpse is carried to its resting place, and these days, according as the family are able to defray the expense, are occupied in whole or in part by religious ceremonies for the benefit of the dead. Buddhist priests are present, saying prayers for the purpose of freeing the soul from purgatory; they now and then call upon the mourners to wail. Incense and candles are burning near the corpse most of the time, and some sacrifices are on the table. Before the body is put into the coffin, it is dressed in its best clothes, or a new suit is prepared for the purpose, with cap, shoes, pipe, fan, and spectacles if he used them while living. The Chinese believe that in some way all these things will go with the person to the other world, and that he will wear them there just as he was wont to do here.

The rich expend immense sums in preparing the body for burial, with clothing of the most costly materials, richly embroidered, together with jewels and trinkets. Poor people who are not able to purchase new clothes in which to bury a friend, go around soliciting subscriptions from relatives and neighbours, and people pretty readily contribute for such a purpose, because it is considered meritorious. They can also obtain coffins in the same way. There is a charitable institution at Ningpo for the express purpose of furnishing coffins to the poor, but it is disreputable to a family not to furnish themselves the coffins for their friends; and there are also some fees to be paid before the coffin can be obtained from the institution which provides them for the poor.

After the corpse is attired and placed in the coffin, it is still kept until a lucky day, or, in case the family have not an ancestral burying-place, until a propitious place can be found. For a lucky day, they have only to consult the almanac; for the lucky place, they have to depend upon the men who profess to understand the "wind and water rules," who receive fees for their services, and sometimes, with the hope of gain, when those who employ them are wealthy, they pretend to have difficulty in finding a lucky spot, so that the dead in some cases remain unburied for months.

When the day for the funeral arrives, the lineal relatives of the family assemble at the house. The mourners-dress throughout in white sackcloth, the women wear a band of the same about the head, and the men a cap; some less nearly related to the deceased wear only the cap, or band. This is the mourning dress worn on the day of the funeral, afterwards the badges of mourning are a white button on the cap, white string in the hair, white collar, girdle, and shoes, and a light coloured dress, and visiting cards stamped with white. This is full mourning which is worn by children for parents, and by wives for husbands; but a husband wears half mourning for a wife, and half mourning is blue instead of white. The period required by law in which mourning must be worn for a parent is three years. A sacrifice of cooked food is laid on the table near the coffin, on which also candles and incense sticks are burning. The relatives and friends come and worship before the coffin, bowing down and striking the forehead on the ground.

The procession for proceeding to the grave, forms somewhat in this order. First the musicians; but often these are preceded by boys with newly cut bamboos, with strips of paper attached, to frighten all evil disposed spirits out of the way; others set off fire crackers; others still light candles and incense sticks, and leave them burning at all the bridges and gates which the procession is to pass, and they bow down and knock the head to them; this is to propitiate the presiding deities of the gates and bridges; and they burn paper money along the way to propitiate the spirits. Then comes the coffin, sometimes in a heavy car, or hearse I might call it, only it is borne on men's shoulders, not on wheels; but generally two large bamboos are lashed to the coffin, one on each side, and seven or eight men carry it, for the coffin is heavy, being of plank two or three inches thick. Next to the coffin is the sedan chair in which is carried only the ancestral tablet of the deceased; then follow the mourners, first the men on foot, then the women in chairs, if the distance is great, and crying bitterly all the time. The sons, if the deceased be a parent, a father especially, are supported by a person on each side, as if to show the intensity of their grief, and to intimate that now the head of the family being taken away, they are left, not only broken hearted, but without a support and provider. In some cases the same thing is symbolized by all the members of the family carrying staves, on which to lean. Sometimes the sacrifices are carried to the grave, but are brought back again to the house to be feasted upon by the friends and relatives. At the grave, paper money and paper furniture in miniature are burned.

In the vicinity of Ningpo, coffins are not buried below the surface of the ground, but flat stones are laid on the ground, the coffin placed on these and mason work built around, and inclosing it. Afterwards earth is brought and laid over them till it forms in many places a mound ten or twelve feet high. But all the graves are not covered with earth in this manner. Many are left without any earth upon them; and with some the mason work is put up in the form of a house, with a regular roof of tiles. There are very many coffins laid on the ground with nothing to cover them but straw, or a coarse matting. The reason for doing this, in most cases, is because the friends are unable to purchase land for the grave, or to build a tomb; but sometimes they are left in this way till the father and all his wives are dead, when, as I have been informed, they are gathered and placed side by side and covered by one mound of earth. These mounds usually have a broad slab of stone in front, on which are cut the name, title, date of the birth and death of the deceased. The best tombs have an embankment of earth encircling the mound, except in front. This is to represent a chair. Others have a pavement in front with a low railing of stone, and stone seats.

There are about Ningpo, and on the island of Chusan many tombs of a former dynasty, and some of them very much dilapidated, which must have cost thousands of dollars each. They are the tombs of persons who were once officers of government, and the ground in front of the grave is so ornamented with gateways and sculptured figures, as to have some resemblance to the entrance to a high officer's palace;—a gateway, an officer on each side of it, a paved walk, a portico, another walk and another gateway, then a broad paved way to the front of the tomb, and officers' horses saddled and bridled, lions, sheep, and other animals arranged along on each side of this paved way. All this work is cut in stone and the size of life.

In cases where the death was occasioned by some malignant or contagious disorder, or, as they suppose, is often the case, by the influence of evil spirits, when the mourners return from the grave to their own house, they walk over a fire which is blazing before the door; this is to intercept the spirit that he may not return with them into the house. In such cases also the clothes and bedding of the deceased are taken into the fields and burned.

Families that can defray the expense, call a company of priests every month, or quarterly, for a year after the person has deceased, to chant prayers for his deliverance from purgatory; and afterwards, on every anniversary of his death the same is done.

Such funeral ceremonies as have been here described, are not afforded to all; unmarried children, concubines and servants, are buried without much parade; and infants amongst the poorer people are not considered worthy of even the expense of a coffin, but are tied up in old clothes or matting, and placed on the ground amongst the graves, under the city wall, on trees, or thrown into the river, and left to be devoured by dogs and birds. There are, however, receptacles prepared in which may be deposited the bones of infants, or others who by any means have failed to receive sepulture. These are structures eight or ten feet square, and of about the same height, built of stone, without any door, but with a hole in the back part, about ten inches in diameter, through which the bones are passed. The building of these receptacles, and the gathering of the bones, are considered meritorious deeds, and are performed by persons wishing to gain a greater amount of credit with the gods, or perhaps, in some cases, in the fulfilment of a vow in time of sickness or other calamity.

It is seldom that we pass through the streets but we hear wailing in some of the houses, and rarely do we go into the country without coming in contact with a funeral procession. And all these sights and these sounds, remind us that the inhabitants are dying around us, and that what we do for the present generation we must do quickly. Did the burying grounds about Ningpo lie together, they would cover a space of far greater extent than that occupied by the city and its suburbs; and the city of the dead is still extending. The employment of many of the living seems to be, to carry out the dead and provide for them. A stranger would almost be led to think that the principal business of the inhabitants was to bury the dead, prepare and adorn their sepulchres, and administer to the wants of their manes. Their cities are growing old, their dwellings going to decay, and comparatively few new buildings are going up, while habitations for the dead are extending on every side. The stone-cutters' hammers are heard in many places, but it is in preparing materials and ornaments for tombs: carpenters are numerous, but many are employed in constructing the last house which the body will need until the resurrection.

The Resurrection! A word which suggests many reflections, and some of a very startling nature, in connection with the facts related in this and preceding letters. The resurrection, when all the dead shall come forth to the judgment; those who have died in sin and in ignorance of a Saviour, and those too, to whom has been made known the glad tidings of salvation, with a charge to publish the same throughout the whole world, and to every creature. But the generations of China that for four thousand years have been passing away, are now beyond our aid; yet three hundred and sixty millions now live in China, and again the command comes to you to preach the gospel to them. Many may be reached, yea, many of the present generation, before they sink amongst the dead, may be reached by the messengers proclaiming pardon through Christ, and a resurrection to life everlasting. Providence has opened the way, obstacles to missionary labour have to a great extent been removed, ships are in readiness to carry all the missionaries that will go, and God has placed in the hands of his stewards all the talents, whether it be silver and gold, or other things, that are needed in spreading the gospel through all China, and the world.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. W. SPEER.

October 5, 1852.—At half past three o'clock this afternoon, the splendid steamer Georgia, of some 3000 tons, said to be the next to the largest in the world, left her moorings in the North River, New York, with some seven to eight hundred pasengers aboard, nearly all bound for California, with the exception of two hundred Irish labourers in the steerage, intended for the Panama Railroad. The last act was to ship, with much difficulty, four wooden frames, or pens, in which were slung on sheets of canvass as many stout oxen. These, we afterwards learned, were designed to co-operate in the erection of bridges across the Cruces River. As we glided from the wharf, the shouts, waving of handkerchiefs, and last, earnest, lingering looks of eyes filled with tears, from the crowd of spectators lining the wharves, and hanging on the rigging of the shipping around, impressed us with the painful consciousness that this to all is a voyage of no ordinary dubiousness and peril. How many of these throbbing hearts will be cold before husband, or father, or brother, now adventuring every earthly endearment and enjoyment in quest of gold, will seek again to hush them in fond embraces. How many of these brave forms will lie unpitied in their pain, and unburied when the broken spirit has gone, among the rocky gorges, or on the sandy shores of the land of their glowing hopes and terrible disappointment. And visions of dark portent rose before my eyes. The days and nights I had spent in sickness and pain while in China; the bereavement of those dearest to me, in a foreign clime, and among unfriendly and unpitying heathen; the remembrance of a thousand indescribable trials and difficulties met in labouring for the spiritual good of those who repaid love and pity with contempt, ingratitude, insult, and threatening; the doubts and hazards of a new missionary enterprise now before me, in which with much to inspirit, there is much to fear: the second separation from all that is loved, not expecting to meet all, or perhaps any, of those dear relatives on earth again; and many other things pressed on my heart with a crushing weight. I would have felt a relief in tears, if possible. But, henceforth, more than ever before, let the sense of utter weakness, with the burden of so great a work, teach me that "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." It is God's work; it must be done by his strength; it must redound to his glory alone. Guilty, helpless, lost without the mercy of Jesus, yet I long "to spend and be spent" for the glory of God:

"Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do."

Sabbath, Oct. 10*th.*—Preached on deck in the morning from the words "And there was no more sea." I leaned with my Bible and hymn book against a hatchway for support; while my audience generally stood around, holding on to the posts and ropes, or sat on the deck. The attention was good; and as we tossed on the bosom of the treacherous deep, speeding toward distant and unseen pleasures or tribulations, guided by the mysterious needle, many illustrations were afforded to impress on each one in that promiscuous assembly, the danger of the ways of sin, the necessity of repentance according to the word of God, the glorious hopes and the dark terrors of the future, the promises of millennial happiness, and our duty to the heathen. In the afternoon, preached in the steerage from Job ix. 26, where there was equal interest taken in the truth spoken.

Monday, Oct. 11*th.*—For two days we have been sailing through the Tropics. The weather, however, is unusually pleasant. Thermometer yesterday at 7 A. M. was 72°; this morning it is 83°. The steamer has sailed as smoothly as on a river. This morning we passed Great Inigua Island, and Little Inigua about sunset. They are members of the Bahama group. The former is high and mountainous, but too distant to recognize much more than its bald outline. The latter is the abode of sea-birds, which build among the rocks and shrubs of these small uninhabited islands in vast flocks, whose nests afford a rich plunder to small schooners that export their eggs to the towns on the neighbouring West India Islands.

Tuesday, Oct. 12*th.*—Passed the southwest point of San Domingo, at perhaps twenty miles distance. It is interesting in passing through these seas to remember the events of their early history. Three centuries have fled since the keels of the Spanish adventurers ploughed these billows, and the eyes of the civilized world followed them. Once more in the providence of God, a vast commerce seeks in these channels new discoveries of gold. Shall we, at this new great era, look for another Reformation, and for another Luther? Will Asia be awakened now, as Europe was then? Will the gospel of Jesus be proclaimed now to those that "come from the land of Sinim" to our Pacific coasts?

Wednesday, Oct. 13*th.*—A storm last night and to-day. Steamer rolling distressingly. No regular meals can be prepared, but each is obliged to snatch a cup of coffee and a piece of sea-biscuit, as he can. Passengers generally sick, or at least not comfortable. The rudder of the vessel is disordered, so that she steers badly, and we are sometimes in a position not without jeopardy. Some of the passengers greatly alarmed. But how is it possible to fear when we remember that it is a Father "who hath gathered the wind in his fists." Not a breath of it blows but as his lips ordain. He could make it "a great calm" if he chose to say, unheard by our ears, "Peace, be still." As the vessel tosses I feel it is his tender hand rocking us. We may rest upon his bosom, if we will, like children.

This separation from the bustle of active duty I find a delightful opportunity for reflection and communion with God and my Saviour. The life of Henry Martyn has been much blessed in assisting self-examination. It is worthy of notice how many of the most eminently holy men have expressed longings for access to China, previous to the opening up of that great empire to the labours of the missionary. Martyn, among the first of his petitions recorded after his heart was directed to the missionary work, says in his journal for Oct. 9th, 1803, "I prayed to be sent out to China, and rejoiced in the prospect of the glorious day when Christ shall be glorified on earth." After Martyn landed in India, Dr. Marshman judged that same field the one best adapted to the engagement of his great talents and acquirements. John Urquhart purposed at first to go to China. It is narrated that "when told that the government positively prohibited the missionaries from preaching in that country, he said he should conceive it his duty to transgress this prohibition; and if his death was the consequence, let it be so; the blood of a missionary sometimes advanced the cause as much as his life and long labours."

Saturday, Oct. 16*th.*—This morning about 9 o'clock the Georgia reached the pier at Aspinwall. We came in sight of the neighbouring mountains early yesterday morning, but by night were not near enough to attempt landing the passengers. So, amid many imprecations on the part of the numerous faultfinders, the captain put the head of the vessel about, and we stood off and on till daylight, which found us twenty miles from land. The rush of the steerage passengers as we came up to the pier, prevented us getting our baggage out till the train of railroad cars was filled, and with a scream disappeared among the swamps, leaving us uncertain as to this chance of missing our connection with the Pacific steamer. The chief body of the cabin passengers were kept steaming and running all day in the hot sun, enough to have induced coups de soleil, in the hope of another train. The agents made opposing statements at different times and to various individuals, in the most provoking manner; with the only object of packing the cars and getting off as many as possible by an evening train; though there are none but the most wretched accommodations at Barbacoas, and that for only a small number, while the rest must spend the night in huts or in the open air, with ox hides on the ground for their only couches.

A few of us, among whom were Majors R—— and B——, who had a great amount of freight to take over, ascertained that a train would be sent in the morning. So here we are yet in Aspinwall.

The characteristics of the torrid zone are written on every feature of Aspinwall. Even the light Yankee buildings, which constitute the majority in this municipal novelty, have the verandahs and the airiness that belong to hot climates. As you sit in your hotel, the lazy buzzards sail in troops from one scene of decaying animal and vegetable filth to another. The gallant-looking plumes of the cocoanut and other palms adorn the water-edges. The swampy ground is crowded with the most exuberant vegetation; even the tallest trees are overcrept and overhung with masses of trailing parasites. The black and half-clothed natives stand in the sun, which sears the countenances of the whites to the hue of ashes. The ground is white with coral, the substratum of the soil; whose submarine cliffs allow the ships to come up to the very houses. And finally, to complete the tropical picture, you behold four natives carrying a rude bier down the coral walk toward the sea shore. On it is laid, with upturned face, in his ordinary scant and soiled garments, the poor wretch, in life unloved and unloving, who has gone in ignorance and guilt to appear before his God. No tenderness is shown by his comrades; one leg hangs swinging from the bier in the air as they walk. On the shore you see several others; a portion of whom are knocking some nuts from a tree, while the rest are scooping a hole in the sand. The body is carelessly thrown in, covered with a few handfuls of earth, and they all return laughing and chatting together.

In the evening had a long talk with a young Scotchman named J—— P——, from Dundee, who was piously brought up, but has gone astray amidst the mighty temptations by which he is surrounded, and is sinking into habits of intemperance. I endeavoured to obtain a promise from him to begin to-night the habit of reading a chapter in the Bible, and offering a prayer for his own salvation; but it is to be feared Satan has him in chains. Sad memento of the labours of the saintly McCheyne. "But divers were hardened." There are fearful allurements to vice in places like this, where the restraints of Christian society seem to be abandoned.

Oct. 18th, Monday.—Such a Sabbath as yesterday I never before spent. By an accident on the railroad, its only train of cars did not reach Aspinwall on their return from yesterday's trip till near noon. We then soon embarked our party. Leaving no Sabbath behind us, we found none as we advanced. Business is transacted in the town, and generally on the railroad, without reference to that God, and that religion, which has made our nation all that it is superior to the worthless beings that wonder and cower before the power of the Anglo-Saxon. The necessity of reaching the Tennessee, with the alternative of the loss of our passage, the exhaustion of funds, detention for weeks, and perhaps an attack of the dreaded Panama fever, demanded our proceeding on our way; and we became reluctant Sabbath-breakers with the throng.

We were amazed as we advanced, with beholding what wondrous gifts of nature the Creator had lavished on this soil. As the train whirled us away from the white verandahs of Aspinwall, and the sight of the tumbling blue sea, we plunged into a tost and billowy ocean of boundless green. The inexhaustible variety and the infinite exuberance of vegetation in these torrid swamps cannot be depicted. The velvety closeness of the grasses and flowers on the surface of the earth, the denseness of the under-shrubbery, the branching of the foliage of the inferior trees, the towering of the palms, cottonwood, sycamore, and others unknown, of loftier stretch, and then the net-like interlacings, swinging festoons, and floating tendrils, of innumerable vines and parasites, altogether seem to heap up, multiply, and compact the products of the soil as if there were no possible limit to its vigour. . . .

And yet this fervid soil is unsuited to the production of those grains which are most nutritive and invigorating to man, and those grasses which support the most useful domestic animals. The swarthy and toilless inhabitants subsist chiefly on fruits, plucked and devoured as appetite prompts; and they have truly little thought for raiment. Many are almost naked; boys half grown peep at you from the cane-built huts, as vacantly, and as guileless of apparel as the monkeys. So that amid all this vegetable profusion, your heart rises with gratitude to the Father, who has given to you birth in a land whose reluctant soil, pure air, busy populousness, intellectual culture, and spiritual religion, develope vigour, industry, freedom, wealth, and rational improvement; while the heartless despotism of military force or cunning priestcraft is unknown.

Within a mile of Aspinwall, the cars ran across a clattering wooden bridge, which connects the little island of Manzanilla with the Isthmus. Some half a dozen miles further brought us to the station of Gatun, and about eight more to that of Bajio; at each of which a group of pallid Irish labourers gazed upon us from their pestilential palm-leaf hovels with faces full of melancholy. I pitied these poor fellows, far from every Christian sympathy and privilege. For a Protestant boy that earnestly begged of us a Bible, when he learned who our party were, I procured a spare one fortunately from a fellow traveller. He clasped it like a friend from heaven, and promised he would make it his constant companion.

This railroad is a grand work. It has been thus far a triumph over immense obstacles. It is laid on indestructible foundations of lignum vitæ, cut from the neighbouring mountains. It is but half finished, but the remainder, it is expected, will be completed in the course of a year, at the cost of about $80,000 a mile.

How stupendous a change may be expected in the commerce of the globe, when a system of easy transit shall have been effected between the great oceans of the East and West, across the mysterious bar which attaches together our northern and southern continents. It is a wonderful providence that has till this era led our commerce and that of Europe to encircle the whole dark continent of South America, in order to reach our western coasts. It is no less wonderful how many possible points of communication have existed unsuspected or unimproved. Humboldt, in his essay on New Spain, written fifty years ago, enumerates nine. Some of these have since proved impracticable, while other new ones have been discovered. Railroads have been projected from San Francisco to St. Louis and New Orleans, and also across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, which may ere long be begun. A connection may be formed between the head waters of the Colorado and those of the numerous streams that from that region shed fertility over the valleys of Texas and the States north of it. A most interesting report, prepared by a Commission sent from the United States, promises communication between the great emporiums of the East and West, in two-thirds the present time required, by way of Vera Cruz, Puebla, and the Muscala river, which enters the Pacific ocean two thousand miles northward of Panama. Crossing by Lake Nicaragua, there are not less than five possible outlets for its waters by canals to the Pacific ocean. A canal was proposed by Garella, a distinguished Spanish engineer, across the Isthmus of Panama; and still another channel for communication to ships of all dimensions has been surveyed by the English in a remote part of the Isthmus, where a passage may be easily cut without the necessity of locks, and but fifty miles in length. Still other avenues from ocean to ocean will be discovered for that gigantic intercourse which China and Eastern Asia is now beginning to seek with Christian and long enlightened lands. How bright the day which appears to be dawning upon their history, and also upon ours!

At two o'clock we reached the present terminus of the railroad at Barbacoas, a group of yellow cane huts on a high and precipitous bank of the Chagres, with only a rugged footpath down to the river. Dinner was hurriedly eaten, upon a light steamboat brought out from the United States, to run upon this fitful stream, but soon consigned to its present occupation. The only passenger boat remaining was a yawl calculated to be rowed or pushed by poles by four natives; and this was engaged to carry a small party of us thence to Cruces, a distance of fourteen miles, for the sum of sixty dollars. We hurried off amid the crowd that were urging their way to reach Panama with their baggage, at the earliest hour.

Once seated in our boat, we had leisure to observe the novel scene. The swift and turbid river had subsided to a navigable stage; though the heavy clouds and slanting showers, like plumes upon the distant velvety mountains, admonished us that the rainy season was yet scarcely over. Our black and nearly naked boatmen were armed for the contest with long poles shodden with iron. There were four of them, besides a captain at the helm; strong and merry fellows, enlivening their toil, and measuring their simultaneous tread, as they bowed themselves to their quivering poles, with snatches of song, or with a chorus of wild cries which ended in a shrill scream, that died away along the water as they retraced their steps for a new effort. They are a class as unimproveable as the desert Bedouin, amid the surge of civilization that has of late broken over their rocks. That, alas! has only furnished them with increased opportunity for debauchery and self-indulgence, and more copious supplies for the gambling board. On the opposite shore from our place of debarkation, was a tract of land cultivated by their spiritual teacher, the padre, or "father," superintending the churches of this district of New Grenada; and who is reputed to live luxuriously amidst a large natural progeny of his own, as is the case with too many of his brethren. One of the benefits of the present intercourse with these Roman Catholic countries, will be to demonstrate to the people of the United States the fruits of that dreadful semi-heathen system. As we started upon our brief voyage, all around us towered gigantic mountains, not grander in their proper majesty than from their historical associations. In a line with the first sweep of the river, the Cerro Gigante lifts its lonely peak, from which alone both oceans can be seen at once; perhaps the very point whence, near three centuries ago, Vasco Nunez de Balboa discovered the great Pacific Ocean. Our way was toilsomely slow, and often the muddy bottom held, and even wrested away the poles of our crew. Our faces were frequently brushed by the overhanging foliage, and our bark threatened by the numerous snags, rocks, and bars. A beautiful picture in the shifting panorama was the herds of half-wild cattle, yet standing at the sunset, cooling themselves along the shores. They differ from ours in their lighter colours, deer-like slimness of limbs, and their sharp, straight horns. They herd and multiply almost untended, and are hunted into the corral and shot in their season, chiefly for their hides and tallow.

Sabbath as it was, a portion of us endeavoured by suitable conversation to save the sacred hours of the day from entire desecration. We had taken into our company several young Jews, of which people a very large number have gone to California. With them we discussed in a friendly manner many interesting passages in the Old Testament, and their bearing upon the doctrines and hopes of the New. We read with them some of the sweet psalms of David their king; and afterward they listened respectfully while we sang some hymns, melodious and tearful with love to a Messiah whom these poor people do not yet know. It was well calculated to melt one's heart with gratitude, thus to lift up the song of Christian hope in a scene so wild, so foreign, so lovely, amid a nation once brave and refined, that have been allowed to sink into heathenish degradation, and in a company from the chosen tribes of Israel, who were yet suffered in divine justice to be blinded by the vail upon their hearts. It is distinguishing mercy that we most observe, feel, and remember. It was ten o'clock at night, and the air had become chilly, moist, and still, before we reached the embarcadero of Gorgona. Our Jewish friends volunteered to remain in the boat, and set a watch, while the rest of our party mounted a high sandy bank, and sought lodgings in the town.

Monday.—Never in all my wanderings, did I spend a more miserable night than in this Granadian town of Gorgona. The only refuge from the filthy huts of the natives, which are but straggling coops of cane, thatched over, without as much comfort as has many a sty at home, was in a miserable frame shed, kept by some abandoned foreigners. Without bedclothing or a comfortable couch, sleep was effectually banished by the demoniac sounds which issued from a large room close at hand, in which the wild and drunken orgies of a South American fandango, or dance, were maintained till near the dawn. Never in a heathen temple could the ears be so tortured, and the moral sense be so shocked, as by those noises of frantic revelry, and outbursts of every kind of sensual and depraved passion. The weary morning found us feverish and unfitted for the trying journey before us. With its foggy gray we were up. The first news was that the town of Cruces, where we expected to find mules and forwarding facilities across the Isthmus, had been burnt in the night by incendiaries and plunderers, and a considerable amount of the baggage of our fellow passengers ahead consumed or stolen. Instead of proceeding, according to our purpose, we determined to attempt the more difficult and dangerous route, at least at this season, from this direct to Panama. After much chaffering and annoyance, our party of five, three of them ladies, were mounted on mules procured from an Italian, for eighty dollars the trip, while our baggage was to be forwarded so as to reach us the next evening in Panama, at a cost of eighty-five dollars. By a providential circumstance, we were supplied with the largest and most comfortable animals in the town; other persons were taxed still more exorbitantly; we heard of sixty dollars being paid for a single choice mule.

And now behold us mounted on these hardy animals, displaying gay Spanish saddles that glow with abundant trappings of scarlet silk, but are most insecurely girt, and as we sally through the town, see us straining and jerking in the almost vain effort to guide aright their reluctant and winding way among the hovels of their friends, by means of flimsy halters of rope. A few furlongs of plainer and drier road brings us at once into the broken and rugged path which is to conduct us across the Isthmus. "Crossing the Isthmus!" How one's heart beats at the anticipations connected with its dangers. The incredibly dense and tangled vegetation seems rife with poisons and pestilences. Ere long, as your sure-footed mule climbs along the brink of a deep and dark precipice, and under the shadow of a ledge of rocks, your eye catches a gash upon an overhanging tree. What is it? A cross cut in the bark, signifying that some one has been murdered there, and inviting the Catholic recitation of an "Ave Maria" for the repose of his soul. Soon we overtake a solitary traveller on an ambling white mule; in one hand he carries a six barrelled revolver, and wears a dirk. We rally him on his timidity, and hasten on. We behold the road strewn with the bones of beasts that have fallen and perished under their burdens. We find two men standing bewildered, near the ford of a small stream, who tell us that some of their comrades are lost among the mountains, and they are afraid they will not be heard of again. We enter another rivulet, and sink with each step of our animal into the mud, deeper, till he plunges down over his belly. His head is nearly buried in his struggles, and if we do not dismount and help him, and scrape the plug of mire out of his nostrils, he will soon be a carcass. Now he brings you to a high bank, down which he slides almost perpendicularly, and again winds through a ravine which you see has been worn down by the footsteps of millions of beasts of burden that have walked these tracks since the days of Pizarro, nay, where the inhabitants have crossed since long before Columbus dreamed of this wild continent. Here a mule leaps suddenly a gulf, through which a small run is roaring, or there runs into the woods; now rubs against a tree or rock; again plunges down a gully overlaid by rotting logs, and you hear a scream. One of the female part of the company, worn out with excitement, fatigue, and alarm, has been carried roughly from her saddle, and lies pale and near fainting on the ground. It is not the first or second time this has happened. She is revived by some cordial, is assisted to remount, and goes on without murmuring, though she reaches her journey's end with limbs and body bruised black, literally all over, by the numerous contusions. You must hasten on, or you may lose the steamer. A valued knife is dropped in the attempt to cut a stick; you cannot stop to look for it in the mud. An umbrella slips and follows it; but you leave it to share its fate. A bundle with some superfluous article of clothing, that you had brought to protect you in the passage across, becomes troublesome, and you find it necessary to give it a fling over some precipice, and see it lodge where it will be picked to pieces by some imp of a monkey. "All that a man hath will he give for his life." Such is a passage across the Isthmus. There are some real dangers attending it; especially when the rains have filled the mountain torrents, which are all unbridged. But many of the evils prove imaginary; and fewer persons lose their lives than we would expect. The softness of the bed into which the mules fall, or cast their riders, in the sloughs, prevent many fractures of bones. The road is becoming more safe in some respects, as travellers increase, though the inert government does not expend one dollar upon a thoroughfare by which millions pass monthly. It will be, we trust, but a few months more till the fatigue and perils endured by the pioneers of this great transit will be for ever unknown.

The scenery on this route would undoubtedly be fine, but for the leafy wall that generally shuts in the vision. The mountains are not near so high, nor is the road so very steep and difficult as I had expected. One of the loftiest peaks is that of the Cerro de Cabra, which was found not long since by the Spanish engineers to be 1600 feet, and the Cerro Grande, another near Gorgona, to be but 1014 feet in height. You pass, by way of Gorgona, no considerable streams. Though dignified by the Spaniards with such names as the Rio Mandengo, the Rio Pedro Miguel, and the Rio Grande; it is only when swollen by the rains that they become important. Then persons are swept down their impetuous track, tangled among the rocks and roots, and drowned, in the attempt to cross them, as was recently an interesting American lady, while on her way with her husband to California. The soil, as the traveller ascends the Atlantic slope, changes from a dark heavy loam to stiff, light-coloured clay. His mule occasionally hobbles over heaps of basaltic rock, fractured in square blocks with crystal regularity; so that he almost fancies he is riding among piles of brick prepared for a new house. There are but a few clearings in the forest on this immense thoroughfare. Your feelings of indignation against the worthless inhabitants are almost heightened, when these spots burst upon your eye with extreme beauty. A few acres of the most luxuriant maize, yielding on an average a hundred and fifty bushels for every one sown, or a patch of barley for the mules, or a little grove of plantains, are left to the overgrowth of weeds, and the aggressions of the forest; while the cultivator, swinging in a hammock among dogs, and swine, and vermin, hopes to gain a trifle in money by exposing aguardiente, pulque, and other intoxicating liquors to the thoughtless wayfarer. If any act of industry is seen in these huts, it is in the pounding of corn or beans into flour for tortillas, or breaking roasted coffee in a tall, clumsy wooden mortar, by means of a long and heavy pestle of the same material. How rich a country this might be made with but a little enterprise! Its many medicinal barks, roots, gums, (with their extracts,) and minerals, would pour upon it boundless wealth. Its woods produce the balsam copavia, dragon's blood, gum-arabic, peruvian bark, and other sanatives. The bright, fleshy leaf of the caoutchouc, seamed with the white trickling of the precious gum, protrudes among its thickets. Cinnabar reddens its mountain sides. Several mines of gold have been worked to advantage, and an intelligent gentleman says that "it showed itself in every river and stream he prospected." The variety, deliciousness, and abundance of its fruits alone, would make it almost an Eden. This is claimed by some authors as the original country of the "Irish" potato. But now you are startled by the virulent coral-snake, which boldly crosses your lonely mule path. The unscared paroquets scream in troops as you disturb their wild haunts. The half-heathen inhabitants revel upon the meat of the guana, a species of gigantic lizard, and the pecari. At each barbarous hovel they scowl blackly at you, and their lips mutter curses upon you as a stranger and a heretic, and even the women will not return your kindly salute. At some desolate spot of the way you surprise a knot of guerilla-looking men, with the universal downcast look of the nation, cleaning up long fowling-pieces. No doubt many a poor, defenceless fellow is surprised, and never missed in the multitude and confusion. Bodies and bones are often discovered in concealed places near the road.

The utmost urging of our beasts brought us by five o'clock, when the shadows began to lengthen, and our frames to be exhausted, only to a little ranch or clearing, some twelve miles from our starting point. Suddenly, as we descended a steep and rocky mountain, the apex of its successor broke upon our view, bared of its timber, save a small gourd tree, which was surrounded by a group of huts. A company of muleteers were wrangling and squabbling, and flourishing their long machetes, or knives, over a rock which served as a gambling-table. Their weary brutes were turned loose to browse upon the scanty sward and bushes. About the sides of the knoll were planted corn and a few vegetables. A close approach revealed the forms of some Americans seated in the door of the principal hut. Right glad were we to dismount and assist our female companions, pale, weary, and bruised, their lips covered with a hardened white froth, their persons wet and covered with sheets of mud from bonnet to shoe, to disengage themselves from their saddles, and lie down in the only hammock in the place. Our place of sojourn was a hut perhaps four feet in width by twenty deep, built of canes set perpendicularly like a cage or coop, with a conical and heavy thatch of palm-leaves. In one corner within was a bar, containing bottles of aguardiente and of lime juice, with tobacco, and a basket of little, hard black wheaten loaves, from which with some unsavoury tea and a box of sardines, we made our first meal since morning. In the opposite corner of the apartment, diagonally, was the couch of the senora, or lady of the house, who could not be distinguished from a negress. On the left, by a side entrance, was a large water jar of brown pottery, which with a hammock and a couple of rough trestles, constituted the chief furniture of this portion of the establishment; for there was a little extension of it behind, in which the humbler members of the family were kindling a fire on the earth for the purposes of cooking, which filled the place with a blinding smoke, and threatened the whole most combustible concern with a conflagration. The reason of kindling the fire was soon ascertained in the squeals of an unfortunate porker that had too lately been rubbing his flea-bitten hide among the nether members of the household, but was now jerked up by the heels in the doorway, and haggled into quivering lumps with their machetes, that were thrown into the greasy pot to boil for our benefit. Two or three wolfish dogs looked on the work of blood with a seemingly apprehensive air. Nauseated, as well as weary, we pleaded fatigue, and asked for a place of repose. The choice was offered between the cold, damp ground, and a little loft among the thatch. We chose the latter. The ascent was by a single pole, notched in the sides, by which we all climbed up, and stretched ourselves to sleep upon a loose floor of split canes, like fish frying on a gridiron. It was a novel situation. Mid the sounds of singing, fighting, and gambling without, till near morning; the smoke, talking, and confusion beneath; the uneasiness of our couch, the dread of scorpions, tarantulas, and vermin among the thatch and cane; the excitement of the day past, and the apprehension in behalf of our poor women for that to come, slumber could scarce be wooed. And yet we all felt that it was better to endure the grievous sufferings of a passage across the Isthmus, than to subject ladies to the long protracted sickness, the alternations of season, the tediousness, and the dangers from ice and storm, connected with a voyage round the Cape. After, by a flickering light, we had read aloud a psalm, we silently and trustfully committed ourselves to the tender care of our Father above. How often had our fluttering hearts felt that he had indeed "covered us with his feathers," during all our voyage and journey. And we now felt assured that his care would be as tender, incessant, and kind, for days to come.

19*th*—At Panama! After riding hard from daybreak till near noon, and accomplishing a distance of ten miles, the green rim of the "Great South Sea," as it was styled by the early explorers, was lifted before our delighted gaze. The weary mules plucked up heart, and broke into a wriggling trot. Within a mile of the gates we entered a broad paved road that was tracked with the wheels of a cart, one of the two, I believe, in the city, and of Yankee introduction. Gardens, white-washed huts of adobe or sun-dried brick, and open fields, welcomed us again to the abodes of civilization. The churches and monastic edifices, of big and sombre architecture, many of them tumbling into ruins; the monuments, crosses, dark and heavy doorways and barred windows; the swarthy complexions and averted countenances; the general light raiment, and the gaudy, tawdry dresses of the women, proclaimed it not a city over which the Republican eagle spreads his free bold wing. A rustic was dragging along an ox by a rope through a slit in its nose, whose fellow in turn was hitched behind it by a cord knotted through a loop cut with a knife in the loose skin of its buttock. Trotting through the gateway in the wall of the city proper, and turning an angle round a little chapel of the Virgin, where every voyageur crosses himself to the tinselled image, and a box with a padlock solicits his oblation, we were introduced to the main street of Panama. What a salute of gay Yankee sign-boards, and incongruous array of Yankee hotels and shops! It was as if an irruption from the North had overrun the ancient abodes of Spanish grandeur. "Iced drinks" invited the medley crowd in edifices that frowned with the apparent dignity and gloom of centuries. A refreshing bath, a good long rest, and a hearty meal, and in the evening some of us were ready to explore the city.

A WORD TO OUR FRIENDS.

We are gratified in being able to say, that some of our friends have very satisfactorily responded to our recent Circular, by sending us the names of additional subscribers to the Record, and for which we return them our thanks. One of them in writing to us says, that upon trial he found it very easy to obtain subscriptions. Will not many others make the trial, and report to us the result? There can be no doubt that the organ of our ecclesiastical Boards ought to have a much wider circulation throughout the Church, and we confidently believe that if the brethren would make the effort, there are thousands more who would willingly subscribe for it.

While writing on the subject, we would take this opportunity of requesting our brethren to furnish occasional articles for the Record. Many facts and incidents come under their observation, which would, if published, greatly interest, instruct, and edify our readers.

From The Presbyterian.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION AND COLPORTAGE.

The increasing popularity of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and the new fields which are opening for its operations, indicate the necessity for an extension of its system of colportage. While it is multiplying its excellent publications, its efficiency and usefulness must depend on its facilities for distributing them among the churches. These are spread over a wide territory, and many of them are planted on the outskirts, and in positions far removed from the central marts of business; so that even where the disposition to obtain these books exists, the difficulties of obtaining them are almost insuperable. No method is so well calculated to meet the exigency as the system of colportage, by which the books are carried to the very doors of the people. Thus far it has worked admirably, and many congregations have been deeply indebted to its influence. It must at once be apparent to those who reflect on the subject, that the Board could not, even if its capital were greatly increased, carry forward this work without special aid from the Church. With its present means, it can manufacture the books, while it must entrust their extended distribution to the benevolence of those who appreciate the importance of the work. The colportage fund is necessarily distinguished from the working capital of the Board; and to the prompt enlargement of this, we earnestly direct attention. Every church, according to its means, should contribute to this. The present Secretary of the Board, active and diligent as he is, cannot possibly make a personal application to a tithe of the churches. Where he does make his appeals, we bespeak for him a generous response; and from the churches he would wish to visit, if he could, we hope to hear by their willing offerings. Room might readily be found for a hundred additional colporteurs, and the men could be obtained, if the means of their support were provided. Let there be a united effort, therefore, for the increase of the colportage fund. Its success will happily tell upon the increased prosperity of our Church.

EAGERNESS TO READ GOOD BOOKS.

A minister in Indiana, to whose congregation the Board had made a donation, writes:—"The whole congregation are much pleased with the books. Last evening, an Irishman, who had been a Roman Catholic, told me he sat up some nights till 12 o'clock, to read "Lives of the British Reformers."

This is a very interesting volume, illustrated with 12 steel portraits, and sells for $1.00

PREJUDICES ABATED.

A colporteur in the State of New York, who is a member of the Associate Reformed Church, writes:

"The books of the Board were all of them highly prized, and the better their truths became known, the more eagerly were they sought, and highly valued; and that not by the members of the Old-school Presbyterian Church alone, but also by the Associate Reformed, and the Reformed Presbyterian Churches. The latter hitherto have had doubts and scruples with reference to any publication, but when once they perceived the names of Boston, Baxter, Flavel, and other well-known authors of their fatherland, their prejudices were overcome, and other books, as well as the whole system of the Board's operations, were highly spoken of, and liberally patronized. The Church and Sabbath-School libraries are mostly all made up of the books of the —— Society, and on this very account I fear it is, that the children of the present members of the Presbyterian churches are not as warmly attached to the pure scriptural doctrines of Calvinism as their fathers. It is no uncommon thing to find the children of Presbyterian fathers in the bosom of the Methodist, or some other Church as much at variance with the principles of our pure creed; and hence, in some regions, our churches are growing weaker every year, and Arminianism, with its exciting attractions, gradually gaining possession of the tender vines, and ultimately of the whole vineyard."

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION, DURING THE MONTH OF JANUARY, 1853.

The Rev. S. H. Hazard departed this, life at Solon, Iowa, on the 8th day of January, in the 49th year of his age.

CHANGE OF RELATION.

Rev. Moses Ordway of Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, and Rev. L. C. Spoffard of Depere, Wisconsin, have left the Presbyterian and Congregational Convention of Wisconsin, and united with the Winnebago Presbytery. Mr. Ordway was the first Presbyterian minister that settled in Wisconsin, and assisted in organizing the first church organized in the State.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Rev. T. H. Newton, late Seamen's Chaplain at St. Thomas, West Indies, has resigned his position in connection with the Seamen's Friend Society.

ACCESSIONS.

The Associate Reformed Church in Kensington, Philadelphia, was received under the care of the Presbytery of Philadelphia at their meeting last week. The Presbytery, at the same time, received Mr. McCaskie, a licentiate from a foreign body, and organized a church in the southwestern part of Philadelphia, to which he is expected to minister.

Varieties.

Romish Editors.—Most of the Romish newspapers in this country, are conducted by renegade Protestants, who have found introduction to Romanism through the Episcopal church. The Catholic Herald, The Shepherd of the Valley, The Pittsburgh Catholic, and The Freeman's Journal, are edited by men who have been Episcopalians. And what is more remarkable, these same men were recruits, which the Episcopal Church received from other denominations. These and not a few other examples of perverts show, that the way from other denominations to Popery, lies through the Episcopal church. And when that church draws from other sects men who are charmed with her ways, she usually gains a loss, by embracing those who have come to her, because she can more gracefully introduce them to the church which is the terminating point of their hopes.

Church for Deaf Mutes.—The Rev. Mr. Gallaudet, son of the late Mr. Gallaudet, of Hartford, Connecticut, has commenced a Sunday service in University Chapel, New York, for deaf mutes. His congregation now numbers about sixty; and it is said that there are not less than one hundred educated mutes in the city. The plan is, to build a house, and organize a church of this interesting class of people. Trinity church has appropriated a handsome sum for the first year's experiment.

Half-Century Missionaries.—During the year 1852, there died in South Africa, says The Independent, two venerable missionaries, Rev. William Anderson, of Pacultsdorp, and Rev Mr. Read, of Kat River, both of whom left England in the year 1800, and after all the varied experiences incident to a missionary life, deceased within a few months of each other. The period of their united labours exceeded a century!

Temperance Prospects.—The result of the popular election in Vermont, called to decide upon the acceptance or rejection of the Prohibitory Law, is largely in favour of the law. Returns are not yet complete; but the popular majority in favour of the law will not fall much short of 5000 majority. The law is in some respects, more stringent than the Maine Law; and will be sustained.

In Michigan, a Maine Law has been enacted by both houses of the Legislature. It is to be submitted to the people, at a special election in July.

In the Rhode Island Legislature, an amended form of the law, so framed as to obviate the objections of Judge Curtiss, has passed the lower House. Its fate in the Senate is not decided, but the expectation is very general that it will pass.

In the Massachusetts Legislature nothing has been done to repeal the law: or in the Maine Legislature; while in New Jersey and Illinois, vigorous and promising efforts are making to procure a law this winter, with good prospects of success. The beginning of the end we see already.

Long Pastorates.—In noticing the retirement of Rev. Wm. Jay, from a pastorate of sixty-three years in Bath, Eng., the Boston Watchman mentions several English Baptist pastors who have enjoyed remarkably long pastoral relations. Rev. Lawrence Butterworth was just sixty-three years pastor of the church at Evesham; the late Rev. Dr. Rippon, editor of the Hymn Book which bears his name, was sixty-five years pastor of one church, and there is at least one Baptist pastor living who has occupied the same pulpit for sixty years. Dr. Collyer has been a devoted pastor at Peckham, for more than half a century.—N. Y. Evangelist.

Prize Essay.—A benevolent gentleman has offered a premium of $200 for the best Essay on the means to be used by the churches, for making the pastoral office a more inviting and productive field of Christian labour. The donor consents that the Essay may be historical and statistical, as well as argumentative or descriptive, and desires it to cover the whole ground of the relation of the pastor to his people. It is designed for general circulation among the churches, and should be brief, perspicuous and attractive. Prof. Park, Henry White, Esq., of New-Haven, and Rev. R. S. Storrs, jr., of Brooklyn, are the examining committee. The Essays should be sent as early as September 1.

Catholic Opposition to Schools.—A general movement seems to be making by the Catholics to obtain control of the public schools for the instruction of Catholic children. A large deputation has been operating upon the Michigan Legislature, to be heard on the question of appropriating a due proportion of the public moneys to Catholic schools. The Catholic Bishop of Pittsburgh has written a letter to the Governor of Pennsylvania, urging the necessity of electing Common School teachers by the people. Catholic politics work so well, the Bishop would like to have education, and perhaps religion, subjected to the polls.

Reformation in Ireland.—The Reformation in Ireland is extending and progressing with power in spite of all the resistance which comes from the pugilistic power of the Romish priests, and the hatred and violence of the Romish people manifested towards the converts. In some places whole communities have been protestantized, and in many others large congregations have been gathered from Romanists entirely. In a single school in Cork, there are four hundred converts. The mission has spread from the West to the South, and has now embraced a part of the East coast of Ireland.

The Hebrews and Louis Napoleon.—It is stated that Louis Napoleon has publicly recognised the right of the Hebrews to the full and unrestricted enjoyment of their religious opinions and ceremonies in France.

Bounty to Emigrate to Liberia.—A bill is before the New York Senate, appropriating $50 to defray the expenses of each coloured inhabitant of that State above ten years of age, or $25 if below that age, who may voluntarily emigrate to Liberia. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Comptroller, and Attorney-General, are constituted a Board to draw the money, and to superintend the emigration, employing for the latter purpose, if they see fit, the New York Colonization Society.

"ABIDE WITH US."

Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. Luke xiv. 29.

Abide with me: fast falls the eventide;
The darkness thickens. Lord, with me abide:
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me!

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away:
Change and decay in all around I see—
O Thou who changest not, abide with me.

Not a brief glance I crave, a passing word;
But as thou dwell'st with thy disciples, Lord—
Familiar, condescending, patient, free:
Come not to sojourn, but abide with me.

Come not in terrors, as the King of kings,
But kind and good, with healing in thy wings—
Tears for all woes, a heart for every plea;
Come, Friend of sinners, thus abide with me.

Thou on my head in early youth didst smile,
And though rebellious and perverse meanwhile,
Thou hast not left me, oft as I left thee:
On to the close, O Lord, abide with me.

I need thy presence every passing hour;
What but thy grace can foil the tempter's power?
Who like thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, O abide with me.

I fear no foe, with thee at hand to bless;
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness.
Where is Death's sting? Where, Grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if thou abide with me.

Hold thou thy cross before my closing eyes,
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies;
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee:
In life, in death, O Lord, abide with me.

THE PREACHING OF THE PRESS.

Dr. Gregory relates the case of an indigent and afflicted man, whose infirmities were such that he was unable even to occupy a chair, without being supported by bands and braces attached to the ceiling of his poor cottage. In this helpless condition had he been for several years, unable to move a limb, while suffering the whole time extreme bodily anguish. "As soon," says Dr. G., as I had recovered a little from my surprise, at beholding an object which appeared a living image of death, I asked—'Are you left alone, my friend, in this deplorable situation?' 'No, sir,' replied he, in a tone of mild and touching resignation, while nothing but his lips and eyes moved as he spoke; 'I am not alone, for my God is with me!' On advancing, I discovered the secret of this unspeakable comfort: A Bible lay on his knees, open at a favourite portion of the Psalms! In this way was he enabled daily to read for himself the words of eternal life, partaking of the heavenly manna, which imparted life and peace to his soul. In the midst of pain and poverty, he had learned from that blessed book, in whom to believe; and as he expressed his confidence that his Father would never forsake him, his eye sparkled with faith, which beamed in celestial radiance upon his pallid cheek.

Such were the resignation and hope wrought in the heart of a poor dying sinner, by the blessing of God, upon the constant perusal of the Holy Scriptures. He died with a hope full of immortality, and is, without doubt, now realizing all that he had read of that "better country"—"the rest that remaineth for the people of God." And, adds Dr. G., "gladly would I sink into the obscurity of the same cottage, gladly would I languish in the same chair, could I but enjoy the same uninterrupted communion with God, be always filled with the same 'strong consolation,' and constantly behold, with equally vivid perception, the same celestial crown sparkling before me."

In this we have a striking illustration of the power of the precious gospel of Jesus Christ, proclaimed through the instrumentality of the Press. And how many there are, both in affliction and in health, in poverty and in affluence, whose faith and hope would be but feebly developed, were they not, with other Christian graces, nourished by the perusal of a printed Bible, and other religious books. The amount of good accomplished by an evangelical book, or tract, printed and distributed, as it often is, by the thousand or ten thousand, is beyond all human computation. When the living preacher delivers a gospel sermon to three or four hundred fellow men, he is using the special means ordained of God for their conversion; but when he has done this, let him commit the thoughts and arguments that God has blessed, to the hands of the printer, and by a few revolutions of the press, he becomes at once the preacher of a thousand sermons, or, if you please, the father of a thousand preachers! On the day of Pentecost three thousand souls were added to the Church by Peter's preached sermon—but who shall tell us the thousands that have been savingly benefited by reading the printed copy of that eloquent and powerful discourse?

J. P. C.

From the Presbyterian Advocate.

WHY THE DIFFERENCE?

But few ministers are to be found, who have not noticed a marked difference, not only in the increased intelligence, but the increased usefulness of those members of churches who read, and those who do not read the religious periodicals of the day, published by their own Church. At this moment, in casting my eye over the most prominent men for usefulness in my own Presbytery, I find those who are really useful, are such as are close readers of our religious journals; and even the children seem to keep pace with their parents in promise and usefulness.

Now, whether it is because this class possess so much religious enterprise, that they will find means to obtain these religious journals, or whether these journals have made them what they are, is a problem the philosophical may answer. The importance of this reading is equally evident, be the reason one or the other. In one case, you prove that all useful and enterprising church members wisely perceive the importance of such reading; and in the other, such reading has elevated them above the surrounding religious community. But there is no less a marked difference in those of our members who read our own religious journals, and those who, either by circumstances or preference, read the religious journals only of other religious sects.

A brother in the ministry tells me that one-fourth of the members of his church, and three members of his session are in these circumstances, viz: using the religious journals of other sects; and that the difference in their efficiency, usefulness, and readiness to co-operate with the church is so visible, when compared with those who read weekly our own religious periodicals, as to be noticed not only by an anxious and keen-eyed pastor, but even by men of the world.

Now, in this case, as the other, whether it is because the judicious and useful members see the necessity of reading their own Church papers, in order to know what their Church is about, and to enable them to co-operate, and this is the cause of their close attention to Presbyterian periodicals; or whether these periodicals have moulded them, through the divine blessing, to greater usefulness. On either hand, the importance is equally conceded.

Does the Church understand the value of having her own journals in the hands of all her members? Then our sessions will see that it is, in some way, effected without delay. Do parents understand that many of the secular sheets of the day are ruining both the minds and morals of their families? and that the religious journals they invite into the society of their families have, to a large extent, the formation of their religious character, making them sound, judicious Christians, or unmooring them from a safe harbour, and giving them to a sea of storms and dangers, to be driven upon the reefs, they know not when or where; but only the fatal results?

But one question more. Why have some children left the good old doctrines of the Reformation, professed by their parents, and gone into all the wildness of fanaticism, the errors of Universalism, spiritual rappings, progressive theology, and the ultraisms of the day, unless there has been some defect in their training? "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

In their parents' example or training you will generally find either gross neglect, or the seed of these errors.

He that loves may be sure that he was loved first; and he that chooses God for his delight and portion, may conclude confidently, that God hath chosen him to be one of those that shall enjoy him, and be happy with him for ever; for that our love, and electing of him, is but the return and repercussion of the beams of his love shining among us.—Leighton.

INTERESTING FROM NEW MEXICO.

The Board of Missions has kept a steady eye upon this Territory for the past two years, and our readers will remember the highly valued letter of Dr. Massie upon this Territory, written to us, and which was published in the Record. We are now able to publish two letters, from Christian gentlemen who have had the best opportunities of observation and of information. They are the right kind of letters; and we shall be disappointed if they do not shed a degree of light upon the moral and religious condition of New Mexico, which will not only be new, but exceedingly interesting to our readers. The information is valuable to the Board of Missions, and enables us to act intelligently in forming any plans for sending missionaries into that distant field. The first, from our friend Mr. John McCoy, of Independence, Missouri, is introductory to the second.

Independence, Missouri, Feb. 8th, 1853.

Rev. C. C. Jones.

My Dear Sir—The accompanying letter, received a short time since from New Mexico, in reply to some inquiries of mine, may prove of general interest, and is at your service. The writer of it, whose name, for certain reasons, is kept back, has been for some time a resident of that country, and is very well posted up in all its affairs. All his opinions I cannot fairly endorse, especially the one respecting the adoption of the Roman religion previous or preparatory to that of the Protestant. However gloomy the prospect now appears of instilling into the minds of the deluded and ignorant Mexicans the truths of the gospel, yet faithful, energetic effort by the man of God, and the accompanying influences of the Spirit will do the work. I believe with him that the best hold the Protestant teacher can get upon that population will be through the Puebla Indians; they are more ready for the truth, it being one of their favourite ideas that a great teacher is to come from the East, who shall re-establish the kingdom long since broken up, and renew the worship of their forefathers, as well as relight the fires upon their altars. These Indians are proverbially honest and industrious; they attend to all kinds of agricultural pursuits, have large fields of grain, of wheat, barley, and corn—take much care of their fruit, of which they have peaches and pears, and out of their delicious grapes make a wine far preferable to that manufactured at El Paso; in connection with all this, being honestly disposed, they look upon the Americans with less suspicion than the New Mexicans do. Unto such a people, if the gospel in all its purity were preached and taught, I believe that soon their manners would become changed, and through them the whole of the Mexican race would be influenced to do good. The Roman Catholics, ever alive to their religious belief, and the desire to propagate the doctrines they hold, do not intend to give up this field without a struggle. Shortly after the war, they seemed to be resting easy, and their clergy were fast sinking themselves, in the estimation of the people, by their besotted and filthy practices: but within the last two years, Bishop John L'Amoy has exercised a superintendence over the whole field, and by removal of the most obnoxious of the priests, and by establishing nunneries, he is regaining what has been lost, and will ere long hold them under the same galling chains of superstition and folly as heretofore. During the last year he took out with him four or five ladies, (nuns,) one of whom died of cholera on the way out, and intends sending the Vicar-General into the States for twenty or twenty-five more this spring. These are to go out and teach in the schools and nunneries over the land. It is well for the Protestant part of our people to be apprized of these things, for some day that may be one of the most desirable parts of our republic, especially if the Pacific road passes through Albuquerque, as it is probable that it may; should this be so, the resources of New Mexico will be known and regarded, and its climate, the most salubrious in the world, will be highly prized by the invalids of our Atlantic coast. But I am wearying you; again I may write you more. Here is the letter. Respectfully yours,

John McCoy.

Albuquerque, New Mexico, November 11, 1852.

Friend John—In answer to your inquiries about the results of the missionary labour expended in this country, I regret to say it has produced nothing. The ministers who are now here are the Rev. Mr. Smith and lady at Santa Fe, the Rev. Mr. Shaw and lady at this place, who will leave in a short time for Fort Defiance, in the Navajoe country, where he has received the appointment of chaplain, and will be succeeded here by Rev. Mr. Reed and lady; Rev. Mr. Gorman and lady at Laguna a Puebla, about fifty miles west of this place, and lastly, Rev. Mr. Kephart, who edits the Santa Fe Gazette. I really do not know whether this last named gentleman should be looked upon as a missionary or not. The Rev. Mr. Smith has had a small school in Santa Fe, but the number has always been less than he had anticipated from the description Mr. Reed had given him of the prospects. Mr. Shaw and lady came to Albuquerque last winter, and could not get a school of even a very small number; they were then offered a small number to start with, if they would remove to the Bosque de los Pimos, the residence of Dr. Henry Connelly, twenty miles below this place, which they did, and remained some six months: they had four scholars, and becoming discouraged, returned, and endeavoured to get a school here; but even when a public offer was made to teach any and all who would come without charge, they could obtain but one. So Mr. Shaw has given up the field, and goes to Fort Defiance. Mr. Gorman has, I learn, been very favourably received by the Laguna Indians, and the results of his labours are yet to be developed; he is certainly the most sanguine and zealous of any I have seen, and I trust he may not be disappointed.

You ask what hold the bishop and priests have upon the people? I can only say that they have all hold, and will keep it. The people of New Mexico are not yet in a condition to be operated upon by Protestant missionaries. They will have to be converted to the Catholic religion as it is in the States; then comes the time, if ever, for Protestantism. The religion which they have now is a kind of mongrel Catholicism, neither one thing nor another, a mixture of Indian superstition and Popish priestcraft, as it was two hundred years ago, and left to the adulteration of vicious and immoral men, from that time to this, without the control of his highness, the Pope! Neither is the time come yet, from the suspicion with which they look upon the Americans; and they have had good reason, too; for in a large degree their intercourse with us, either politically or pecuniarily, has turned to their disadvantage. Many of their wealthy men, who have assisted Americans here with their means, have in a great many instances been swindled out of their money. They have given them the aid of their influence, and then the Americans have turned against their best friends, injured them as much as possible, and then abused them personally. Unfortunately, the Mexicans have not had discrimination of character, and those who were unworthy of any one's aid, are those who have fawned upon them, pandered to their peculiar weaknesses, flattered them, and in this way secured their end, and left them to disappointment. They are thus losing all trust in Americans, and think that we all must be alike. Those who have been really worthy of confidence and trust, have not felt as if they wished to force themselves or their advice upon them, knowing that they would be misrepresented; and knowing, also, the feeling which was and is growing, of distrust among them towards us. Education, and the intercourse of a better class of citizens than we have had, is the only hope of improving the moral and social condition of these people; and unfortunately there is no inducement to the emigration of Americans, except in the mineral resources of the country; and as long as the mines of California are so productive, those of New Mexico must remain unnoticed. The only favourable opportunity I can see, is in establishing schools among the Puebla Indians; they have always been kept under by the Mexicans, and imposed upon by the priests, and are more disposed to throw off the yoke of the Church than any others; they have in some of the Pueblas denied the authority of the priests, and refused to contribute to their support, or admit them to their churches, and could by judicious means be influenced to receive Protestant teachers among them; and a hold once established among them, might lead to great results. Many of them are anxious about the education of their children, yet fear to make a movement in favour of American teachers. Mr. Gorman's movement I look upon with much interest, as upon his success depends much of the future movements to be made among them should he impress them favourably. The Zuni Indians would doubtless be the next post to establish. The Indians of Jamez would next to them be a favourable field for operation. We want ministers like the old apostles, who cast the world and its affairs behind them. Such kind of missionaries will do good, and, I fear, none others. Have you such kind? Send them, and you may, through the blessing of Heaven, hear of good being done; otherwise, where worldly and religious affairs are mixed, the world will get the greatest share of attention, and religion be left for Sunday's care. I do not wish you to understand that missionaries should not have wives, but that, in certain locations, I think that they are great drawbacks to the real usefulness of the missionary, and in this country particularly. The Methodist system of itinerant preaching, I think, would be much better adapted to this country than that of local preachers, and a perfect knowledge of the Spanish language is necessary to either; more good would be done by private conversation and arguments than public exhortations; but as I said before, I do not think that the time has yet arrived to do much. You, who have been here, know something of the moral and social condition of the Mexicans. While such a state continues, and is countenanced by the best classes of Americans and Mexicans, there is little hope. The marriage relation is greatly disregarded, and immorality prevails. Gambling is openly practised, and even encouraged; drinking is looked upon with a most lenient eye; and as for thieving, it is so common, that one scarcely thinks of it. Our laws, such as they are, are but lightly enforced (not through any fault of our judges), but from the fellow sympathy the people have for each other, and from the fact that the most of the rulers are Americans, and whatever they do to correct these evils, the Mexicans appear to think as if there was a wish to oppress them as a people; and thus much which could be done is lost through that feeling. All these things operate against the enterprise of the missionary, and the conduct of the Americans has been such that they ask, "Why do you send missionaries to us, when we see the conduct of your own people is as bad, if not worse than ours ever has been. Your people have taught us vices which we had not before, and have encouraged those which we had; and we see each day an increase among you of new faces, and yet all seem tainted with the same wish to enter into all that is evil among us." I have given briefly my views; I would I could justly give a truer account, and one more flattering, but such it is.

Your friend, ——— ———.

A VOICE FROM CALIFORNIA.

The Rev. A. Williams, in his letter which we insert below, embraces a great deal in a short compass. We do, indeed, see but the beginning of things on our Pacific shore! How important that we have men of all professions; and men of right faith and practice, to lay broad and deep the foundations there. We hope to send out help to our brother and his faithful co-labourers. Let the churches pray for our missionaries in our distant States and Territories. Onward! onward! We must, by divine aid, keep up with the growth and expansion of our country.

San Francisco, January 31st, 1853.

My Dear Brother—We have a very busy city. I have not time to write you a long letter, nor is it necessary. You will take my conclusions without my reasonings, and believe me when I say, we have none of us reached an adequate idea of the growing and certain prospective importance of our Pacific possessions. I have watched the increase of our population, trade, commerce, business generally, permanent investments of capital, and permanent settlements of business men and of families, and what with all these and the prominent and commanding position California occupies with reference to the islands and coasts of the Pacific, I am persuaded we have seen only the beginning, a small beginning, of the concentration and diffusion of commercial enterprise, and social, moral power. Say these things to our friends. It is time they should know and feel the importance, in these respects, of California.

I feel sometimes sad to think that the true interests of this region have been so imperfectly appreciated; but how I can say more than I have done, I hardly know. Do continue to incite our Church to a proper zeal for our spiritual advancement.

Since I last wrote to you, I have assisted in the organization of a Welsh Presbyterian church, of eleven members, in this city. The Rev. William Williams, late of St. Louis, and of the St. Louis Presbytery, is its stated supply. The society is limited in numbers, but very harmonious, and attentive to gospel ordinances. A pleasant beginning.

In haste, very truly yours,

A. Williams.

CHURCH EXTENSION.—HOUSE OF WORSHIP IN ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA.

Help Needed.

It will be recollected by the readers of the Record that the Board of Missions has been of late engaged in founding a church in St. Paul, the capital of Minnesota Territory. Some progress has been made in collecting funds for the church edifice, and we have made an appropriation from our Church Extension Fund, but a very considerable sum remains to be made up. Our energetic missionary there, Rev. J. G. Riheldaffer, has lately written some earnest letters on the subject, and for many reasons, desires that the church edifice be put up and finished the present season. Give him his house, and his congregation will speedily fill up and require no more aid from the Board. We shall then have a base established for our further operations in this great and growing territory. We subjoin extracts from some of Mr. Riheldaffer's letters, and insert entire a letter from Mr. William Holcombe, of Stillwater, Minnesota Territory. These communications speak for themselves, and nothing need be added to awaken right feelings in the minds of our people. If there is any portion of our frontier settlements demanding aid at our hands, it is that we here present. How can we read these appeals, and having means at command, pass them by unnoticed? Now is our time. The Lord revive his work in our hearts, and give us renewed zeal and liberality in extending his kingdom in our country. Send us speedily, brethren, what you feel free to give for the building of the church in St. Paul. No matter how much you send, we shall have a plenty of churches besides to build in Minnesota. The money will all be well and judiciously applied.

"This is an aggressive movement, and hence the honour of our Church is at stake, and the success depends upon the aid from abroad. I believe the Board acted wisely in determining to plant our church here, for this will certainly be a large city, and Minnesota a great State. In view of these things I believe that you will provide what may be necessary for the erection of this church. I have done all I can do here, and more than we could at first hope for. I shall do all I can by writing to friends and churches this winter; for the remainder you must see that we are able to stand in this community as a branch of the Church of Christ. Shall it be said that we are not able to build a church in Minnesota? Pardon my importunity. I am not pleading my own cause, but ours! not a circumscribed local interest, but the interest of the two or three States that are soon to be formed out of Minnesota, the interest of the Presbyterian Church, dear to us because it is the Church of Christ."

"The importance of this point is not sufficiently understood. This is not a little western village or county town, influencing a small district; every thing here is proceeding on the presumption that this is soon to be a large city. Here is St. Paul, four hundred miles above any other important town on the Father of Waters, at the head of navigation, the emporium of trade for a fertile territory, three times as large as the State of New York, the metropolis of the north-west fixed by nature, within five days' travel of the city of New York, only four years old, and containing three thousand people. Can any man fail to see the importance of establishing our branch of the Church here, when it is remembered that there is not an Old-school church but this between Canada and Dubuque, and none between the upper Mississippi and the Red river of the north? Are there not men in Philadelphia who, with these facts before them, will covet the honour of planting the first church in this great country?

My plan is, as soon as we can get our church finished, to start a school in connection with it. This we greatly need, for the Bible is shut out of the common schools, and there can be no education for God and eternity without the Bible. I have sent circulars to about one hundred brethren, and have written to others, and my prayer is, that God may direct the hearts of those who receive them, to treat them as the promotion of his glory requires."

"Stillwater, Minnesota Territory,
February 1st, 1853.

"Rev. C. C. Jones.

"Dear Sir—At the request of the Rev. J. G. Riheldaffer, of St. Paul, I take pleasure in addressing you on the subject of church extension in this Territory, and especially on the importance of St. Paul as a point at which the Church should concentrate her energies in the spread of the gospel. This region of country has been my residence principally for twelve years, and the five years next previous to that time, either at St. Louis or Galena; so that I have witnessed the progress in this great valley, north of St. Louis, for a period of seventeen years. St. Louis itself, when I first knew it in 1835, numbered less than 10,000 inhabitants, and had but one Presbyterian church. Since that time it has increased ten fold in population, and in Presbyterian churches also. Galena, at that time, was the next most important town north, which has only tripled in population in the same time. It had then (1836) but one Presbyterian church; it now has three. And there are other towns on the Mississippi river, and towns of importance, too, that have sprung into existence within the period of my observation, those on the west bank especially, as Burlington, Bloomington, Davenport, and Dubuque, not one of which, except the last, had a name or existence in 1835; and on the east bank, below Galena, are the towns Rock Island, Oquawka, and Quincy, all of which are limited in their trade and commercial advantages, but have steadily increased in a greater or less degree, and their churches in about the same ratio. The town of St. Paul is a new town, and one whose commercial advantages are much greater than any of the towns alluded to above St. Louis. It now numbers about 3000 inhabitants, and has increased ten-fold in three or four years, for the reason that it stands at the head of steam navigation for that class of boats that run from St. Louis and Galena northward. The Minnesota river, that enters the Mississippi river on the west side, a few miles above St. Paul, is navigable for boats of a smaller class than those running below St. Paul; hence the advantage to St. Paul in reshipping—and hence a point where all the several branches of mercantile, mechanical, manufacturing, and commercial pursuits, will concentrate, and will continue to multiply. Besides, that mammoth water-power at the Falls of St. Anthony, which has already attracted eastern capital, will contribute to the business and importance of St. Paul, the distance between the towns being only about seven or eight miles, the one being above the Falls, and the other below, and on the same side of the river. Time will be when these towns will be almost united; at all events, the commercial importance of St. Paul is increased by the manufacturing importance of St. Anthony. St. Paul, too, is the capital and seat of government, and will probably remain so for many years. The mercantile interests are here concentrated, mainly, for the country high up on the Mississippi river; extending its arms of trade to the Red river settlement of the north; a distance of six hundred miles to the north-west, and even into the dominions of Lord Selkirk, beyond the American line; then in the west and south-west is the beautiful and fertile valley of the Minnesota, into which the Anglo-Saxon race is pouring its flood of emigration. Turning to the north and north-east, we have that inland ocean, Lake Superior, with its mines and fisheries, and in all the intervening distance, forests of white and yellow pine, the resources of all which combined, when fully developed, will produce a trade almost incalculable at the present day. This, of course, will attract population. But the day is not far distant, when the great enterprise of the age, the railroad system, will penetrate these forests, and bind, as with shackles of iron, the trade of the pineries, and lakes of the north, the Mississippi and Red rivers of the north-west, and the Minnesota of the west and south-west, with St. Paul, it being the head of navigation of the greatest river of the continent. This vast region of country, whose common commercial centre nature has indicated, by the rush of emigration to St. Paul, will probably continue without a parallel, it having increased ten fold or thereabouts in three or four years, and must, in the nature of things, become the largest town on the river above St. Louis, for the good and valid reason, that no other town on the Mississippi naturally centres the trade of such an extent of country; then in St. Paul, as in St. Louis, the church has a work to do; her glittering spires should keep pace with the increasing population; several of the evangelical churches have their houses of worship; the Old-school Presbyterians have an organization, but as yet, no house of worship, except the privilege of the court-house. The interests of this branch of our beloved Zion is entwined around my heart; it has the numbers, it has the faith, and it has the wealth too, and therefore it ought to direct its energies, and give good effect at its strongest point. It needs a good house of worship at St. Paul.

The late Dr. W. S. Potts, of St. Louis, spent a few days of his last summer on earth, in my family. He expressed the conviction that our branch of the Church had overlooked the importance of this region of country, especially of St. Paul, and no doubt felt a strong hope that he might yet witness that branch of Zion he so much loved arrayed in gospel armour, and doing her part with the other branches in extending the faith of our common Lord. Having thus directed your attention, which is the special object of my letter, to this field of labour, I conclude with the hope and the prayer that the humble views expressed herein, may find a hearty concurrence on the part of those whose privilege it is to aid in so delightful and so glorious an enterprise—Church Extension. I am very respectfully, your obedient servant,

William Holcombe."

THE SPIRITUAL RAPPERS SPIRITUALLY RAPPED.

Below, the readerwill find an admirable letter from one of our beloved brethren labouring in Wisconsin. He was undoubtedly divinely directed in the choice of his weapons of warfare. God's word is "a fire and a hammer." O that we, who bear the sacred office, felt and confided in its power more. "The sword of the Spirit," there is none like it. While some are forgetting its use, may all in our Church prize and accomplish themselves in it more.

——, Feb. 16, 1853.

The past three months, however, has been a season of peculiar trial and perplexity. It is just a year since we dedicated our new house of worship. That dedication was followed by a precious season of spiritual refreshing, the hallowed influences of which remained in the Church for a long time. But as these passed away, the great adversary of souls seemed to make a new and desperate attempt to regain the ground he had lost.

He seems to have appeared personally and almost visibly in our village, in the form of what is commonly called the "Spiritual Rappings." They came in upon us like a flood, and for a few weeks it seemed as though all the barriers of truth and reason were broken down. "Mediums" and "Spiritual Circles" multiplied on every side. The writings of Swedenborg and A. J. Davis were in great demand, and were circulated from house to house. Of course Skepticism and Universalism increased at a fearful rate—for the "Spirits" are all Universalists. For a time I hardly knew what to do. Of all modern errors and delusions this, while it is the most monstrous, is at the same time, I must confess, practically one of the most difficult to meet of any I ever encountered.

When you meet a Rationalist, or a Bible Universalist, or a Socialist, or even a Mormon or an Atheist, you have at least some firm ground on which to base an appeal either to his reason or his heart. But when men have embraced this new theory, and come actually to believe they are in direct communication with the spiritual world, what can you do? You might as well attempt to reason with a crazy man—all appeals are met with a "thus saith the spirits"—and to reason with spirits were as idle as the attacks of mailed knights of ancient days upon the old fashioned ghosts of haunted castles.

Neverthless, I felt that something must be done. The minds of multitudes were being poisoned, or at least diverted from the truth—while, with the spread of these new spiritual doctrines, there was a very marked increase of sin and vice—especially of intemperance and reckless dissipation among our youth. But, believing that the best antidote for error is to be found in the direct teachings of God's word, I set myself carefully and prayerfully to bring that word to bear upon this error. I commenced a course of Sabbath evening discourses on the "future"—which I have just closed, and I trust with some profit. I began by endeavouring to enforce the proposition, that our only safe guide in looking into the future is God's word, and then endeavoured to bring out, as clearly as possible, exactly what the Bible does teach of death, resurrection, immortality and future condition of the soul, judgment, future state of the righteous, future punishment of the wicked.

These discourses have occupied some nine or ten evenings, and have been attended by a large and attentive audience, and apparently with an increasing interest to the close. During the last three or four discourses on the judgment, heaven and hell, the audience was deeply solemn; and I am now endeavouring to follow up those impressions by a practical exhibition of the great doctrines of grace, in answer to the question, "How shall we escape from the wrath to come?" In the mean time, the "Spiritual" excitement seems to be dying away, though many still cling to the delusion. The more intelligent of those who first embraced it are now giving it up. Almost all men of sound judgment, who have witnessed the performance, while they say it is difficult to account for the "raps," are unanimous in admitting that there is no intelligence in the answers obtained. The last report I have heard from them, was of one of the prominent mediums half drunk in a bar-room, cursing and swearing, and accusing the "Presbyterians" and myself of having broken up the spiritual communications and driven away the spirits. R.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

DR. HUMPHREY'S SERMON ON THE MINISTRY WE NEED.

We learn from the Presbyterian Herald of Louisville, that the churches of that city held a united service on the evening of the day set apart by the General Assembly for special prayer [last Thursday of February]. "On this occasion," says the Presbyterian Herald, "an able, interesting, and appropriate discourse was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Humphrey, from 2 Tim. ii. 2—'And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also.' We do not know we can confer a greater favour upon our readers, than to permit them to share with us the pleasure of this discourse, so far as it can be shared by reading a meagre outline of the thoughts presented in it.

The Doctor, after a brief introduction, proposed as the subject of his discourse, The Ministry we need. He remarked,

1. That we need a godly ministry. (a.) It is expressly ordained of God, that the work of the ministry shall be entrusted to regenerated men only. (b.) None can expound the gospel who do not comprehend it; and none can comprehend it who have not been spiritually renewed. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned." "He that loveth not, knoweth not God." (c.) All the teachings of the New Testament, touching the nature, duties, names, &c., of the ministry, assume that it is to be committed to pious men alone. (d.) The experience of the Church under the influence of a godly, and then under the curse of an ungodly ministry, confirms all these views.

2. We need an intelligent ministry. (a.) It is the duty of the pastor to teach the people. It is not enough to be able to utter the moving exhortation, the faithful warning, the impassioned appeal, and the tender invitation. "He must be able to teach others also." Of the Apostles it is said, that "daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus Christ." Of Christ himself it is said, that he "went up into the temple and taught." (b.) The careful and accurate exposition of the word of God, using all the light of the best scholarship and the most thorough knowledge of the word, is an indispensable function of the pastor's office. (c.) It is needful that the preacher be able to resist the adversaries of the gospel, so that the truth may be established, and they that are of the contrary part may be ashamed. (d.) We want sermons that are full of the Bible, and arranged according to the dictates of sound sense. If a man can preach the gospel in its fulness and power without writing his sermons, by all means let him do so, for it is the most excellent way. But if this grace be not given to him, then let him write out his sermons, and read them out, too. Whether he preaches written or unwritten matter, whether by reading or by free speaking, whether by the tongue of the orator, or the accent of the Galilean, let us have from him the gospel, not philosophy; doctrine, not fancy; the onset on the conscience, not the voice of the charmer, charm he never so wisely.

3. We need an orthodox ministry. (a.) There is a class of doctrines, commonly called evangelical, through which we are assimilated to brethren of various names. So far as we can understand, the reception of these doctrines is essential to salvation. A ministry that should not preach this system, would be worse than none. (b.) There is another class of truths which are peculiar to the Westminster symbols. These truths should be faithfully preached; for, first, they are clearly taught in the word of God; next, they furnish a firm foundation for the sinner's hope and calling; and further, they are owned of God in the conversion of sinners. Jonathan Edwards the great, speaking of a wonderful revival of religion which occurred in his congregation at Northampton, said: "No discourses have been more remarkably blessed than those in which the doctrine of God's absolute sovereignty, with regard to the salvation of sinners, and his just liberty with regard to answering the prayers or succeeding the pains of mere natural men continuing such, have been insisted on. I have never found so much immediate saving fruit, of any discourses I have offered to my congregation, as some from Rom. iii. 19, 'That every mouth may be stopped,' endeavouring to show from these words, that it would be just with God, for ever to cast off mere natural men."

4. We need an earnest ministry. We need men who will preach the gospel with the purpose, if it be possible, to save men, "pulling them out of the fire"—who "know nothing, and are determined to know nothing, save Jesus Christ and him crucified." We need an order of ministers that will plainly lay down at every man's door the guilt and condemnation that rest upon him; who will say to another David, with Nathan the prophet, "Thou art the man;" to say to another Herod, with John the Baptist, that "he ought not to have his brother's wife;" and to another Felix, with Paul, who spake to him of righteousness, temperance, and the judgment to come. "If the clergymen of our day," said Daniel Webster, "would return to the simplicity of the gospel, and preach more to individuals and less to the crowd, there would not be so much complaint of the decline of true religion. Many of the ministers of the present day, take their text from St. Paul and preach from the newspapers. When they do so, I prefer to enjoy my own thoughts, rather than to listen. I want my pastor to come to me in the spirit of the gospel, saying, 'You are mortal—your probation is brief—your work must be done speedily. You are immortal, too. You are hastening to the bar of God! The Judge standeth at the door!' When I am thus admonished, I have no disposition to muse or sleep."

5. We need a self-denying ministry. (a.) The work of the ministry in churches already established, requires great self-denial. (b.) The domestic missionary cannot serve his Master in this capacity, except at a continual sacrifice of ease, comfort, intellectual progress, if not of health and life. (c.) The same is true of the foreign missionary. (d.) It seems to be a law of the kingdom, that when any great work is to be done, or any forlorn adventure is to be undertaken, or any immense sufferings are to be endured, the ministry must stand in the forefront. See 1 Cor. iv. 9—13.

6. We need a numerous ministry. (a.) The foreign population of the country is increasing, by immigration alone, at the rate of one thousand, or a congregation, a day. (b.) Our native population is increasing at the rate of more than three thousand, or more than three congregations, a day. (c.) Our population is scattered over vast regions, requiring many more labourers to reach them all than would otherwise be demanded. (d.) The heathen world is now open to the gospel, and perishing for the want of it. Our Church has less than sixty ordained ministers in the whole foreign field.

Here two questions arise. The first is—What is our Church, as a whole, doing towards the supply of such a ministry as we need? The answer to this question, as drawn from official sources, presents a melancholy case. It is obtained from an induction of four particulars—each of which agrees, substantially, with all the rest. The first is this: During the five years ending in 1846, the number of young men who entered our various theological seminaries, was 504; during the five years ending in 1851, the number was 510, showing an increase of only six in the course of five years. The second particular relates to the number of candidates for the ministry under the care of our Board of Education. In 1847 it was 403, and in 1851 it was 388, showing a diminution in their number. The third particular shows that during the five years ending in 1846, the number of ministers in our Church increased 426; and during the five years ending in 1851, the increase was 380, showing a decided decrease in the rate of progress. The last particular relates to the number of ordinations to the ministry. These, in 1847, amounted to 94; in 1848, to 61; in 1849, to 62; in 1850, to 64; in 1851, to 87. These four indications point to one and the same result—that while our Church is increasing in its numbers, wealth, means of influence, colleges and seminaries, the ministry is increasing in a diminished ratio. This is, perhaps, the most serious and important fact connected with the state of our Church at the present time.

The other question of immediate interest relates to the means which should be employed to raise up such a ministry as we need.

First—let such of us as are parents consecrate our sons to the work of the ministry, and use all the means of divine appointment to the end that they may be prepared to preach the gospel.

Next—it belongs to the office-bearers and communicants in our congregations, to seek out such of our young men as seem to be called of God to the work. It cannot be doubted that some enter the ministry who have not been divinely called; nor can it be doubted that many fail to enter the office who are so called.

Further—it is our duty to seek for the blessing of God upon the young men now in our Theological Seminaries and Colleges, who have given themselves to this work. A revival of religion in a Theological Seminary is of incalculable value in preparing our rising ministry for the work before them.

And further yet—we should seek for the outpouring of the Spirit upon the ten thousand youth now gathered within the precincts of our Colleges. A revival in College is peculiarly interesting, from the circumstance, that a large proportion of youth there converted to God may be expected to enter the ministry.

And lastly—let us seek for a general outpouring of the Holy Spirit on all our pastors and evangelists, and ruling elders and deacons, and parents and children, and masters and servants, to the end that our Church may receive at once a renewal of its own inner spiritual life, and an augmentation of its outworking forces.

MRS. BOTT OF PETERSBURG, VA.

The Board of Education, on the departure from this life of so steadfast a friend as Mrs. Susan C. Bott, of Petersburg, owe it to the Church to record their sense of her loss, and to mention her labours of love as an example to others.

The Rev. Dr. Leyburn, her former pastor, has paid an eloquent tribute to her memory in an obituary notice in the last Presbyterian, from which the following is an extract.

The deceased was in many respects one of the most remarkable Christians of her day. She was the grand-daughter of the celebrated Governor Spotswood, whose name is so prominent in the colonial history of Virginia. The style of society in the midst of which she was reared, was not favourable to evangelical piety, especially at that period. After the organization of a Presbyterian church in Petersburg, she heard the truth faithfully preached by the Rev. Benjamin H. Rice, and became hopefully a Christian. Her piety has not only been consistent, but eminent. None of the pastors of that church would have a moment's hesitation as to that testimony. She has been almost as well known in many portions of Virginia as the pastors themselves. No one ever thought of questioning the goodness of Mrs. Bott. Having been long a widow, and being childless, she had nothing to hinder her active employment in religious and charitable duties, and to these she devoted her whole time, and with an industry, energy, and economy of every available moment, which could not have been surpassed. In her zeal to do good, she devoted herself chiefly to the manufacture of fancy work, the proceeds of which were devoted for the most part to the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church, which, in the aggregate, must have amounted to many thousand of dollars. These benefactions came nominally from a "Society," but they were really, to a very great extent, the fruits of her own labours. She must have given, in this way, to that Board from three to five hundred dollars annually for many years. The Board of Education will never have more reason to remember any friend, than it has to revere the memory of Mrs. Bott.

We are also enabled to give a most interesting extract from the sermon preached by her present pastor, the Rev. A. B. Van Zandt, who has undertaken, as we are glad to learn, to write a memoir of this excellent Christian lady.

For the last quarter of a century, her heart and soul have been engaged in sustaining and promoting a benevolent society in this church [the Ladies' Education Society] with which her name has become so completely identified, that it is seldom called any thing else than Mrs. Bott's society. In this laudable effort she has had some worthy compeers, and in looking over its records, it is good to see the names of some yet present with us, who have stood by it from the first. But it is no disparagement to any one, to say that its first directress has been its life and strength—"many daughters have done virtuously, but thou hast excelled them all." Since its organization in 1827, her courage has never faltered, her zeal and efforts have never relaxed. Through all its vicissitudes and its struggles, she has clung to it still, convinced that it was an agency for good, the results of which only eternity could disclose. Through her own industry, ingenuity, and taste, she has sustained its funds, when they depended mainly upon her exertions. Its interests have been in her thoughts by day and by night, and the beautiful specimens of her handiwork which it has called forth, may be found in almost every part of Virginia. Flowers, rivalling in their delicate tints the pride of the garden, will be admired in many a dwelling, long after the grass is green upon the grave of her by whose fingers they were fashioned. But yet more beautiful and enduring flowers of memory will remain, and from the precious seed sown by those whom her toils have aided, in preparation for the work of the ministry, there will spring up many "plants of righteousness" to bloom for ever before the throne of God.

The last days, aye! the last hours of her life, were occupied in labouring for the Education Society; and when Death had already begun its work, and the damps of the grave were on her brow, and its icy coldness had seized her extremities, the articles for the Society were taken from her hands, but still it remained in her thoughts, and folding her hands upon her breast, she uttered, as in reverie, "It has flourished! It has flourished!" Yes! indeed, it has flourished under her care; and now, as an example of what individual effort and energy may accomplish, we may state, that this Society, so largely sustained by her exertions, has realized for the cause of Education, during its existence, about ($7000,) seven thousand dollars!

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

CHARTERED CORPORATIONS IN EDUCATION.

HARVARD AND ANDOVER.

The question has been discussed of late, whether chartered corporations, or Church judicatories, are the safest depositories of power in the work of education. We see no reason why such a discussion should excite angry feelings. The aim of all educators is the truth. We do not propose, at present, to use abstract argument in the settlement of the above question; but simply to refer to two notable cases of failure and perversion, connected with the irresponsible superintendence of institutions under the care of chartered corporations.

Harvard University was designed by the Puritans to be a bulwark of religion and learning. In the first constitution of the College, the objects proposed to be attained in its foundation are set forth to be "piety, morality, and learning." These objects were zealously pursued under the original management of the institution. President Quincy, in his history, says: "The students were practised twice a day in reading the Scriptures, giving an account of their proficiency and experience in practical and spiritual truths, accompanied by theoretic observations on the language and logic of the sacred writings. They were carefully to attend God's ordinances, and be examined on their profiting; common-placing the sermons, and repeating them publicly in the hall. In every year and every week of the college course, every class was practised in the Bible and catechetical divinity." In 1693, the Board of Overseers, in making inquiries about the religious instruction in the College, were informed that "the Greek Catechism is recited by the Freshman class; Wollebius's Divinity and Ames' Medulla, by the other classes on Saturday."

Since these days, a great change has come over this institution of the Pilgrim fathers. About the beginning of this century, error gained the ascendency; and the corporation of seven, to whom the affairs of the College were mainly committed, became of an opposite faith from the original founders. This change, let it be remembered, has occurred in the Corporation of the College, but not in the Congregational Church in Massachusetts. The Church, as a whole, although severely tried, passed through the conflict; but Unitarianism gained the complete victory in the Corporation.

One of the objects of Harvard College was to raise up a pious and learned ministry; but to show to how great an extent the failure has wrought throughout the whole academic department, let the following facts, which are all that are, at this moment, within our reach, testify. During the first thirty years after the founding of Andover Theological Seminary, the whole number of alumni who entered the ministry, was 693; and of this number only 31 were graduates of Harvard College! So thoroughly had evangelical religion been banished from this institution of the Pilgrims during the Unitarian reign, which still continues.

Again—The statistics of the principal colleges of New England and New York, recently collected, show that the number of students, exclusive of Harvard, is 2100, and that of these 506 are expecting to study for the ministry, or about one fourth of the whole number. On the other hand, out of the 319 students at Harvard College, the number looking forward to the ministry is stated to be only about 30, or between a tenth and eleventh of the whole number in the institution.*

These statistics go to prove the extent of the damage done by Unitarianism at Harvard, to the cause of evangelical religion. Unitarianism has gained not only the ascendency, but the monopoly, in the Board of Fellows. Every member of the Corporation is Unitarian. At a recent election to supply a vacancy, the orthodox made an attempt to put in one of their number, but were signally defeated.† The Unitarians having exclusive control, would not yield an inch of the ground which their tactics have won. So much for the old Puritan College at Cambridge, confided to the care of a Chartered Corporation, separate from the Church!

ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Let us now turn our attention to the Theological Seminary at Andover. This Seminary was established in consequence of the defection at Harvard University; and this fact gives additional weight to the testimony, growing out of the present condition of things at the Seminary, against the management of non-ecclesiastical corporations. Unitarianism gained its first complete victory at Harvard, when Dr. Ware was elected to the Hollis Professorship of Divinity in 1805. The Orthodox immediately concerted measures to train their young men for the ministry at a new institution. The Theological Seminary at Andover was founded in 1807, for the very purpose of sustaining the old Puritan religion in opposition to the destructive errors of Socinianism. The Seminary was placed under the management of a Chartered Corporation, outside of the Church, and beyond its control; and in the course of a few years only, after its foundation, the cry of perversion, mismanagement, and error, has been sounded through the land. The religious public has heard rumours of theological variations and defalcations at this institution for the last twenty years. Dr. Dana, one of the trustees, in a pamphlet just published, and from which we shall quote a few paragraphs, says: "Doctrinal collisions between different Professors have been, for years, but too well known to the students. These collisions have occupied even the pulpit of the Seminary!" When the venerable Dr. Woods retired from the Theological Chair in the Seminary, and the present Professor, Dr. Park, was elected in his place, Dr. Dana says: "On the morning of the inauguration of the Professor of Christian Theology, I declared myself constrained to consider that act as conclusively stamping the Seminary with a character entirely diverse from its standards, and from the declared and well understood intentions of its Founders." This faithful servant of Christ made a remonstrance to the Trustees of the Seminary in 1849, which he now publishes in view of the increased necessity of a public exposure of the state of things in the institution. The following are extracts from the pamphlet. Let it be remembered that Dr. Dana has been a trustee of the Seminary for forty-nine years.

With the venerable Founders of the Seminary I was intimately acquainted; I knew their favourite objects and designs; I have carefully pondered their constitution and statutes; and I have watched, with deep solicitude, the course of things in the Institution, from its first inception to the present time.

The conviction is now rapidly spreading in the community, that in the Andover Seminary the doctrines of the Catechism, so rigidly prescribed by the constitution, are not taught; that is to say, not taught from the chair of the Professor of Theology. This is well known and frequently declared, even by members of the Seminary. Indeed, the fact is indisputable. . . . . He has directly attacked the most important articles of the Catechism, of which he has repeatedly declared his belief, with his solemn engagement to teach its doctrines. And more still, he has repeatedly stamped these articles with ridicule, and exposed them to public scorn.

Dr. Dana exhibits the erroneous doctrines taught by the Professor of Christian Theology, and gives much information in regard to the mournful and mischievous condition of that school of the prophets. Our space admits only of the following extracts;

The constitution provides that every Professor in the Seminary shall be a man of sound and orthodox principles, according to the system of doctrines denominated the Westminster Assembly's Shorter Catechism. Every Professor must, on the day of his inauguration, publicly make and subscribe a solemn declaration of his faith in Divine Revelation, and in the doctrines of the Assembly's Catechism. He must solemnly promise to defend and inculcate the Christian faith as thus expressed, in opposition to all contrary doctrines and heresies. He must repeat the declaration and promise at the close of every five years; and should he refuse this, or should he teach or embrace any of the proscribed heresies or errors, he shall be forthwith removed from office. . . . . .

There is, my brethren, one point of fundamental importance, yet untouched. This Board, a few years since, passed an act by which the Professors on the Associate Foundation, comprising the greater portion of the Professors, were excused from taking the Assembly's Catechism, as a part of their creed. It may possibly be recollected that, at the time, I expressed the opinion that this was a wound in the vitals of the constitution. That such is the real fact, there is the most conclusive evidence, to which I now beg your attention.

* The same statistics report that at a weekly prayer meeting Society, only 19 students attend.

† The Board of Overseers of the College is a separate body from the Corporation, and of inferior authority. In order to still the clamour of Unitarian usurpation, some members of different denominations have been admitted into the Board of Overseers; but on the above test question, the vote stood five for the Orthodox and seventeen for the Unitarian.

The constitution, in its eleventh and twelfth articles, provides that every Professor in the Seminary shall declare and subscribe his belief in the doctrines of the Catechism, and solemnly promise to teach accordingly. There is no evading this, unless it can be made to appear that the Associate Professors are not Professors in the Seminary. And this has never been pretended.

Farther; there are still living two highly respectable men (Dr. Woods and Mr. Farrar) who had the entire confidence of the founders; with whom the founders consulted in framing the Constitution; who took an active part in framing it; and who, of course, must have known the founders' views and intentions. These individuals have uniformly and confidently declared that the Catechism was intended for all the Professors in the Seminary, without distinction or exception.

Be it further remembered, that this point was never questioned in the Board for more than thirty years. And it is a notable fact, that when, a few years since, one of the associate professors objected, at the recurrence of the usual term, to assent to the Catechism as a part of his creed, his objection was overruled, and he was required to give this assent, because, in the view of the Trustees, the Constitution plainly required it.

We have, then, three distinct and independent proofs of the true meaning of the Constitution. And we have equal evidence that the Constitution has been violated in its most essential provision—a provision designed, more than any other, to stamp the character of the Seminary.

It appears, then, that the Trustees, although the charter requires every Professor in the Seminary to subscribe to the Shorter Catechism, have released the majority of the Professors from that obligation. And further, the Professor of Theology, who is not released, has "repeatedly stamped these doctrines with ridicule, and exposed them to public scorn!"

The abettors of these theological aberrations and novelties, of course insist upon their own orthodoxy; but so did the Unitarians in Harvard, until they got undisputed possession, and defied the power of those who loved the ancient faith.

Our object, in making use of the statements in Dr. Dana's pamphlet, is not to meddle with controversies in other churches so much as to warn our own Church, and to give it materials for reflection in settling the foundation of its own institutions.

There is always danger of perversion in chartered corporations outside of the Church. There is, indeed, danger in the Church itself, but far less, we think, than in bodies foreign to it. The work of education comes fairly and fully within the province of religion, and of the Church, which is the guardian of religion. The Church, and not politically chartered corporations, is "the pillar and ground of truth;" and the training of the young cannot be so wisely and safely committed elsewhere.

The cases of Harvard College and Andover Seminary, the oldest institutions of their class in the United States, and both founded by the strictest sect, suggest to thoughtful minds the danger of confiding such interests to a management excluding the control of the Church.

NEW PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

Quite a number of churches are considering the subject of establishing Christian schools under their care. The State system, however worthy of support in many respects, does not aim at "the chief end of man." Moreover, there is room for other institutions. Thousands of local schools have been established under private management in the States patronizing the public school system; and these private schools grow out of the inability of the State to meet all the demands of education. Our Church has a wide field for its operations outside of the sphere of the public schools. A State monopoly in education will never be tolerated, even if it could be obtained. If a secular education is better than none at all for the masses, there will always be found many Christian people, who will insist upon having their own children brought up religiously, and who will endeavour to extend the same privileges to others who may choose to make use of such opportunities.

To those churches, which are now considering the great subject of Christian education, with a view to establish schools under their own care, we offer two simple thoughts.

1. Brethren, consider the matter in the light of eternity. Let the worth of the souls of children be realized; the necessity of religion as the guide of our nature; the importance of beginning early in life; the interest of Christ in little children; the blessings which have always abounded to the Church through the pious nurture of her youth. Consider life, death, the judgment, and immortality.

2. Count well the cost of the enterprise. Do not begin, unless you have the spirit of prosecuting the work. If you begin, brethren, go forward! It will cost time, labour, prayer, money, faith, trial. But go forward! God has promised blessings to them that labour for his glory. The spirit that "tires and faints" is not that of victory; such a spirit is doomed to defeat, must expect it, deserves it. But when did true Christian effort fail, when pleading for God's grace, when working the means of success, when following in the cause of divine requirement?

A NEW PRESBYTERIAL COLLEGE.

GREENSBURG PRESBYTERIAL COLLEGE.

The following notice, which is the only one that has reached us, of the Greensburg Presbyterial College, Indiana, is copied from the Presbyterian Herald. It is understood that the College is designed for FEMALES. The Rev. J. G. Montfort, the pastor of the Greensburg church, has the subject of education much at heart, and the old maxim rarely fails in providence, when applied to devising and executing measures for the advancement of Christ's kingdom—"Where there is a will, there is a way."

PREBYTERIAL COLLEGE.—At a meeting of the Stockholders of Greensburg Presbyterial College, the following gentlemen were elected Trustees of the Institution: A. R. Forsyth, J. S. Scobey, B. W. Wilson, J. F. Stevens, John Thompson, Samuel Byran, I. T. Gibson, and Rev. J. R. Walker.

The Board consists of sixteen members—one-half elective by the stockholders, the remainder by the Presbytery of Whitewater. The following members were appointed by the Presbytery.

Rev. J. G. Montfort, Greensburg; Rev. S. S. Potter, Lawrenceburg; Rev. D. D. McKee, Fairfield; Rev. D. M. Stewart, Rushville; Rev. W. H. Moore, Rising Sun; Rev. James Gilchrist, Mt. Carmel; Rev. W. M. Stryker, Kingston; Mr. M. W. Haile, Brookville.—Greensburg Press.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions will be held at the Mission House, New York, on Monday, May 2d, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

The Annual Sermon will be preached before the General Assembly by the Rev. William T. Hamilton, D. D., of Mobile, Alabama. The Rev. John C. Backus, D. D., of Baltimore, is the alternate preacher.

A Sermon for the Board will also be preached in the church on Fifth Avenue and Nineteenth street, New York City, by the Rev. Thomas Smyth, D. D., of Charleston, South Carolina, and an abstract of the proceedings of the last year presented, on the Sabbath evening preceding the meeting of the Board.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, March 16, 1853.

India.—Letters have been received from Futtehgurh, January 5, and Calcutta, January 4. The latter is from the Rev. R. E. Williams, mentioning his arrival at that city on the 31st of December, after a favourable voyage. He expected to proceed on his journey in a few days. The impression made upon his mind by witnessing the state of the heathen is thus spoken of:—"The aspect of heathenism as presented here is revolting enough; what must it be in some other places? Although I had read a good deal about it, I had formed no adequate notion of the degradation of these people. The sight of them increases my desire to labour for their improvement, and yet it fills me with misgivings." The Rev. J. J. Walsh mentions an interesting application from the people of a village, near Futtehgurh, for regular instruction in the Christian religion. The guru, or religious teacher, of the village had procured a copy of the New Testament from one of the native Christians, the perusal of which had led himself and others to make this request. Mr. Walsh adds, "You will be pleased to hear that from all the reports which have been sent in of missionary operations during the past year, there is a general expression made of the readiness of the people to hear, and the removal of almost all open opposition. I cannot but think we are on the eve of a most important change in this whole land."

Siam.—We have received advices from Bangkok, dated December 1, and from the Rev. S. Bush, at Singapore, December 18. He was on his return to this country on a visit for his health, a measure which previous letters had led us to expect would become necessary. Mr. Mattoon was going on with the revision of the Siamese translation of the New Testament, and the other labours of the mission were in usual progress.

China.—Letters have been received from Canton, Dec. 25, but not containing news of marked interest.

Mission to the Chinese in California.—The Rev. W. Speer writes on the 31st of January that a neat chapel had been fitted up, in which services would be commenced on the 13th of February. An evening school had been commenced, with some eight or ten scholars. Opium is already beginning to be introduced from China. A lecture had been delivered, and repeated by request, before large audiences, pointing out the evils resulting from its use. Mr. Speer concludes his letter by soliciting "a frequent and earnest remembrance of the great work to be done here, in the prayers of Christian friends."

Creeks.—A letter of the Rev. R. M. Loughridge, of January 25th, gives very pleasing accounts of the state of religious feeling at the station at Tallahassee. Three of the more advanced scholars had been received to the communion of the church, in addition to the three mentioned in our last month's issue; some others were indulging the Christian's hope; and a general seriousness of feeling was manifest. This church is evidently enjoying times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Italy.—A letter from a well informed correspondent, a gentleman of the highest standing, dated December 27th, after acknowledging a remittance in aid of the church in Turin, gives the following cheering statements: "The Roman Catholic newspaper, the Armonia, says that we have made some thousand proselytes, and it has means of knowing what is passing in its own church that we do not possess. All that we know is, that our chapel is filled with Roman Catholics three times on Sunday, and well attended every evening during the week; that there are always fifty or sixty adult catechumens, and a large and increasing number of communicants; that the Protestant weekly newspaper and Protestant books are circulated freely; that the Bible is sold publicly; that there are few large towns that are not in communication with us; that even in the country the gospel makes progress, and that there is a rising church in Genoa."

Death of Mr. Byers.—Just as the Record is going to press, we learn the afflicting news of the death of the Rev. John Byers, of the Shanghai Mission. He died on board the ship Nestorian, March 7. His last end was peace. Mrs. Byers and her little son will share the tender sympathy of the churches.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. JOHN S. WOODSIDE.

Evenings in the City.

Saharanpur, June 22, 1852.

. . . . You will see by the heading what is to be the character of the letter; but I beg, before proceeding to the narration of facts, to explain the circumstances that led to these evening visitations. The gospel is preached every evening throughout the week, with rare exceptions, at the outside of the city church, on the highway side. When this place is occupied by one of the older missionaries, I consider it my duty to go somewhere else, though frequently I feel it a privilege to be a listener there. There is a large class of the community who never come to these evening assemblies. They would consider it beneath them to be seen mixing in the crowd that presses round the missionary. It sometimes occurred to me that we ought to visit such people at their houses, and if they will not come to us, that we should go to them. For some time a number of the school boys had been inviting me to visit their fathers' residences, and I thought this a favourable opportunity for commencing the family visitation plan. I tried it, and am quite astonished at what success has thus far attended it. I have a number of invitations which I have not yet been able to meet, and I hope, if my health is spared, to follow up this plan more thoroughly, particularly during the cold weather. I shall now specify a few cases, to let you see our manner of procedure, &c.

First Evening.—I went, accompanied by my Munshi, (a Mohammedan,) to call upon the father of a young Brahman who is a scholar in the English school. When we reached the house, we found both father and son absent, and were turning to come away, when another young Brahman, also a scholar, stepped up, and invited me to "honour his house with a visit." I complied, and following him a short distance, soon found myself surrounded by a crowd of men and boys in the open area or enclosed square of the Brahman's dwelling. I may here remark, that in all the dwellings of respectable natives, or rather inside of the outer enclosure of the whole establishment, there is an open area, around which are arranged the several apartments of the house. It is usual to receive visitors in this place, or in a kind of public hall before you enter this space. The owner of the house was engaged in enlarging its dimensions, and as the masons were busy at work all around, we were crowded upon mud, mortar, heaps of bricks, and what not. A seat was set for me, and after a few preliminary congratulations, I proceeded to the object of my visit. The Brahman is employed in the garden of the East India Company at this place, so I thought I should adapt my discourse to the auditor. I began by glancing at the beauties and wonders of the company's garden—the variety of trees, plants, and fruits it contains. I then said I was a gardener on a small scale myself, and, pointing towards our school-house, said that was the garden in which I laboured. I tried to follow up the analogy between the sowing, planting, and gathering in the company's garden and the intellectual and moral culture of the school. From this I went on to the higher analogy of the soul, and the heavenly Gardener or Husbandman who cultivates it, and concluded by urging upon them all the cultivation of their intellectual, moral, and spiritual parts. At the conclusion, one of the men stepped forward, and said he was also a servant in the company's garden, and knew the name of every flower and plant in it, but said he would like his son to be taken as a plant in my garden, and promised to send his boy to school the next day. He was as good as his word; the boy entered school the following day, and is now receiving the usual culture of our "Seminary."

While I was engaged here, the young Brahman, to whose house I had first gone, had been informed of my visit, and came to ask me to return with him. I went along, and was soon in a large front room in the second story, which he had fitted up as a study. When I say "fitted up," I should explain that he had emptied it of all rubbish, had the walls all thoroughly scoured over with clay and cow-dung, and kept in it only his few school-books, and charpai (or bed.) There was a servant standing ready with a plate of sweetmeats, of which I had to partake. I was then shown around all the house, except the women's apartments, and last of all, he took me to see the shrine of his household gods. It was a little apartment about five feet long by three broad. I told him it was a shame for him to put his gods in such a small cell, while he himself occupied so fine a house. But then, said I, "Let us see what the gods are who live in this little cell; bring them out, and let us examine them." He brought them out, with a little persuasion, and there were the usual Hindu "Penates" quite in miniature. I could not be allowed to touch them, but I asked him to allow me to break off the trunk from the head of Ganesh, (Ganesh has an elephant's head on him,) and see if he has the power of re-attaching it. In a variety of ways I pointed out the absurdity and sinfulness of worshipping such useless pieces of brass and stone, and pointed out the only worship which can be acceptable in the sight of a holy God. Here I had a large concourse, chiefly of boys. I had also more auditors than I could see. The place we were in was separated from the women's apartments by a large door and a screen. I could easily perceive that we were both heard and seen by those within. I may mention that this young Brahman has commenced to teach his wife to read. He is a very promising young man, and I trust the Lord will one day so influence his heart that he will throw his idols "to the moles and the bats." Another fact about this young man will be interesting to note. He is the very youth who, on the first of August, 1849, told me that if I would admit a sweeper's boy into the school, they would all leave. That movement for the time broke up our school, and for two years this young man never came near us. He again entered the school in October last, and has scarcely ever been a day absent since. He says now he deeply regrets his former folly. So you see even our strongest enemies are converted into our friends. After giving him a little advice about the furnishing of his study, &c., I took leave. On my way home I thought I should call and see a young Bengali—one of those mentioned in my last. Two young Brahmans and my Munshi accompanied me. We found the young man with two friends engaged at a game of chess, as he said, "to settle his head after the fatiguing duties of the day." The natives of this country are very fond of chess, and other games of this kind. Even the females, I understand, while away the weary hours of their solitude at this favourite amusement. We had not stood many minutes when one of those awful dust storms, that sweep in such terrific grandeur over the plains of India, swept over the city. It was already twilight, but immediately we were in the most impenetrable darkness. It was too late to think of moving. I told my friend I should stay with him till the storm was over. So he invited me inside a large room which he used as a sitting and sleeping apartment. He had not a chair nor a stool of any kind to offer me. He seemed greatly embarrassed to have me standing, but as the place was well carpeted, to relieve him, I at once sat down on the carpet, native fashion, and invited all the rest to be seated. Our host then asked if I would allow him to play a few tunes on the guitar. I said I should be very happy to hear his performance. He played three tunes which to a native ear might have music in them, but, to my uninitiated organs, sounded rather rude. I then took the liberty of interrupting the music, and introducing other subjects. Our party altogether consisted of three Bengalis, two Brahmans, my Munshi, and myself. The room was a long, narrow apartment, and was lighted by a single taper at the upper end. The universal light in the Hindustani houses is a little earthen cup filled with oil, and a wick laid over the edge, the top of which burns with a very dim light indeed. There was just one such light in the apartment we occupied. After some conversation on the subject of Christianity, in which the Bengali (our host) clearly and systematically exposed to my two Brahman companions the folly and sin of idolatry, and the superiority of Christianity, I began to press upon my young friends the importance of an early personal interest in Christ. I took the Bible—for the Bengali had one I had given him some time before, and opening at the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes, I made a running commentary on it, and tried to apply the whole subject to those around me. I concluded the whole with prayer, in which they all joined in a standing position. When I arose from the ground, my legs were so stiff I could scarcely move. I had been nearly two hours in that most uncomfortable position, but which to a native is the easiest of any method of sitting. It was near ten o'clock when I got home. The storm was over, the sky clear, and though I had a late cup of tea, I felt that I should like to see many such "evenings in the city."

Second Evening.—Two days after the above, I paid another visit to the house of a young Bengali pupil in our English school. This young man's father was for a long time the head of the Bengali community in this city, and the chief opposer of missionary operations. He maintained an English school in his own house for the benefit of his own and other Bengali boys, to prevent them from coming to our school. The epidemic of 1850 carried him off, and soon afterwards his two sons entered our school. The eldest is about sixteen years of age. Formerly he was a wild boy, and spent his time in foolishly running to the courts of the judge and magistrate. For many months he has been one of the best boys in the school. He attends our public worship on Sabbath very regularly. A few Sabbaths ago he came to me, and said, "I like your church very much now. I am very happy to come to it." He had frequently invited me to visit his house, and on this evening I determined to accept the invitation. He took me around all the accessible apartments, and showed me his father's library, which contained a considerable collection of valuable English books, but generally deficient in some part, as they had been purchased at auction. A large assembly of men and boys collected. I began by an examination of the latter, on a variety of subjects connected with their studies, and led them on to the higher topics of religion, the folly and danger of sin, the necessity of a Mediator, and the certainty of salvation to all who believe in Christ. I was listened to throughout with the greatest attention, and most of them assented to all that I said. During the conversation, a servant set a tea-poy, spread a cloth on it, and brought in a large plateful of sweetmeats and a water-melon. I tasted both, and, according to Hindustani fashion, was obliged to allow the whole to be given to my attendant. At the conclusion of the entertainment, I said it was our custom invariably to ask a blessing upon the food that God in his goodness sent us, and also to return thanks for the same. I said I could not think of partaking of their kind hospitality without returning thanks to God for his mercies, and entreating his blessing upon them all. They all stood up respectfully while I prayed to our heavenly Father for their conversion and salvation. After this I took leave, having spent upwards of two hours in this interesting assembly of benighted Hindus.

Third Evening.—Soon after the above, I fulfilled another appointment of the same kind at the house of a Bengali gentleman, whose sons are at our English school. This evening was, perhaps, the most interesting of all. It was a regular "field day." I had to encounter all the ability, learning, and subtlety of the Saharanpur Bengalis. The gentleman had invited all his friends to meet me. I found a new chair had been purchased expressly for my own use. A table was spread, with a snow white cloth. The reception apartment was set in order, and soon after my arrival one after another of my swarthy friends poured in till the house was filled. I was not long in getting into conversation on the great subject of my mission to this land. The chief part of the discussion was in English, and they nearly all understood it, and were too proud to address a European in Hindustani. If I could only tell you all that transpired, and report faithfully all the speeches that were made, I am sure you would be much amazed. They had evidently come prepared to give battle, and were eager for the conflict, and I do not know that I ever felt in better spirits for a discussion than that evening. At first I had to reply to four or five, but they were soon all silenced, with the exception of one, a wiry, hard-faced, yet most intelligent little man, with reasoning powers of a high order, and a logic as elastic as India rubber. This man was educated in the Free Church Institution in Calcutta, and with the exception of one other young man in the assembly, who supported me in the discussion, he was better acquainted with Christianity than any present. This enabled him to continue the combat after his less knowing friends had given it up. I kept as cool as possible, listened to all he had to say, and refuted it in detail. I drove him at last into such a dilemma that he was either obliged to deny all evidence of every kind, or admit the truth of Christianity. I pressed him home in this direction with several illustrations, till his denial of some of the most palpable facts raised a general laugh against him. I then turned from him to the audience, and said, "All the people of Hindustan know, that there once lived a great king called Akbar. Suppose our friend here says he does not believe this fact. Is he right, or are all the people of the land right?" They soon all saw how he was fixed, and cried out that he should not attempt to answer any more. I then turned to him, and in the most solemn language and manner entreated him not to use his talents against the truth. I showed him how he could be held accountable for the scriptural knowledge he had received in a missionary school. I told him I knew well he did not believe a word of all he had been reasoning in favour of, and that I hoped he would no longer stifle conviction, but yield himself up to the Saviour. I invited him to visit me at my own house, and I should lend him useful books, and help him all I could in his inquiries after truth. He said he hoped I would "honour him by partaking of an entertainment at his house." To this I willingly assented; sweetmeats as usual were then presented, and I concluded the meeting with prayer, the whole assembly standing up. I was engaged over three hours, and felt fatigued, as the evening was very warm; but as I rode home I could not but feel glad to have such an opportunity of bearing a testimony, though feeble, for the truth. I have not now time for more on this subject. I hope, however, this is not the last you will have of it. If God spares my life and permits me to labour here, I intend spending many evenings in the city in the houses of its idolatrous inhabitants. As ever, yours in gospel bonds, JOHN S. WOODSIDE.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

REPORT OF THE STATION AT MYNPOORIE, BY THE REV. JOHN E. FREEMAN: OCTOBER 1, 1852.

The duties of this station were performed by Mr. Fullerton, till his removal to Agra, February 17th; then by our head teacher and catechist, Hulasi Roy, until March 19th, when they came into the hands of the writer. Mr. Fullerton won for himself, the little time he resided here, the confidence of the people, received their kindness, and carried with him their regrets at his departure. Since the work came into our hands, it has been prosecuted as follows.

Religious Services.

Preaching we consider our first work, and demanding our best energies. In its prosecution we have had service on Sabbath morning in our church, when our families, teachers of schools, and some of the scholars, and a few of our workmen, have attended. Some of our neighbours, and frequently strangers, take a seat with us. We thus number about sixty. The attention has been exceedingly respectful. Sabbath afternoon our three families meet together for prayer and the study of God's word. This meeting is highly valued. We also, at quarterly periods, observe the communion. June 25th, I baptized Martha White, daughter of Hulasi and Clarissa his wife. All these services have been conducted in the native languages.

On Tuesday and Thursday afternoon, William, the catechist, goes out with me to preach in the city and villages. On Wednesday and Saturday, Hulasi and William are engaged in the same work. In addition, William and I often preach as we go to or return from school. We have thus preached in all parts of the city, and in all the villages near the city. We have met with uniform kindness and attention. At two villages the people have urged us to open schools for their children. At another village, they heard us so gladly, and we had such a long walk to reach home, that they desired us to stay all night, preach in the morning, when more would be at home to hear us, and then return. A room and bedstead were offered for our use. Duties at home, however, called us to return at evening. The people are ready to listen, but how much can they hear from us, upon whom such varied and laborious duties are laid? Would that we had men to give their whole time and strength to preaching "Christ and him crucified." It is the most delightful of all our labours. We have occasionally preached to the prisoners by the wayside, as we have found them at work.

Teaching.

The city school has been conducted as usual. There has been of late an increase, so that we have near 150 in daily attendance, and 186 on our roll. Our little rooms are full. The boys give good attention to their studies, and have made, we hope, advance in all departments. The English Grammar, Geography, and use of maps, History of India, Davies' (small) school Arithmetic, Hutton's Geometry, are the principal books in the English Department. In the Urdú and Hindí departments, portions of the Bible and religious works are chiefly read. In all departments the Bible and Catechism are text books in daily use. We make it our duty to hear all the classes in all departments weekly. This, we conceive, stimulates teachers and scholars, and secures the confidence of parents and guardians. We have had several visits from Europeans and natives, the former of whom have examined the boys, giving subjects for composition, and examined them when written. Were it not that our house is very confined and uncomfortable, we would have had more such visits. Some few of our boys have gone to the school of the Rev. Mr. K———, because they said they could get larger books and a better supply of school material. It is evident that if we hope to retain our scholars, we must keep our school in good supplies, and efficient in their use.

Hindí Branch School.

This school has resulted from our preaching and intercourse among the people, and especially brought about by our excellent catechist, William, who encouraged the opening desire, got up a class from the mechanical part of the people, taught them a little, and then asked for aid. We have given him a place, supplied him books and apparatus, and now he has about thirty boys who attend, six or eight of whom begin to read, and to commit answers in the Catechism. They all attend worship on Sabbath morning on our premises. You will observe that we have thus gathered a school and put it in successful operation solely by a native Christian, and all the books read in it are Christian books. Some ill-disposed persons have tried to terrify the people, but our little band still come, and I doubt not that it will go on increasing. Our catechist is a faithful, laborious man.

Hulasi has received private instruction in theology, and Hulasi and William in Bible history, taking the lessons on alternate days. We have also given them private lessons in Urdú and Hindí.

Distribution of Books.

We have given away many in our little preaching tours. We have had frequent calls at our house, where we have opportunity to learn the reason of their wishing books. We have had very pleasant visits from some who have promised to call again when they have finished reading what we gave them. We have also put books into the hands of the prisoners. They have recently been taught to read. It is good to see them thus employed in prison, and as they pass along to their work. One who had been released from prison, and gone home, became unhappy without books, and he came some distance to get a supply from us. As they get no religious books from Government, we most cheerfully give to all whom we think worthy to receive them. Many are in prison simply from having participated in quarrels, which have led to blows and injuries. The catechist of Mr. K——— preaches in the prison.

Conclusion.

Our work, though from its variety and multiplicity distracting and laborious, is very pleasant. The people are ready to learn, willing to hear, and we have seen some who have felt the power of truth. Some of our larger and best educated boys think much on religious subjects. We hope to see them emerge into clearer light and embrace it.

One man in the city was so impressed at the preaching of our assistants, that he determined to renounce his religion and embrace Christianity. We warned him of the trial that awaited him from his friends, and of the work we would require at his hands. He came to us with these admonitions, but was soon frightened or bribed away, and persuaded to leave the city. We have no news from him since.

How much we and those to whom we preach the gospel, need the Spirit of the living God to descend upon us to bless us! We crave, as the richest gift the Church of our fathers has to bestow, the prayers of her living members.

Church-Communicants, 5; Baptized-Infant, 1; City School, 186 boys; Branch School, 30 boys.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

REPORT OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE NINGPO MISSION.—NINTH YEAR.

Since the close of the last fiscal year, a few changes have been made in the Medical Department of the Mission, a statement of which will not be out of place in commencing our report. In the first place, it was found advisable to give up, for the time being, the dispensary at Chinhai. Although the number of patients was very encouraging, and the eligibility of the town, as a mission station, was fully demonstrated, yet, being entirely dependent upon the ordinary Chinese passage boats for passing to and fro, in consequence of the continual change of the tides, we were frequently obliged to start from Ningpo in the middle of the night, in order to avail ourselves of it; returning sometimes in the forenoon and sometimes at night as the tide suited; and it was thus utterly out of our power to have any fixed hour for prescribing. Added to the inconveniences thus occasioned, the cholera broke out at Ningpo, and your medical missionary did not deem it advisable or safe, under the circumstances, to be absent so often or at so great a distance from his proper post.

In the second place, the days of prescribing at the hospital at Ningpo, have been changed to Monday and Saturday of each week, thus allowing the medical missionary a greater facility in attending to the other duties which devolve upon him.

Thirdly, the dispensary at Ningpo had been located in a remote part of the city, in a room adjoining one of the Chinese chapels, in order that the ministerial brethren might more readily avail themselves of the opportunities afforded for preaching to the patients.

The unfavourable situation of the dispensary in other respects, as regarded, for example, the distance from the landing-places of the passage-boats, and the difficulty experienced by patients from the country in finding the place, were found upon trial of a year and more, to counterbalance the advantages which we had hoped to derive from its proximity to a preaching place. For these reasons it was thought advisable in the month of March last, to rent a room in a more favourable part of the city. This proving too small to accommodate the number of patients in attendance, another room was added; since which time the number of applicants has increased in such a manner as to show that the step is fully justified by the results. The number of patients entered on the dispensary books during the past year, is as follows:—Males 4385; females 392; total 4777. The diseases prescribed for, (although under the circumstances under which they were registered, it was impossible to go into minute particulars,) have been of the following general classes: Ophthalmic diseases 1594; fevers and other internal diseases 343; rheumatism, dyspepsia, &c. 525; itch 493; porrigo, eczema, ulcers, wounds, &c. 1822; total as above, 4777. If to these be added the number, (exceeding 500,) which have been prescribed for, or operated on at their own houses, or at that of the medical missionary, or at other places, it will give a total in round numbers of 5200 patients. The operations have been for entropium, ectropium, pterygium, encanthis, and cataract; paronychia, and abscess, sutures of extensive incised wounds, and minor amputations, reduction of hernia and of dislocated or fractured bones, and for the removal of polypi and other tumors. The number received into the hospital as in-door patients has exceeded that in former years. Most of these, during their stay, have had opportunities of hearing the gospel from the living preacher, and all of them, of becoming better acquainted with the religion of Jesus which prompted those works of charity, the advantages of which they were reaping.

In the month of May last, an encounter took place at a short distance from Ningpo, between the country people and a body of soldiers sent out to put down some disturbances connected with the salt monopoly. In the affray the military were worsted and put to flight. Many were forced from the narrow pathways into the canal, and there drowned; others fell under the blows of the exasperated villagers, or were, in the panic that ensued, cut down by the swords of their fellow soldiers, who, in their flight and terror, spared neither friend nor foe that chanced to obstruct their way. Seventeen officers were reported killed, and the whole number of killed and wounded could not have fallen far short of three hundred. About sixty of the wounded who were brought up to the city, came under the care of your medical missionary; and it has never occurred to me to witness at any one time a larger number of wounds, or of more serious character; some of them inflicted with rakes, mattocks, clubs, flails, and scythes, and others with swords and spears. In some four or five cases such fearful gashes were inflicted upon the head and neck, that had we not seen for ourselves, it would have seemed almost incredible that the wounded could have survived long enough, under the circumstances, to reach Ningpo.* The early removal of the troops to their distant homes, four days after the affray, caused us no little uneasiness, lest the malpractice of the native surgeons should undo all that had been done for the sufferers. All that we could do was done in cautioning against the nimia cura medici of their own people; and we had the gratification of hearing from one detachment, the Sháuhing regiment, that they were all doing well, and that the rapid cure of some of the most severe cases had created great astonishment in their city. The colonel of this regiment, (a Mohammedan,) who had been under our care for a severe wound received in the same engagement, sent afterwards to express his gratitude, and to beg our acceptance of half a sheep, &c., which last, however, was respectfully declined. Many tracts, and portions of the sacred Scriptures, were at this time distributed among the troops, (some of whom came across the river purposely to obtain them,) and were doubtless carried by them to their homes at Hang-chau, Sháuhing, Kin-húa, Hú-chau, and Kú-chau, all large and important cities, to which the missionaries of the cross are as yet denied personal access.

No inconsiderable portion of the time of the physician has been taken up in attending upon the Portuguese, Macaonese, Manila men, and Cantonese sailors on board the vessels which have literally crowded our river during the whole summer. Humanity would indeed forbid us to refuse or withhold any or all the assistance in our power to fellow creatures, of whatever clime, colour, or religion, who would otherwise be left to suffer; but in cases like these, where other medical aid might be procured, and where the ailments are frequently the consequences of the patients' own misconduct, and where, too, the time given must be taken from what might otherwise be given to the proper calling of the missionary physician, your medical missionary would be glad to receive the sanction of the Executive Committee to his declining in future all such extraneous employment.

The general health of the mission during the year has been tolerably good, although there has been, as usual, during the summer months, considerable suffering from bowel complaints, particularly among the children of the mission. The cholera broke out at Ningpo in the latter part of last year, and prevailed for a short time, as the Executive Committee were informed at the time. In the months of August and September last, the disease again made its appearance. Two boys in the mission boarding-school were attacked by it, and sank in a few hours, despite all remedial measures. A few days afterwards another boy in the same school was seized with the disease, but ultimately recovered. The disease, although now of infrequent occurrence in the city, or in our immediate neighbourhood, is still prevailing in the country, and in some places with fearful fatality. By the good hand of our God upon us, the members of our own and sister missions have thus far been preserved.

The amount expended at this place by the medical department during the year ending September 30th, 1852, is in gross $128 49; the items of which are herewith sent.

All of which is respectfully submitted, by

* I would desire to acknowledge my indebtedness to the kind assistance of the Rev. E. W. Syle, of Shanghai, then on a visit to Ningpo, who for three days spent several hours each day in assisting me to sew up and dress the wounded; an assistance the more to be appreciated, as to one unaccustomed to such things the sight could not be otherwise than revolting in the extreme.

CHINA: SHANGHAI MISSION.

ON PREACHING TO THE CHINESE, BY THE REV. J. K. WIGHT.—SEPTEMBER 30, 1852.

After speaking of the religious services, held in a chapel in the city of Shanghai, and the visits paid during the week to frequented places, for the purpose of preaching and religious conversation, Mr. Wight remarks:

Preaching of the word, in the earlier stages of missionary effort, is attended with many circumstances, which render it essentially different in form from that which is customary in Christian lands. We have our place of assembling, with a few plain benches and a table for a pulpit; and instead of a congregation who keep the holy day, we go to the door and invite the passers by to come in; one comes with his bundle, and another with his pipe, and we must soon commence or our audience will tire with waiting. Attracted by seeing a foreigner talk Chinese, perhaps a few more will come in. How are they to be instructed. They come with no appetite for the truth, and unless their attention is gained, will soon be leaving, saying they have business, or will return after eating their rice. The ears of some can only be gained by the simplest historical account or illustration, and perhaps before any single truth is offered, others have come in who derive but little benefit, from having lost what has gone before. Not unfrequently the character of an audience changes so much, that in order to adapt your remarks to the new comers, the subject has to be changed. So that frequently the only mode of preparation appears to be, to have many arrows in one's quiver, which can be brought out as occasion serves. One of the most dampening influences after having talked on some interesting truth, and as you had hoped forcibly, is to be questioned in regard to the material of your hat or coat, and one of the most difficult things is to turn this conversation, and see how much of the truth has been appreciated and understood. Now and then a little advance seems to have been gained. A man either from politeness or honest conviction assents to what you say. In either case a ray of light, a grain of truth, has been brought within reach of his understanding; and the hope is, that as light it may dispel some darkness, or that as seed, it may find good soil and spring up and bear fruit. The danger, however, is that the truth will be confounded with some heathen superstition—that the God we worship will in their minds take the form of some of their false deities, and the Jesus whom we preach be likened to Confucius, a sage and a philosopher—but not a Saviour and Redeemer from sin.

For the sake of illustrating more fully what is necessary in preaching the gospel to the heathen, it may not be out of place to refer to an idea which is somewhat prevalent among Christians at home, that it is only necessary to repeat the story of the cross, and tell idolaters of the love of Jesus, and they will immediately see the superiority of the Christian system, and come to Christ as the only refuge, and escape from their sins. In proof of this the story of the Moravian and the Greenlander is often adduced—the latter asking the missionary why he had not sooner told them of Jesus. But it is doubtful whether a heathen is the most proper judge of the time when he can best appreciate this truth. What need does he feel of a Saviour before he feels the guilt and weight of his sins? And how can he know the guilt of sin, before he knows of God and his holy law? In all the numerous offerings made in the numberless temples of this heathen empire, there is no reference to man as a sinner. Supplications are made for favour, and thank-offerings presented, but no attempt made at expiation or atonement of sin. Where must we begin then with our teachings? Surely not with the remedy, for they that are whole have no need of a physician. We must first proclaim the law as a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ. We must go back to natural religion, and reproclaim its truths—set forth the existence and perfections of God—show his character as revealed in the works of creation, in his sustaining and governing all his creatures, and supplying all their wants. We must show the manner in which he regards sin; how he punished it in our first parents and at the flood; how particularly he hates and has denounced idolatry. Let the Old Testament with its law and history, as well as the New, bear upon their conscience, and show their short-comings, and then the remedy will sound as glad tidings—good news unto all people. Jesus will no longer appear like Confucius, a sage and a philosopher, but as a divine Saviour, able and willing to redeem from the power and curse of sin.

It is plain then, that the heathen require instruction, some knowledge of divine things, before they can become Christians. They must be convinced of their folly and sin, before an exhortation will suffice to lead them to forsake their idols and turn unto the living God. Our present work, therefore, we feel to be especially that of sowers, and not of reapers. Glad shall we be, however, if both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together. But though we reap or not, sow we must, even though others enter upon our labours. And as is our work, so must also be the encouragement which we and the Church must derive in the prosecution of it. It is not the encouragement of reaping an abundant harvest, but of sowing good seed—of labouring in faith and hope, being stimulated by the commandment and encouraged by the promise, Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.

MISSIONS IN EUROPE.

CIRCULAR OF THE EVANGELICAL SOCIETY OF GENEVA.

GENEVA, February 4, 1853.

Dear Sir—On the 19th of January, 1851, some disciples of the gospel, (several of whom are now with the Lord,) founded at Geneva the Evangelical Society, to labour for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Since that time, other associations for the same object, have been, by the blessing of God, established at Paris, at Brussels, at Lyons, &c.; and brethren in other countries have given to them precious proofs of their regard.

The Evangelical Society of Geneva, however, with which a new era was thus commenced for the evangelization of papal countries, sees now its own progress retarded. As institutions having the same object in view were multiplied, the contributions to older friends naturally diminished. Our debt, which was considerable at the time of publishing our last Circular, has much increased. Our deficiency, which on the 5th of November was about 32,000 francs, is now 45,000 francs; and to this we must add what will be payable by the end of March, making a sum of 75,000 francs, (about $15,000,) which will be required to close the accounts of the present year.

You will say with us, doubtless, dear sir, that this state of things is serious. It would be even disheartening, if we could not look unto the Lord. But we know that it is he who hath said, Go, preach the gospel to every creature; we know also that the silver is his, and the gold is his; therefore it is that we do not give way to fear.

Christians in Geneva have laboured for twenty-two years for the fulfilment of the prayer, Thy kingdom come! Shall they cease their labours? Geneva, situated between France, Switzerland, Italy, Germany—as at the centre of papal Europe—Geneva may cause the light to shine forth all around her; should she not profit by so important a position?

Cheering encouragements are given to us; doors open on all sides for preaching the gospel of grace. In one of the oldest fields of our labour, a delightful awakening has taken place; they count at least ten conversions in one village. In other places, the dry bones are moving, and we ought to send forth new workmen. The work of colportage bears encouraging fruits, even in places where it was supposed to be impracticable. If now to these labours abroad we add those conducted in the midst of ourselves, in our Theological school, or in our city at large, we have not less reason to bless the Lord. Shall we stand still, then, when God encourages us? No, surely. At the moment when one sees the ultramontane party redoubling its zeal and efforts, our work seems more needful than ever before in twenty-two years. Yet shall we find ourselves compelled, if not to abandon it, at least greatly to circumscribe it, if our friends do not respond to the appeal which we now make unto them in the name of the Lord.

We address ourselves therefore to you, dear sir, with a Christian liberty. If Geneva must lower the noble banner of the Gospel, which the Lord set up here three centuries ago, Rome assuredly will raise a shout of triumph. Besides this, other considerations lead us to be urgent in our appeal to our brethren. We know that the will of God is, that "the people who sit in darkness shall see a great light;" and it is for this that we ask you to be with us co-workers with God, in the good work which he has confided to us, and to help us to bring sinners to eternal salvation, by means of preaching the gospel, and of the dissemination and study of the sacred Scriptures.

Receive, dear sir, the expression of our sentiments of Christian affection.—For the Committee,

ALEX. H. DE ST. GEORGE, President,
MERLE D'AUBIGNE, Vice President,
VIEUSSEUX COLLADON, Treasurer.

THE CHURCH AT TURIN.

In warmly acknowledging the receipt of moneys in aid of the church at Turin, a distinguished gentleman, whose praise is also in all the churches, sends us the following truly good news. We quote from a letter dated December 17, 1852.

You are doubtless well acquainted with the chief features of the history of the Waldensian Church. It is the remains of the ancient Church of Christ in Piedmont, which has preserved its independence during the middle ages up to the Reformation, and from that period, through many trials, to the present hour. The late political events have opened a field of action which has imposed upon her duties which she cheerfully accepts, and her past efforts have been crowned with success. For the first time since 840, an Evangelical Church has raised its head in an Italian capital, where the gospel has not been faithfully preached for nine centuries. The Roman Catholic newspaper, the Armonia, says that we have made some thousand proselytes, and it has means of knowing what is passing in its own church that we do not possess. All that we know is, that our chapel is filled with Roman Catholics three times on Sunday, and well attended every evening during the week; that there are always fifty or sixy adult catechumens, and a large and increasing number of communicants; that the Protestant weekly newspaper and Protestant books are circulated freely; that the Bible is sold publicly; that there are few large towns that are not in communication with us; that even in the country the gospel makes progress; and that there is a rising church in Genoa.

Under these circumstances, it is certain that every sacrifice made by our American brethren, will effectually aid the Protestant cause in Italy, for this church is an old Italian church, with a legal existence and able to assert its rights, and the only Protestant church that the Italians will listen to. We are able to do our work, and all we want is money, to secure a place of worship, and open schools, or to give the means of livelihood to the ministers of the gospel. The word of God will do the rest. All that we can do is, so to regulate the visible church that it may afford the necessary facilities to the preaching of the word. I take upon myself to return the hearty thanks of the Moderator and the Vaudois clergy for your liberality and friendship, and to assure you that it is the firm conviction of all those employed in this work, that it is one of the most important that has been undertaken since the Reformation, and will be crowned with results that are shadowed forth in the Apocalypse. . . . . .

GREAT PREACHERS.

I called to-day at the house of a friend, whom I had not seen for twenty years. There I met, and was introduced to, a gentleman from a Presbyterian congregation not far distant, the pastor of which is a Mr. ——, a young man, who has been settled about four years. The foreign missionary work soon became a subject of conversation, and my new acquaintance took occasion to speak of the excellent missionary spirit of his pastor. His remarks were somewhat as follows:

"He is a great missionary man, and does a great deal for the cause. He tells the people so plainly what their duty is."

Very good, thought I; what a pity that all pastors are not equally plain. Their people, in the end, would commend them for it. My friend went on—

"He makes them give just as much as he pleases. He tells them he must have so many dollars for the missionary cause, and they give it; and they sometimes give more than he asks. He has them completely under his thumb."

Surely, (said I to myself,) this pastor is something extraordinary. He must be a man of ability, or he would never be able to exert so controlling an influence over his congregation. And then he seems to be a man of excellent spirit. He loves the cause of missions. He knows it to be the cause of Christ, and he delights to give it a helping hand. Then I could not help thinking, (and whether right or wrong, obeying the first impulse of my heart, I thought it aloud,) why does he not himself become a missionary? And I am free to say, that many a time, when I have seen missionary zeal manifest itself in young and middle-aged ministers, I have had the same thought, though I have not always spoken so plainly.

Judge of my surprise at the answer given to my question. Said he, "Oh, he is too great a preacher for that."

Too great a preacher to be a missionary! What a reason for declining to obey the command to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature! Too great a preacher to do the very work for which preachers are made! Too great a preacher to do the greatest work that preachers are ever called to do—convince and persuade unbelieving idolaters, who are wedded to the superstitions of ages, and whose consciences, for the most part, are seared as with a hot iron! So thought not the man who was perhaps the greatest preacher, (after his divine Master,) and the greatest missionary that ever lived; and so thought not the Master himself, when he appeared to him in glory, on the way to Damascus, and distinctly consecrated him, with his splendid talents, to the work of an apostle, or missionary, to the heathen.

But is it true that this is the reason why Mr. —— does not become a missionary? I would fain hope not. Yet why is it that so few of those who acquire the reputation of being great preachers, think it proper to use their rhetorical powers on heathen ground? I do not say none of them; for of those to whom the Lord has given a good measure of this grace, a few are to be found abroad; and one of the most powerful pulpit orators of the present age, has been a missionary to the heathen almost a quarter of a century.

Still there is reason to fear that some ministers of this class have fallen into the error of supposing that there is greater demand for the kind of talents which they possess, in Christendom, than in Heathendom. I am persuaded that the contrary is true, though I will not here enter into the argument. That great powers of elocution would give one a wider fame, and elicit more flattering applause from elegant and admiring crowds, in this enlightened country, than it would among the barbarous, or even partially civilized heathen, is very probable; but where is the servant of Christ who would allow himself, in selecting a field of labour, to be governed by so unchristian a motive? Possibly some such might be found, if God's omniscient eye were to make a search, for in all ages there are some, doubtless, who seek their own things, and their own glory—not the things and the glory of Jesus Christ. But can it be that any of the "great preachers" in the Presbyterian Church, and the other evangelical churches of our country, are chargeable with such principles of action? Is it true that they decline the missionary work, because they wish to shine in circles more brilliant than any that can be found within the shades of heathenism? It is hard to believe it, yet there are many who think so.

O! that Mr. ——, and some of the other "great preachers" to whom such motives are ascribed, would vindicate their character as humble and faithful servants of the Lord Jesus, by tearing themselves away, where it is practicable, from the idolatrous throng, who are so ready to do them homage, and preach henceforth to the multitudes on foreign shores, equally ready to listen, among whom Christ has not yet been named! If they do not seek their own, but are ready and anxious to serve Christ in those parts of the great field where most their services are needed, whatever may be the sacrifices involved, let them act accordingly, and thus wipe out the stain which, in the estimation of many, injures their sacred character. By so doing, they would not only justify themselves before the world, but they would have a large share in the work of saving the nations—directly, by calling multitudes of the heathen, like Paul, to repentance, and faith in him who is the Saviour of the world; and indirectly, by shaping the course of many weaker brethren, who are influenced by their high example.

ARCTIC SEARCHING EXPEDITIONS.

When sufficient time for completing the course in the Arctic Expedition, under Sir John Franklin, had elapsed, and he did not return, and there were no recent tidings respecting him, the whole civilized world was thrown into a state of high excitement on the subject, and expeditions were fitted out to search for and carry relief to the sufferers if living, or if not living, to learn, if possible, their fate. Not only did the English government, on the most liberal scale, fit, man, and provision such expeditions, and that too year after year, but offered also a reward of £20,000, to those who might afford effective relief to the missing expedition. There was no lack of men to volunteer in these expeditions, so long, arduous, and attended with the greatest exposure, danger, and extreme suffering. Private expeditions also were fitted out, and gentlemen of fortune engaged in them, and at their own charges. Sir John Richardson, at the age of 61, "already honoured, and already rewarded with a lucrative government appointment," left his family and the comforts of home to go in search of his lost friend, by an overland journey through the desolate and frozen regions of the North American continent. Sir John Ross, at the age of 73, volunteered in this philanthropic search. An old man of 73 volunteering to take command of an expedition to those icy, stormy seas! and from his private fortune defraying part of the expense! A merchant of New York, at an outlay of $25,000 or more, fitted out two vessels, which were sent in search of English navigators, the object of whose expedition had been the promotion of science.

The ships' crews in the various searching expeditions, and the overland companies, suffered almost incredible hardships; wintering in regions where the cold was sometimes 64½° below zero—companies again leaving such winter quarters to go on foot over ice and through snow, dragging by hand sledges laden with provisions for themselves and for the missing sufferers, should they find them. In these pedestrian excursions, in the midst of arctic winters, the suffering was intense, and some of the men died of exhaustion and frostbite.

Think of it! An honourable gentleman, having two ships, with 138 men and their officers, on a voyage for the promotion of science, fails to return at a time when he might reasonably be expected, and see what sympathy is excited in his behalf—what numbers of refined and educated gentlemen offer to go in the search—what wealth, both of the public and individuals, is freely given! And all this was nothing different from what should be; humanity required it all.

Yet when these expeditions return, and bring back word respecting aboriginal tribes in some of those frozen regions, who are without proper religious instruction, how much sympathy is awakened—who volunteers to go in search of them—what merchant-princes offer their thousands to defray a portion of the expense in carrying them relief? How many tribes of the aboriginal inhabitants of this continent are now wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; but who goes to counsel them to buy that gold tried in the fire, that they may be rich; white raiment that they may be clothed, and to anoint their eyes with eye-salve, that they may see! That one wretched tribe, for example, called "The Root Diggers," where are human beings in a more forlorn condition than they? but who volunteers to carry them relief?

The lady of Sir John Franklin offered a reward of £3,000 to those who might afford "effective relief" to her husband and those with him. But in the case which we present, it is the husband that will bestow the reward; for the Church is the bride, the Lamb's wife; and if some are to be gathered out of every tribe, then are there not amongst the "Root Diggers" some who are his? The reward, however, is not to be counted out in pounds, shillings, and pence, nor will it be in the insignia and honours of baron, baronet, or knight; it is the reward like that promised to those who give a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple; and the toil, danger, and privations, will be no greater than were encountered in the Arctic Expeditions. In the interior of Africa are unnumbered, and as yet unvisited tribes, in a distressed and starving state. Who, now, for the sake of humanity, in compassion for immortal souls, and from love to Christ, will brave their scorching sun, and their fever-laden breezes, in order to bear to them the bread of everlasting life?

In interior and northern Asia how many tribes are there that are lost, and still wandering, led by blind guides! Who will go in the search for them, that they may be turned into the right way? In how many of the islands of the ocean do the inhabitants sit in a darkness thicker and more gloomy than that long night which settles down on the polar regions! Who will go and be the instruments of leading these benighted ones by a way which they know not? And who is offering the money? who furnishes the ships? * * *

THE CURSE OF MEROZ.

In considering the triumphal song of Deborah and Barak, recorded in the fifth chapter of Judges, upon the occasion of the victory over Sisera, one cannot fail to perceive how God commends those who willingly devote themselves to his service, and how solemnly he rebukes such as are at ease in Zion. "My heart," says the prophetess, "is towards the governors of Israel that offered themselves willingly among the people." Ephraim and Benjamin, and Machir and Zebulon, and Issachar, are greatly praised, and especially Zebulon and Naphtali, who jeoparded their lives unto death in the high places of the field. On the other hand, there were great searchings of heart for Reuben, who abode among the sheep-folds to hear the bleatings of the flocks; and a withering reproof of Gilead, who abode beyond Jordan; of Dan, who remained in his ships; and of Asher, who continued on the sea-shore, and abode in his breaches. But in the midst of the highest strains of the victors' triumph, the prophetess turns abruptly to a curse upon the inhabitants of Meroz, "who came not up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." This was a place probably of much consequence at that time, and lying near to the scene of action; doubtless its inhabitants had the opportunity of rendering important service to the public cause, which, either through fear or want of patriotism, they neglected to improve. They were cursed, not for joining their forces to the enemy, but for neglecting to go out against them. Four of the tribes were deservedly censured because they ignobly remained at home, though they were far removed from the scene of action, while Meroz received a special and awful execration for neglecting a duty which was so plain.

The principle involved in the curse of Meroz exists at this very moment in the state of the Church. Not only is the Canaanite left in each one's heart, but there is a fearful host of enemies yet to be conquered before Christ shall take to himself the kingdom and reign over the nations of the earth. The work of promoting the kingdom of Heaven upon earth is emphatically the Lord's. Though he makes use of the instrumentality of weapons in battle, yet "He saveth not with sword and spear," says the inspired writer, "for the battle is the Lord's, and he will give it into your hands." In all the various encounters of the children of Israel with the kings of Moab, and Midian, and Canaan, it is expressly stated that the Lord raised up Othniel, and Ehud, and Deborah; that the Lord drew Sisera unto Israel; that the Lord went out before them, and delivered the enemies' hosts into their hands; and that God subdued Canaan before the children of Israel. He needed not the help of Meroz, as the event showed that without its aid the whole host of Sisera was slain. Omnipotence never needs the assistance of weak and dependent man. The power of the conversion of a single soul is almighty power—it is represented as an exceeding greatness of power:—how much more so when we regard the saving of the nations. And yet He has made it the duty of His redeemed ones to come up to His help, and we are indeed honoured in being made labourers together with God. God, it is true, predetermines, carries out, and accomplishes the stupendous plans of grace; and yet it pleases him, through the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe. Nor is any Christian excused from taking part in this work of saving men. As it was incumbent on the tribes to the east of Jordan to leave their possessions and march against their oppressor, so there is now a responsibility resting upon the humblest follower of the Lamb to take part in this work. The affairs of this life are by no means so important as those of the life to come, and there can be no excuse before the bar of God for not being an every-day, active Christian. But who can measure the solemn responsibility of those who are blessed with physical strength and youth, to whom God has given mental endowments capable of serving him with energy! Let such especially consider the awful curse of Meroz.

Standing, as we here do, upon heathen ground, with a field broad enough for the united energies of a host of labourers—on the very borders of an immense empire which we have every confidence God will soon widely open—contiguous, too, to the populous Japan, which there is every reason to believe must before long receive the ambassadors of Christ, the missionary deeply feels that there is a mighty host to be conquered—a mighty work to be done. It is indeed God's work, but as in all other places, the "foolishness of preaching" must here be employed. As we receive communications from our native land from time to time, how pleasant it would be could we notice the embarkation of ship-loads of those who are to be our co-labourers here. No one can imagine how eagerly we seek for this kind of information, and how sad has many a heart been made by long and repeated disappointment. Month follows month, and, as before, there are no applicants for missionary work; the funds of the Church seem to flow but little more freely than before. Are there none who, like Meroz, fail to come to the help of the Lord? Can it be that every one is following the path of duty which God would appoint? Has every one seriously considered the question—"Lord, what wouldst Thou have me to do?"

It is not with the spirit of complaining at our hard lot that we make such remarks as these. The Saviour promises a hundred fold to those who give up the endearments of life for his sake; and that promise, in various untold ways, is more frequently fulfilled to the missionary than is generally believed. If there is a happy man on earth it is a faithful labourer among the heathen. There are hidden joys of the heart which are often his lot to an unspeakable degree.

But you have no encouragement, say some. Let that devoted missionary, Gordon Hall, reply to such a suggestion. "On every side I behold a multitude of immortal beings: to some of these I can speak every day—and God peradventure will convert them. Encouragement enough! I am willing thus to spend and be spent: it is the greatest of all privileges—to me, the best of all employments." Nor does the portion of converted heathen contrast unfavourably with converts at home. But the highest of all encouragements we derive from the promises of the Almighty. These assure us, in the clearest and fullest manner possible, that the work in which we are engaged is the Lord's work, and that it will prosper—that no power on earth or in hell can stay the accomplishment of what the Bible reveals.

Now, if it were simply God's command to "go teach all nations," it would be enough. "God calls me to the heathen; woe to me if I preach not the gospel to the heathen"—has been the feeling, perhaps, of every sincere missionary. But add to this the privileges and the encouragements of the missionary, and it seems one of the strangest things in the world why men do not go to the heathen. And if any are called, and do not attend; if they form pre-engagements which will hinder them from such a work to which they are really called—if, like Jonah, they form their plans according to their own ideas of duty, without prayerfully acknowledging God in all their ways, and seeking for his direction, are they not inviting upon their own heads, or upon their families, a fearful curse—if not for eternity, at least for the life that now is? Where is Meroz now, that failed in the hour of duty to come to the help of the Lord? Not a vestige remains to mark where it once stood. She could not then join in the jubilant song of the triumphant army, and now her memory is forgotten.

God has begun the work here and in other parts of the heathen world. He will carry it on to a precious success, though the present instrumentality is feeble; but how little are they to be envied who merely give a trifle towards the advancement of the Saviour's kingdom, or offer a hasty prayer in its behalf. Let Christians stir up the gift of God that is in them—let them pray for an increase of labourers in the great field both at home and abroad, and seriously inquire themselves, Cannot I, or the children whom God has given me, be personally engaged in this blessed work? Christian reader!

have you as yet gone up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty?

HIGHLY ENCOURAGING.

The following extracts are taken from the Narrative of the State of Religion, within the bounds of the Synod of Georgia, presented November, 1852.

"For our Boards, there is an increasing attachment among our people. We respect them—we love them. They are the children of our adoption, and so long as they look as carefully to our interests as they have thus far done, we will cherish and sustain them." * * * *

"The Board of Publication is assuming a more important place in our history every day. It supplies a vacancy which we had long felt, and the more we see of its benefits, the higher is our estimate of its importance. There is, among our churches, an increasing desire to be fed with our own food, and that in sufficient quantities to give character to our life. For this object, a superintendent and several colporteurs are now in the field, and more are greatly needed."

Such decided testimony, from such a source—such kind and generous sentiments towards the Boards of our Church, are truly valuable and highly encouraging; especially to those to whom their direction has been more immediately confided and who are earnestly endeavouring to make them increasingly efficient and useful. We cordially thank our brethren for their Christian sympathy and active co-operation, and trust that they will continue to reap the reward of their wisdom, piety, and zeal.

Since the foregoing Narrative was presented to the Synod, the Board of Publication has commissioned a number of additional colporteurs within their bounds, who are now actively employed in circulating our books in that important field.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM ONE OF OUR COLPORTEURS.

Xenia, Ohio, Februrary 26, 1853.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Dear Sir—Enclosed you will find my eleventh and last report to the Board of Publication. As intimated in my last, I have spent the two months on the turnpike thoroughfares, touching on parts of Clarke, Montgomery, and Preble in Ohio, and Wayne county, Indiana. In the western part of my field, I was permitted to render an important service, where nothing had been done with our books since my visit five years since.

It is with peculiar feelings of heart, I have been permitted to wind up my laborious service of nearly eight years with such marked kindness as I have everywhere received from my old friends. This report brings to a close my labours in this good cause. I spent five years in the colporteur service previous to accepting a commission from the Board. Our books made a part of my stock from the beginning, and the number was increased until the time I entered exclusively into the service of the Board. I mean to say, it is almost eight years since I commenced travelling. I suppose in that time I have rendered a service of about six years; having been detained nearly two years by sickness of my family and self. For more than thirty years I have been engaged, more or less directly, in the service of the Church, and I can sincerely say, I look back on no part of this period with so much satisfaction as that spent in distributing books and tracts. With renewed health, I am called, in the providence of God, to retire to a peaceful home. Who will take my place, and in the next eight years scatter abroad in every class of the community eight thousand dollars' worth of books and tracts? I am looking around in vain for a suitable person. It would seem there is now almost as much need for the work on the same field as when I commenced; and sure I am, there is as much encouragement. I have confined my visits to a small part of the State, scarcely all of the Cincinnati Synod. But what shall we say of the entire portions of the country untouched?

Thanks to the officers of our Board for all their kind, Christian, and gentlemanly treatment in our long correspondence. Though I have not seen them face to face, still I feel towards them as my best Christian friends.

I may, if I find leisure, give some statistical facts in regard to families visited, number of tracts distributed, number of books of a particular kind circulated, &c. This may encourage others. May the great Head of the Church still more abundantly bless the good cause in which you are engaged and multiply colporteurs till they fill the land, is the prayer of, Yours, sincerely, R. J. H.

We thank our dear brother for his kind letter, and pray that God may richly compensate him for all his self-denials and toils. We shall be pleased to receive from him the statistical information to which he has alluded: and avail ourselves of this opportunity to say, to all our colporteurs, that any communications from them respecting their labours will always be gratifying to us.

From the Presbyterian Advocate.

MR. WEBSTER AND A RELIGIOUS LITERATURE.

Whilst the civil constitution of our country opens the door to the widest diffusion of any and every error that may endanger our civil and religious welfare, it is a cause of gratitude that God, in his providence, has set in operation causes which are furnishing the appropriate antidote to them. It is a fact peculiar to this day, the existence of a widely diffused literature, that expands and illustrates the great principles of divine truth, of which the Bible is the source. Had there not existed, however, a corresponding desire for reading, it would have been in vain that books were multiplied, however good and cheap they might be. God has produced the corresponding taste to an extent that never existed before. He has made the system of Sabbath-School instruction popular throughout our country; so that the large proportion of the present generation has grown up under the influence of Bible instruction, and Sabbath-School libraries, which have given an impulse to a growing taste for self-instruction and reading. I remember to have heard it said twenty-five years ago, when the Sunday-School Union began to pour forth its cheap volumes, that many of the book publishers condemned it, under the impression that it was certain ruin to their business. There was, however, one publisher, whose farther reaching mind saw in it a system that would make us a nation of readers, and create an extensive taste for reading, and he favoured it as a means of producing a corresponding demand for book-making. All the facts since have fully demonstrated the correctness of his judgment. To satisfy this growing taste, and to turn it to the most valuable account, the General Assembly constituted its Board of Publication, and charged it with the commission of selecting the cream of the religious literature of the world, and publishing it for us at the lowest possible price. They have applied themselves most efficiently to this work, until their list of bound volumes has reached 350, which are full of the richest thought of the greatest and best men that have lived, and which are of the highest literary merit. These books form an invaluable religious library of themselves. Some of them defend and illustrate the doctrines taught in the Confession of Faith, that venerated formula which has been handed down to us, the unchanged bond of union in the Presbyterian churches for two hundred years. They are the authoritative expositions of the doctrines and order of the Presbyterian Church. Every book has been sanctioned by the General Assembly, and is sent forth as the standing literature of the Church, and adapted to correct the misrepresentation and misconceptions of all its doctrines, and to afford ample means to those who will improve them, for becoming rooted and grounded in the faith as it is in Jesus.

There is also an appropriate proportion of practical and devotional works, adapted to the edification of Christians; to fan the flame of piety in their hearts, and to encourage their faithfulness in all the practical duties of their holy calling. Others again address the strong and pungent appeal to the sinner, warning and encouraging him to flee from the wrath to come.

The Board of Colportage [of the Synod of Pittsburgh] tell us that they have scattered over their bounds 22,000 of those volumes in the habitations of thousands, where the seed of truth will vegetate and bring forth fruit in the conversion of some, in the quickening and growth of many, and in the increase of the power of the moral sentiment of our land. These reading habits, and this wholesome supply of truth to make it profitable, form a token for good. A people fortified with a knowledge of Bible truth, cannot be tangled in the meshes of infidelity or Popery, and can never be made to bow the neck to any despot.

The late Mr. Webster, after hearing an humble colporteur make a statement of his labours, took him by the hand, invited him to his house, and gave him $10, and said to him—"You have got hold of the right string, sir! If such books are not widely circulated among the masses in this country, and the people do not become religious, I do not know what is to become of us as a nation."

His mighty mind saw that this good seed scattered broadcast over the land, was directly adapted to cherish that high moral principle that forms the only sure basis of hope for its future security and prosperity. But if Mr. Webster, as a statesman, saw this work to be so important for the perpetuity of our country, how much must its importance magnify in the estimation of the Christian, when it is received in its relations to the glory of God, and the everlasting welfare of souls. That unobtrusive truth that is going forth is attracting multitudes to heaven, through the cheap printed page read in the leisure hours of retirement and reflection. Since there is this growing disposition to read divine truth, how important is it for the Church to enter into the heart of society, through all the avenues under her control, and supply it with pure Bible truth. This work our Board of Colportage is diligently and successfully prosecuting, and all who lend it a helping hand, whether directly or indirectly, are casting their bread upon the waters, and after many days it will be gathered again before the throne of God.

THE SIN-BEARER.

A minister in New York State, who belongs to the other branch of the Presbyterian Church, writes thus respecting Tract No. 77 on our Catalogue:

"There is need of such doctrine everywhere among us, almost as much as in Luther's time.

"The Sabbath before our last communion season, I placed a copy of it in each slip of our church, and I have been much interested since, in hearing remarks respecting it. One good sister said, with abundance of tears, that it was the first time that she ever came to the Lord's table without bringing something good. Another member, that he had at length consented to let Christ bear all his sins. Another, that he would give ten dollars for the tract, if he could not have it without. Another, (and I wish the hint might be acted on,) that it ought to be put into the form of a Pocket Manual."

NEW PUBLICATIONS OF THE BOARD.

The Grace of Christ; or Sinners Saved by Unmerited Kindness. By William S. Plumer, D. D. 12mo, pp. 454. Price 75 cents.

Dr. Plumer's preaching has always been distinguished for a large infusion of the essence of the gospel, and the same thing is prominent in this book. We do not know of any of the modern issues from the American press, which partake more largely of the spirit of the practical religious writings of the seventeenth century. There is a fine substratum of doctrine, upon which the author has built up a superstructure of such practical and experimental truth as is calculated to do the heart good. Whoever takes up the book with a desire to find Christ, and to have his spiritual man strengthened by the old substantial truths of the gospel, will find that he has not searched in vain. The author's plan covers the whole ground, from the lost condition of man by nature, to his entrance, through grace, into eternal glory, giving all the honour to the Author and Finisher of the work of salvation.

The following extract may serve as a specimen of the spirit and style of the work.

CHRISTIANS LONG TO SEE CHRIST.

In this life the saints look to the Saviour by faith; in the next they behold him by immediate vision. Here they see him through a glass darkly; there they see him face to face. The stronger their faith, the clearer the view they here have of him. Sometimes a sight of him even through a glass, is wonderful, and makes the soul like the chariots of Amminadib. Such a sight has often made God's people welcome whips, and chains, and dungeons, and death. But the vision of him in the next world will transcend all human conceptions. There he is not only glorious as on the mount of transfiguration; but he is as gentle, as kind, as tender as when he wept at the grave of Lazarus, gave eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, or granted mercy to a wretch hanging by his side. True, he weeps no more, but his present kindness soothes every sorrow in the hearts of his "hidden ones." Yea, his hand wipes all tears from their faces. Even the old disciple who groaned out his sixty years on earth, and the little infant redeemed by his blood, though it wept out its week of life, shall sigh no more for ever. His glory and his tenderness expel all sadness, bar all sorrows.

Here his people behold him in their closets. While they sit alone and keep silence, he speaks comfortably to them, he puts in his hand by the hole of the door. Jesus reveals himself to those who love secret devotion. He visits where his flocks rest at noon. Would you have clear views of Jesus? Lay aside your worldliness, enter into your chamber, and shut your door about you. If you but mingle with the crowd, you may look in vain for soul-transforming views of the Redeemer. Blessed Saviour, why is my heart so slow to seek thee in solitude? "While the King sitteth at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof." I must seek him more. I will hearken unto him, and walk in his ways; then he will soon subdue my enemies, then shall he feed me with the finest of the wheat, and with honey out of the rock shall he satisfy me. Lord, increase my faith.

It is also well to ascend the mount of ordinances, that we may see him in his beauty and glory. There he is held in his galleries. There he often manifests himself in the breaking of bread. In the songs of Zion, in public prayers, in gospel preaching, how gloriously does Christ often come and make his abode with his people, and fill their hearts with joy and peace! "Blessed are they that dwell in thy house; they will be still praising thee. * * A day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." Often do his saints go down from his house, satisfied as with marrow and fatness, when some word in season, borne to their hearts by the blessed Spirit, has been spoken by the servant of Christ.

Many get pleasant views of Christ in the valley of humiliation, which flows with wholesome waters abounds with precious fruits, and is the constant resort of our soul's Beloved. Some of the sights there seen, such as the evil of sin and the wickedness of our own hearts, are not pleasant; but these make a sight of Jesus the more ravishing. Every child of God finds great treasure in this valley. Some have thought it better than the mount of transfiguration, and would gladly abide there all their days; for there they see Jesus as they never see him anywhere else. The place suits them well.

We often get a blessed view of our Saviour, when we are in the furnace of affliction. Sometimes its heat is intense: but the hotter, the better, if Jesus be with us, and our faith fail not. When the furnace of Nebuchadnezzar was made seven times hotter than usual, and the three faithful Hebrews were cast into it, there was one seen walking with them, and "his form was like unto the Son of God." Many Christians declare that they never saw happier days than when adversity pressed hard upon them. This is just what Jesus promised: "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you." John xiv. 12.

But the brightest vision of Christ will be when "we shall see him as he is." The sight of husband, wife, child, parent, friend, or lover, never was so gladsome as the sight of the Saviour shall be. Blessed vision! The righteous long for it. To be with Christ, and like Christ, and to behold his glory, will constitute the heaven for which they hope. Though I should never see another pleasant sight in this world, may I at last behold that blessed face, which was buffeted for me. Once his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men. But when Paul saw him on the way to Damascus, he shined with a light, "above the brightness of the sun." And when John saw him, he fell at his feet as dead; but he laid his hand upon him saying, "Fear not; I am the first, and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. i. 17, 18. Lord Jesus, help me, intercede for me, comfort me, forsake me not, but bring me to behold thy face in righteousness.

RECORDS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH in the United States of America, embracing—I. The Minutes of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, from A. D. 1706 to 1716; II. Minutes of the Synod of Philadelphia, from A. D, 1717 to 1758; III. Minutes of the Synod of New York, from A. D. 1745 to 1758; IV. Minutes of the Synod of New York and Philadelphia, from A. D. 1758 to 1788. 8vo, pp. 548. Price $1.75.

This volume contains the earliest Records of our Church in America. The first edition having been exhausted, and the work for some time out of print, it has now been corrected from the original manuscripts, made more easy of reference, and stereotyped. Every minister of our Church should have a copy. It shall be sent by mail, postage prepaid, to ministers, for $1.75 cash; to others, for $2.10.

A PLAIN AND SCRIPTURAL VIEW OF BAPTISM. By the Rev. Daniel Baker, D. D., of Texas. 18mo, pp. 134. Price 19 and 25 cents.

This little volume cannot but be popular, especially in the south and south-west, where Dr. Baker's evangelical labours have been so much blessed. It fully answers to its title—it is plain and scriptural.

SABBATH DAY READINGS, or Children's Own Sabbath Book. By Julia Corner. Revised by the Committee of Publication. Square 16mo, pp. 208; illustrated with beautiful engravings. Price 60 and 65 cents, according to the binding.

This volume will be found highly attractive to the young. In size of type, fineness of paper, artistical embellishments, and cheapness of price, it will not suffer in comparison with any book brought out for the use of the young, by any publishing house in the country. It will do well for a gift-book at any season.

BIBLE RHYMES; or Sketches of Scripture History in Verse. Selected and arranged for the Board of Publication. 18mo, pp. 132. Price 27 and 33 cents. With numerous wood-cuts.

This volume contains ninety-seven pieces of poetry, descriptive of Scripture facts and characters.

THE CHILD'S CATECHISM OF SCRIPTURE HISTORY; in two volumes. 24mo. Vol. I. containing questions on Genesis to Numbers. Vol. II. containing questions on Deuteronomy to Judges. Price 10 cents a volume.

The questions are accompanied by the answers, and are adapted to the capacity of quite young children. They have met with much acceptance with parents and teachers who have adopted them in the instruction of the young.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ——, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

GEMS FOR THE CHRISTIAN'S CABINET.

Divine grace, even in the heart of weak and sinful man, is an invincible thing. Drown it in the waters of adversity, it rises more beautiful, as not being drowned indeed, but only washed; throw it into the furnace of fiery trials, and it comes out purer, and loses nothing but the dross which our corrupt nature mixes with it.—Leighton.

Believe, and you shall love; believe much, and you shall love much; labour for strong and deep persuasions of the glorious things which are spoken of Christ, and this will command love. Certainly, did men indeed believe his worth, they would accordingly love him; for the reasonable cannot but love that which it believes to be worthiest of affection. O this mischievous unbelief is that which makes the heart cold and dead towards God. Seek then to believe Christ's excellency in himself, and his love to us, and our interest in him, and this will kindle such a fire in the heart, as will make it ascend in a sacrifice of love to him.—Taylor.

The Heart.—O! heart! heart! what art thou? A mass of fooleries and absurdities; The vainest, foolishest, craftiest, wickedest thing in nature. And yet the Lord Jesus asks me for this heart, woos me for it, died to win it. O wonderful love! adorable condescension!

"Take it, Lord, and let it be, Ever closed to all but thee."

—Berridge.

Lord, if I must dispute, let it be with the children of the devil; let me be at peace with thy children.—Wesley.

I am nothing—Christ is all; I disclaim as well as disdain any righteousness but his. I not only rejoice that there is no wisdom for his people but that from above, but reject every pretension to any but what comes from himself. I want no holiness he does not give me; I could not accept a heaven he did not prepare for me. I can wish for no liberty but what he likes for me, and I am satisfied with every misery that he does not redeem me from; that in all things I may feel that without him I can do nothing.—Lady Huntingdon.

They who are not made saints in a state of grace, shall never be saints in glory. The stones which are appointed for that glorious temple above, are hewn and polished, and prepared for it here; as the stones were wrought and prepared in the mountains, for building the temple at Jerusalem.—Leighton.

It is a cold, lifeless thing to speak of spiritual things upon mere report; but they that speak of them as their own, as having share and interest in them, and some experience of their sweetness, their discourse of them is enlivened by firm belief and an ardent affection; they cannot mention them but their hearts are straight taken with such gladness, as they are forced to vent in praises."—Leighton.

When we consider how weak we are in ourselves, yea, the very strongest of us, and how assaulted, we may justly wonder that we can continue one day in a state of grace; but when we look on the strength by which we are guarded, the power of God, then we see the reason of our stability to the end; for Omnipotence supports us, and the everlasting arms are under us.—Leighton.

Solitude is a great cherisher of faith; were we more alone to pray and look back upon ourselves, and to look into ourselves—not to find any good, but to observe more of the amazing blindness of heart, unbelief, selfishness, and vile idolatry, which so benumb our feelings of the love of Christ; were we to be more alone for these purposes, we should enjoy more of the presence and joy of God.—Venn.

Thorns grow everywhere, and from all things below; and from a soul transplanted out of itself into the root of Jesse, peace grows everywhere too, from him who is called our peace, and whom we still find the more to be so, the more entirely we live in him, being dead to the world and self and all things besides him. Oh, when shall it be!—Leighton.

If thou have a concern for the things which are God's, he will also be careful of thee and thine.—Chrysostom.

Discordant Prayer.—To pray together, hearts must be consorted and tuned together; otherwise, how can they sound the same suits harmoniously? How unpleasant in the exquisite ear of God, who made the ear, are the jarring, disunited hearts that often seem to join in the same prayer, and yet are not set together in love! And when thou prayest alone, while thy heart is embittered and disaffected to thy brother, although upon an offence done to thee, it is as a mistuned instrument: the strings are not accorded, are not in tune among themselves, and so the sound is harsh and offensive. Try it well thyself, and thou wilt perceive it; how much more he to whom thou prayest! When thou art stirred and in passion against thy brother, or not lovingly affected toward him, what broken, disordered, unfastened stuff are thy requests? Therefore the Lord will have this done first—the heart tuned; go thy way, says he, leave thy gift, and be reconciled to thy brother; then come and offer thy gift.—Leighton.

Afflictions, desertions, and temptations, are as needful as consolations. Jonah's whale will teach a good lesson as well as Pisgah's top; and a man may sometimes learn as much from being a night or a day in the deep, as from being forty days in the mount. "I see Jonah come out of a whale and cured of rebellion: I see Moses go up into the mount with meekness, and come down in a huff and break the tables. Further, I see three picked disciples attending their Master into the mount and falling asleep there. It is well for you to be clothed in sackcloth while you tarry in the wilderness.

Look upwards and press forwards. Heaven's eternal hills are before you, and Jesus stands with arms wide open to receive you. One hour's sight and enjoyment of the Bridegroom in his place above will make you forget all your troubles on the way.—Berridge.

My time is short; I must be up and doing; I must go briskly on with my work, leaving it to my Lord to find me strength for it, and success in it. His blessing I expect here and for ever; not for anything I have done; and yet I would labour as hard as if heaven was to be the reward of my labours.—Romaine.

TO STATED CLERKS OF PRESBYTERIES.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly wishes us to inform the Stated Clerks of Presbyteries that he will furnish them with blanks for Presbyterial Reports, as they may order them. Blanks for Sessional Reports are not furnished by the Stated Clerk, but are published and for sale by the Board of Publication.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

As applications from young ministers and others for the back volumes of the Home and Foreign Record are now becoming frequent, we find it expedient to give the general notice, that no copies of the volume for 1850 are on hand of either edition. That we have still a few copies of the newspaper edition for 1851 and 1852, which can be had bound for 87½ cents each. We would suggest to those who have a copy of the volume for 1850, the propriety of preserving it, as in a few years it will be much sought after as a valuable depository of original information.

THE BORDER LAND.

The following lines were sent by a lady in England to a friend, who wrote to know where she had been for several months, that she had not written to her. She had been to the gates of the grave, in a long and severe illness.

I have been to a land, a Border Land,
Where there was but a strange, dim light;
Where shadows and dreams, in a spectral band
Seem'd real to the aching sight.
I scarce bethought me how there I came,
Or if thence I should pass again;
Its morning and night were marked by the flight,
Or coming, of woe and pain.

But I saw from this land, this Border Land,
With its mountain ridges hoar,
That they looked across to a wondrous strand,—
A bright and unearthly shore.
Then I turned me to Him, "the Crucified,"
In most humble faith and prayer,
Who had ransom'd with blood my sinful soul,
For I thought He would call me there.

Yet nay: for awhile in the Border Land
He bade me in patience stay,
And gather rich fruits, with a trembling hand,
Whilst he chased its glooms away;
He had led me amid those shadows dim,
And shown that bright world so near,
To teach me that earnest trust in him,
Is "the one thing needful" here.

And so from the land, the Border Land,
I have turned me to earth once more;
But earth and its works were such trifles, scann'd
By the light of that radiant shore.
And oh! should they ever possess me again
Too deeply, in heart and hand,
I must think how empty they seem'd, and vain,
From the heights of the Border Land.

The Border Land had depths and vales,
Where sorrow for sin was known;
Where small seem'd great, as weighed in scales,
Upheld by God's hand alone.
'Twas a land where earthly pride was naught,
Where the poor were brought to mind,
With scanty bed, and a fireless cot,
And their bread, so hard to find.

But little I heard in the Border Land
Of all that had passed below;
The once loud voices of human life
To the deafened ear were low.
I was deaf to the clang of its trumpet call,
And alike to its gibe or sneer,
Its riches were dust, and the loss of all
Would then scarce have cost a tear.

I met with a Friend in this Border Land,
Whose teachings can come with power
To the blinded eye, and the deafen'd ear,
In affliction's loneliest hour.
"Times of refreshing" to the soul,
In language, oft He brings,
Prepares it then to meditate
On high and glorious things.

O Holy Ghost! too often grieved
In health and earthly haste,
I bless those slow and silent hours
Which seemed to run to waste.
I would not but have passed those "depths,"
And such communion known,
As can be held in the Border Land
With Thee, and with Thee alone.

I have been to a land, a Border Land!
May oblivion never roll
O'er the mighty lessons which there and then
Have been graven on my soul!
I have trodden a path I did not know,
Safe in my Saviour's hand:
I can trust Him for all the future, now
I have been to the Border Land.

SO MANY CALLS.

It was a brisk, clear evening, in the latter part of December, when Mr. A—— returned from his counting-house to the comforts of a bright coal fire, and warm arm-chair, in his parlour at home. He changed his heavy boots for slippers, drew around him the folds of his evening gown, and then, lounging back in the chair, looked up to the ceiling, and about, with an air of satisfaction. Still there was a cloud on his brow. What could be the matter with Mr. A——? To tell the truth, he had that afternoon received in his counting-room the agent of one of the principal religious charities of the day, and had been warmly urged to double his last year's subscription; and the urging had been pressed by statements and arguments to which he did not know well how to reply. "People think," soliloquized he to himself, "that I am made of money, I believe. This is the fourth object this year for which I have been requested to double my subscription; and this year has been one of heavy family expenses—building and fitting up this house—carpets, curtains—no end to the new things to be bought—I really do not see how I am to give a cent more in charity. Then there are the bills for the girls and boys—they all say they must have twice as much now as before we came into this house. Wonder if I did right in building it?" And Mr. A—— glanced up and down the ceiling, and around on the costly furniture, and looked into the fire in silence. He was tired, harassed, and drowsy; his head began to swim, and his eyes closed—he was asleep. In his sleep he thought he heard a tap at the door; he opened it, and there stood a plain, poor-looking man, who, in a voice singularly low and sweet, asked for a few moments' conversation with him. Mr. A—— asked him into the parlour, and drew him a chair near the fire. The stranger looked attentively around, and then, turning to Mr. A——, presented him with a paper. "It is your last year's subscription to missions," said he. "You know all of the wants of that cause that can be told you. I called to see if you had anything more to add to it."

This was said in the same low and quiet voice as before; but, for some reason, unaccountable to himself, Mr. A—— was more embarrassed by the plain, poor, unpretending man, than he had been in the presence of any one before. He was for some moments silent, before he could reply at all, and then in a hurried and embarrassed manner, he began the same excuses which had appeared so satisfactory to him the afternoon before—the hardness of the times, the difficulty of collecting money, etc.

The stranger quietly surveyed the spacious apartment, with its many elegancies and luxuries, and without any comment, took from the merchant the paper he had given, but immediately presented him with another.

"This is your subscription to the tract society; have you anything to add to it? You know how much it has been doing, and how much more it now desires to do, if Christians would only furnish the means. Do you not feel called upon to add something to it?"

Mr. A—— was very uneasy under this appeal, but there was something in the mild manner of the stranger that restrained him; but he answered that, although he regretted it exceedingly, his circumstances were such that he could not, this year, conveniently add to any of his charities.

The stranger received back the paper without any reply, but immediately presented in its place the subscription to the Bible society, and in a few clear, forcible words, reminded him of its well known claims, and again requested him to add something to his donations. Mr. A—— became impatient.

"Have I not said," he replied, "that I can do nothing more for any charity than I did last year? There seems to be no end to the calls upon us in these days."

The stranger took back the paper, rose, and fixing his eye on his companion, said in a voice that thrilled to his soul,

"One year ago to-night, you thought your daughter lay dying; you could not sleep for agony. Upon whom did you call that night?"

The merchant started and looked up. There seemed a change to have passed over the whole form of the visitor, whose eye was fixed upon him with a calm, intense, penetrating expression, that awed and subdued him. He drew back, covered his face, and made no reply.

"Five years ago," said the stranger, "when you lay at the brink of the grave, and thought that if you died then, you should leave a family of helpless children entirely unprovided for. Do you remember how you prayed? Who saved you then?"

The stranger paused for an answer, but there was a dead silence. The merchant bent forward as one entirely overcome, and rested his head on the seat before him.

The stranger drew yet nearer, and said in a still lower and more impressive tone,

"Do you remember fifteen years since, that time when you felt yourself so lost, so helpless, so hopeless; when you spent days and nights in prayer; when you thought you would give the whole world for one hour's assurance that your sins were forgiven you? Who listened to you then?"

"It was my God and Saviour!" said the merchant, with a sudden burst of remorseful feeling; "O, yes, it was he!" "And has he ever complained of being called on too often?" inquired the stranger, in a voice of reproachful sweetness; "say," he added, "are you willing to begin this night, and ask no more of him, if he, from this night, will ask no more from you?"

"Oh, never, never!" said the merchant, throwing himself at his feet; but, as he spake these words, the figure seemed to vanish, and he awoke, with his whole soul stirred within him.

"O my Saviour, what have I been saying? what have I been doing?" he exclaimed. "Take all, take every thing! What is all that I have, to what thou has done for me?"—Selected.

GROWTH AND COMPARATIVE GROWTH OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (OLD-SCHOOL.)

The whole force of the Presbyterian Church in 1820, thirty-two years ago, reckoning to May 1852, the date of our last Minutes of the General Assembly, was 11 Synods and 58 Presbyteries, 741 ministers, 1299 churches, and 72,096 communicants; and total of collections as returned, $12,861.

In 1837, seventeen years after, the memorable year of the Division into Old and New-school—it was 23 Synods and 135 Presbyteries; 2140 ministers, 2865 churches, and 220,557 communicants, and total of collections for all objects $281,989. In 1839, when the lines of division were pretty accurately drawn, and our Minutes were adjusted with some certainty, the whole force of the Old-school was 17 Synods and 96 Presbyteries, 1243 ministers, 1823 churches, and 152,451 (estimated) communicants, (Min. of G. A. 1839, pp. 202, 274, 275,) and total of collections $134,436. Difference between this year and 1837, the year of division—6 Synods, 39 Presbyteries, 897 ministers, 1042 churches, and 68,106 communicants, and $147,553 collections, which may be set down as the loss occurring between these two years.

In 1840 we had 17 Synods and 95 Presbyteries, 1615 ministers, 1673 churches, and 126,583 communicants, and $173,498 collections. In 1852, 25 Synods, and 140 Presbyteries, 2039 ministers, 2733 churches, and 210,414 communicants, and $1,191,-107 collections.

Adopting the following geographical and ecclesiastical divisions, the relative growth of the different parts of the Church is seen for the last twelve years, namely, from 1840 to 1852.

I. The Middle States: New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware. And we add to them Maryland. These States had in 1840 5 Synods and 33 Presbyteries, (3 Presbyteries not counted, viz., Steubenville, St. Clairsville, and New Lisbon, because lying in Ohio: but the half of Washington Presbytery is reckoned in, because lying in Pennsylvania) 564 ministers, 639 churches, and 67,498 communicants: and in 1852, 6 Synods, 45 Presbyteries, 813 ministers, 840 churches, and 97,590 communicants: giving an increase of 1 Synod, 12 Presbyteries, 249 ministers, 201 churches, and 30,092 communicants.

II. The Southern and South-Western States, extending south of the Chesapeake Bay and Ohio River, and west of the Mississippi, from Missouri down to Texas: and embracing Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Missouri. These States had in 1840, 8 Synods, 38 Presbyteries, 482 ministers, 776 churches, and 43,601 communicants: (half the Presbytery of Washington, lying in Virginia, reckoned in, and so also for 1852.) And in 1852, 11 Synods, 51 Presbyteries, 750 ministers, 1167 churches, and 69,988 communicants: giving an increase in 12 years of 3 Synods 13 Presbyteries, 265 ministers, 891 churches, and 26,387 communicants.

III. The Western States: Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota Territory. In 1840, 4 Synods, 24 Presbyteries, (the 3 Presbyteries, Steubenville, St. Clairsville, and New Lisbon, lying in Ohio—although connected with the Synod of Pittsburgh—are reckoned, and also in 1852,) 252 ministers, 469 churches, and 24,932 communicants: and in 1852, 7 Synods, 40 Presbyteries, 461 ministers, 763 churches, and 43,080 communicants: giving an increase of 3 Synods, 16 Presbyteries, 209 ministers, 294 churches, and 18,148 communicants.

If we now make an aggregate of Synods, Presbyteries, ministers, churches, and communicants, in these divisions, the comparative increase of each will be as follows: in twelve years, while the Middle States, including Maryland, (the 5 Synods in 1840 of Albany, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Pittsburgh,) increased only 44.45 per cent., the Southern and South-Western States, (the 8 Synods of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, West Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, and Missouri,) increased 60.26 per cent.: and the Western States, (the 4 Synods of Ohio, Cincinnati, Indiana, and Illinois,) increased 72.7 per cent.

Thus the increase has been general over the whole Church: but the greater increase, the more rapid growth, has been southward and westward: and necessarily so, because the greater flow and increase of our population has been southward and westward —downward and across the continent. And this is but the beginning of the progress of our Church. It is borne on the vast tide of the nation! The greater increase of Synods, Presbyteries, ministers, churches, and communicants, must continue southward and westward. The mass and power of the Church will be moving towards what we may call the centre of our country.

Where now is the south? Formerly we measured, when we learned geography, from the St. John's north, to the St. Mary's south: from Maine to Georgia. But the St. Mary's is passed! where next? The Sabine. But the Sabine is passed! where next? The Rio Grande. We now measure from Maine to Texas.

Where now is the West? The Ohio River used to be west. But the Ohio is passed! where next? The Mississippi. But the Mississippi is passed! where next? The Rocky Mountains. But the Rocky Mountains are scaled! where next? The Pacific Ocean! We now measure from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Where is our centre? Taking the extreme limits, we are some 57° of longitude in breadth, and some 24° of latitude in length. Where the 95th degree of longitude cuts the 39th degree of latitude, is not far from our centre. And where is that? In the State of Missouri! Missouri is about our central State. And Independence, the city on her western border, called by many "the jumping off place," is about our central city. Our true centre lies west of Missouri! But our intercommunication is so complete and rapid that space is annihilated, and the points of the compass are nearly rubbed out. The nation is a unit, and so is the Church.

A kind Providence has given us a continent for a possession; nor must we omit to keep up in our knowledge of its geography, lest we think that we are the centre, and forget that there are a great many inhabitants upon it besides ourselves, and a great many interests besides our own and the little section we dwell in, that are to be considered and cared for. Our Church needs from the Lord—and never more than now—men of capacity, of largeness and generosity of mind, of freedom from prejudice, bigotry, and self-seeking; of sincere consecration to the glory of the Lord: men capable of devising and of executing great and liberal things, which shall not only embrace the present, but that which is to come. She needs these men in all her places, but especially in her high places.

One remark more—Let our Church, in laying her plans for missions, or for any other purposes, enlarge her views, and consider her increase, her comparative, and her prospective increase, in all parts of our widely extended country, and shape her measures, and her works, and her institutions, to meet it.

ROMAN CATHOLIC INTOLERANCE AGAIN.

Our readers will recall the account very recently published in the Record, of the assault upon Dr. Guistiniani by Roman Catholics, while engaged in the discharge of his public duties as a minister of the Gospel, in Cincinnati, Ohio. We did not anticipate another outrage of a similar kind so soon; indeed we had supposed another outrage would not occur again. But we were mistaken, and subjoin extracts from Dr. Guistiniani's Journal, giving a circumstantial account. Intolerance and persecution are part and parcel of Popery; they belong to it as essential attributes. Let not Protestants be deceived. Papists—at least the Popish priests—from the lowest to the highest, are enemies of civil and religious liberty, and consequently enemies of the People. They would deprive them, upon religious pretexts, of their Free Schools; discourage education, and reduce them to the condition of ignorant creatures, to be duped and oppressed, and used for their purposes at will. They would subject the circulation of the Scriptures to their own power, and grant or refuse permits to possess and read God's holy word, as they might see proper; and finally, they would, if they could, attain to that supreme dominion over men's persons, property, and souls, and lives, as to deal out imprisonment, ruin, and death, upon all who should dare to question or oppose them. We must never lose sight of these inherent tendencies, these essential elements of Popery, as a system, and ever remember that the Popish priests are the living, active agents of these things. Their conduct in our country, and all over the world, proves it. We sympathize with the people under their power, and wonder at the implicit faith exercised in them by some men of intelligence. Our duty is plain—to resist all their secret and wily attempts upon the free and liberal and Protestant institutions of our country, and that with boldness, and a determination to preserve our institutions at all hazard; and at the same time, to use every means, and to embrace every opportunity, to enlighten and guide them unto the truth as it is in Jesus, which alone can make "freemen indeed" of us all.

Dr. Guistiniani writes under date Cincinnati, April 4, 1853, and the extracts from his Journal are as follows:

February 23d. I was informed, that my church had been set on fire, and providentially a gentleman passed about half past ten o'clock in the night, who gave the alarm, and the fire was extinguished before any material injury was done. The Germans, who attend my church, were very much excited; but I begged them to be quiet.

March 13th. Sabbath evening, at the beginning of the service, a stone came into the church and broke two panes of glass. The excitement was very high, and I begged the Germans not to contemplate revenge; I entreated them, if they had the least esteem for myself and the truth I was proclaiming, to leave it in the hands of God.

March 27th. The enemy, encouraged by our patience and submission to the will of God, thought we were intimidated, and on the 27th, at our evening service, a gang of Irish Roman Catholics surrounded the church, broke the windows, and behaved like savages. After they had carried on their nefarious work, for nearly an hour, they threatened to kill that cursed apostate, as they pleased to call your missionary. This was done on Easter Sunday, after confession, and the reception of the sacrament of the Eucharist. In the midst of the confusion and panic of the female portion of the congregation, which was larger that evening than usual, it being Easter Sunday, I could not help smiling and admiring the spirit of one lady; (she is an American born, from the State of Pennsylvania, and proud can Pennsylvania be of such a daughter;) she said to those who were afraid: "Of what are you afraid—of these Roman Catholics? Come, let us surround the pulpit, protect our pastor, and rather die than leave him in the hands of these priest-ridden Romans." Many such tokens of sincere friendship, and demonstrations of real Christian attachment, I received from the Germans, who brought me safe to my dwelling. Our Presbyterian brethren took the matter into their hands, and the Roman priests will be sorry for having kindled a fire in the breast of the citizens of Cincinnati, which will not be soon quenched.

Our Mission, which has been the object of so much persecution and prayer, is, thank God! in a most flourishing state. We are ready to apply to the Presbytery of Cincinnati for a committee to organize us as a German Presbyterian congregation. We have, since the last report, established a Sabbath-school for adults, which is flourishing; the lowest number which we have had, was 107 persons. We have six Bible classes, usually ten in a class, among whom are a number of Roman Catholics, who attend both the Sabbath-school and preaching regularly, and make great progress in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Our weekly prayer meeting is well attended and well sustained.

LATEST NEWS FROM OREGON.

The following letter received on the 11th of April, is dated Marysville, Oregon Territory, February 15, 1853. It is from our esteemed missionary, Rev. J. A. Hanna, and gives the details of his present missionary life, which will be new to many and interesting to all our readers. The prices of things are very high, and of course living is high. Butter one dollar per pound, and cows one hundred dollars each! What would farmers say to such prices in this part of the world? But Brother Hanna has put his hand to the plough, and will not, by God's help, look back. His "own hands"—literally are "ministering to his necessities." The Board of Missions will not suffer him to lack anything necessary, either for his encouragement or his support. We must have some missionaries soon in Washington Territory.

"Presbytery is to meet in Portland on the 6th of June; at that time we hope to forward the recommendation of Presbytery for the amount necessary for another year. We are willing to have it just as low as we can possibly stand it. Indeed, it is a matter of surprise that we are able to get along at the present enormous prices, with such limited means.

The following prices are now current in Marysville:—Flour $25 per hundred, potatoes $4 per bushel, beef 16 cts. per lb., pork has sold for 50 cts. per lb., butter $1, coffee 33 cts., salt 12½ cts. per lb., &c. Cows are selling at $100 each; I had to buy at this price. I have sold my carriage and harness, in order to procure the comforts of life. We are trying to live economically and prudently.

My field of labour is Marysville and vicinity, it is considered an important field. The Territorial University is located in this place, the Baptists and Methodists have a church organization here, and each have services once a month. There are three members of the Presbyterian Church residing within four miles of the village. We may be able to organize a church next summer. We have great difficulty in collecting a congregation in the winter, on account of the rain and floods, &c. This community generally are very negligent on the subject of their souls' salvation. The Sabbath is desecrated; intemperance and gambling are very prevalent. The prevalence of these evils is truly alarming. But we hope for better days. May the Lord bless his own work and promote his own cause.

I have procured about a quarter of a section of land, two and a half miles south of the village, it is beautiful and fertile prairie, there is a little firewood on it, but no rail timber. I am building a little frame house, 16 feet by 18, one story, with a porch in front—mechanics' labour is from $3 to $5 per day. I am not able to pay this price, hence I am obliged to do the work myself, I have my lumber sawed, and my timber hewed, and I am now engaged in riving and shaving the shingles, I expect to have it completed by the first of May.

I request an interest in your prayers. Oh that we may have the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous for the spread of the gospel in this Territory!

Mrs. Hanna and I enjoy very good health and are contented, and, I trust, willing to engage in the service of our Master. Affectionately yours,

J. A. Hanna."

CIRCULAR OF THE WESTERN EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD.

Close of the year.

We publish below the Circular of our Western Executive Committee, calling upon Presbyteries, and members of Presbyteries, for information preparatory to the introduction of more missionaries in the field. If the information called for can be fully and accurately given it will be of great value to the committee. The great difficulty to be encountered is the procurement of missionaries. Where are they to come from? The graduates from all our Theological seminaries this spring—were they all to become Domestic Missionaries—would be scarcely supply sufficient for a few States only! Our Church is beginning to feel this want. We are happy to state, that the Board of Missions will close the year with a prosperity that will be pleasing to the Assembly, and to the Church at large; and which we trust may inspire us with gratitude to Him from whom all our mercies flow: and awaken in our bosoms new interest in our missionary work. Our brethren of the Western Executive Committee have been faithfully and energetically occupied during the year.

BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Mission Rooms,
Louisville, Ky., April, 1853.

Rev. and Dear Sir:—The Board of Missions, after several months of painful embarrassment, having closed their year free of debt, with a balance in their Treasury, the Western Executive Committee desire to make an effort to introduce more Missionaries into the field covered by their operations, as fast as suitable men can be found, and the funds provided to sustain them. To enable them to do this, they wish to gain an exact knowledge of all the vacant Churches and most prominent points for building up self-sustaining Churches in each Presbytery. Will you forward to my address, immediately after your Presbytery meets, (or before it, if you have the information desired,) an exact and concise description of all the fields of labour in your Presbytery in which Missionaries may be employed, with the hope of building up Churches which will eventually be able to sustain themselves, and to send the Gospel to the regions beyond. State the character and number of the population of each; how much they would probably raise to support the gospel among them; whether they have houses of worship and organized churches; and all information upon any other point which it may be desirable for the Committee to have. Put it into as concise a form as possible, that we may embody it in a circular, and send it to all the Theological Seminaries which close their sessions early in May, and to such ministers as we may know to be seeking fields of labour. A speedy answer is desired. By order of the Committee.

W. W. HILL, Secretary.

CHARTER OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

We frequently have occasion to answer inquiries about the charter of the Board of Education, and therefore publish the same in full, in the present number of the Record.

CHARTER OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

To all to whom these presents shall come.

KNOW YE, That whereas the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America have a Board of Education, composed of Ministers and Laymen, members of the Presbyterian Church, the design of which is to afford aid to poor and pious young men of good talents, to procure a liberal education, as preparatory for the Gospel ministry in the Presbyterian Church; and whereas the aforesaid Board of Education labours under serious disadvantages, as to receiving donations and bequests, and as to the management of funds intrusted to them for the purpose designated in their Constitution, and in accordance with the benevolent intentions of those from whom such bequests and donations are received.

Therefore, Matthew L. Bevan, Stephen Colwell, Joseph B. Mitchell, Joel Jones, Alexander W. Mitchell, John McDowell, Francis McFarland, Henry A. Boardman, and Thomas L. Janeway, citizens of the United States, and of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and their successors, are hereby constituted and declared to be a body politic and corporate, which shall henceforth be known by the name of "The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America;" and as such, shall have perpetual succession, and be able to sue and be sued in all courts and elsewhere; and to purchase and receive, take and hold, to them and their successors for ever, lands, tenements, hereditaments, money, goods, and chattels, and all kinds of estate which may be demised, bequeathed, or given to them, and the same to sell, alien, demise, and convey; also to make a common seal, and the same to alter and renew at their pleasure; and also to make such rules, by-laws, and ordinances, as may be needful for the government of the said Corporation, and not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and of this State: Provided always, that the clear yearly value of the real and personal estate held by the said Corporation, shall not, at any time, exceed the sum of two thousand dollars.

The Trustees above named shall hold their offices one year from the date of this incorporation, and until their successors are duly qualified to take their places, who shall be chosen by the aforesaid Board of Education, at such times, and in such way and manner as shall be provided by the said General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America: Provided, that not more than one-third of the Trustees shall be removed in any one year.

The Trustees hereby incorporated, and their successors shall, subject to the direction of the said Board of Education, have full power to manage the funds and property committed to their care, in such manner as shall be deemed most advantageous, not being contrary to law.

Pennsylvania, ss. Secretary's Office.

Enrolled in Charter Book No. 6, pages 442, 443, and 444, containing a record of sundry religious, literary, and other charitable institutions.

Witness my hand and seal of the said office at Harrisburgh, this 18th day of February, A. D. 1841.

(Signed) FRANCIS R. SHUNK,
Secretary of Commonwealth.

AMENDMENT TO THE CHARTER.

2. That the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America be and they are hereby authorized and empowered to take, receive and hold to them and their successors for ever, lands, tenements, hereditaments, moneys, goods, and chattels, and all kinds of estate which may be devised, bequeathed, or given to them, for the purpose of aiding Schools, Academies, and Colleges, or the cause of Education generally: Provided, that the clear yearly value of the real and personal estate held by the said Corporation shall not, at any time, exceed the sum of five thousand dollars.

Approved, the tenth day of April, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, as the same remains on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Secretary's office, to be affixed at Harrisburgh, the second day of August, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

E. S. GOODRICH,
[SEAL.] Deputy Secretary of Commonwealth.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

WHAT MUST WE DO?

In devoutly acknowledging the sovereignty of God, the Presbyterian Church must use the necessary means, according to Scripture, providence, and reason, for raising up a seed to serve Him in the sanctuary. And in view of the causes which serve to explain her failure at the present time, our Church must discharge the correlative duties incumbent upon her, as preliminary to a suitable supply of the right kind of men.

Among the things, then, to be done, the Church must

REPENT OF THE SINS which have dimmed the lustre of her candlestick;

Labour to promote A REVIVAL OF PURE AND UNDEFILED RELIGION;

Attend more faithfully to HOUSEHOLD DEDICATION AND HOUSEHOLD TRAINING;

Renew her zeal in ESTABLISHING MORE INSTITUTIONS for the education of her youth, AND INSTITUTIONS OF A HIGH RELIGIOUS CHARACTER;

Unfold by her PUBLICATIONS the nature of a call to the ministry, the claims and dignity of the ministerial office, &c., and GIVE LIGHT on the doctrines and facts embraced in the right understanding of this whole subject;

Invite PASTORAL FIDELITY to seek out promising youth, and to guard the interests of the sacred office by the various methods open to its influence, in the pulpit and in private;

Furnish a COMPETENT WORLDLY SUPPORT to those who preach the word of life; and to INDIGENT YOUNG MEN OF MERIT in their preparatory course of education;

And, above all, the Church must PRAY to the Lord of the harvest, with an importunity that wrestles for the greatness of the blessing.

God does not give great things to a people who are contented with small things. Our Church must thoroughly awaken to her work, and do the things to be done; and then she may confide in the promises of her glorious Head, and going forth with the presence of his almighty grace, "preach the gospel to every creature."

OUR ABOUNDING DESTITUTIONS.

Our Church has not ministers enough for her work. Every Synod needs an accession, which cannot be obtained in the present paucity of candidates and of ordinations. As a specimen of our wants, let the following extract be read from a letter from North Carolina, addressed to the Editor of the Watchman and Observer.

"Really, the destitution in this region is becoming alarming. Ministers are dying out and moving off faster than others are coming forward to take their places. If God does not speedily bless the labours of those of us who are left, there is no help for us. Every head of a family ought to bear the burden in every morning and evening sacrifice. We want more ministers, and we want better ministers than we have ever yet had. In fact, we need men formed exactly, and in all respects, (inspiration and the power of working miracles alone excepted,) upon the Apostolical model. Very much the same work is now to be done as was done by them, and we want men as full of the power of God and the graces of the Holy Spirit to do it. We want preachers—preachers who shall distinctly, explicitly, and practically recognize as the great end of their office, the duty of labouring for the glory of God, in the salvation of souls. Unless souls are saved, there will be no candidates for the ministry, and unless pastors and churches labour and pray, as they are certainly not doing now, it would be rank presumption to expect God's blessing. 'This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.' And it is high time we were all on our knees before God—or we are undone. As far as I am acquainted with the state of the Church, there seems to me to be a most deplorable lack of that separation from the world in its spirit and customs which the Christian profession implies. There is a sort of average piety with which the Church is content, and on which it seems willing enough to sit down satisfied. We must get above this—or wo to us and our children. There is no use, and to me it seems the foolishest of all things for the whole Church and country to blame the Seminary and its professors for the state of things there, and not to realize the state of things among themselves. The whole Church, ministry and all, need a thorough sifting and shaking. We are getting like Ezekiel's valley of dry bones—and a mighty voice must come to awaken us and give us life."

PREACHING AND TEACHING.

In the March number of the Record, we inserted an article from the "Watchman and Observer," giving a number of reasons why ministers should, under certain circumstances, engage in teaching, whilst employed in their ministerial work. It is obvious that, as a general rule, the union of the two professions is impracticable. Circumstances, however, may arise which would fully justify a minister in establishing a school. The question of personal duty in reference to this matter, is one that cannot be decided on abstract principles.

The following communication, in reply to the article copied into the March Record, was received too late for the April number. In giving it a place in the present number of the Record, we may say that, although it contains suggestions worthy of consideration, we do not think it meets every case that may arise. As an article from one of our Theological Seminaries, it will be read by many with additional interest.

Princeton Theological Seminary, March 18th, 1853.

Dear Sir.—I noticed in the Record for this month, (March), an article on teaching and preaching. I read it once, twice, and the third time it received a decided negative.

The late lamented Dr. Chalmers, once in early life, advanced publicly the following opinion: "I know of no man who has so much leisure time on his hands as a young clergyman." He thought this time might be advantageously taken for the pursuit of science and literature in general. At a later period in his ministry, before a public audience, he used these words: "The peculiar business of a minister's profession, demands all the time, all the talents, and all the energy that any minister is possessed of." He was reminded of what he had publicly uttered on a previous occasion. He paused, stood a moment—"I was wrong; I said it, then I thought so, my reasoning at that time was right, but the result entirely wrong, for I now see that I had left out two elements essential to the problem; these elements were the value of the soul and the length of eternity." (Note 1.) Now, it is evident "a young minister" may err, even though he is a gifted one and "labours for Zion," and "loves the brethren." This we are ready to admit and bless God for it; but because his shoulders can bear the gates of Gaza, let him not lay on common men's shoulders a burden which neither we nor our fathers could bear. (Note 2.)

He says, "It will increase their influence and comfort." We answer, high attainments and whole-souled devotion to their vocation will increase their influence. "Comforts" we wave, ready to endure hardness as good soldiers. (Note 3.)

3d. "Good schools," &c., "restless beings," "calling themselves teachers, are everywhere." Some few good teachers, in all charity, may it please the brother, young men of liberal education, of due quantum of brain for steadiness, men of high aim, of correct moral principle, some of vital piety. Of these, there are those who so far as matters of science are concerned, are what they are called, "teachers"—teachers too, second to few, if any, in the desk or out of it, except college Professors in their own departments. Such were many of those, now here in the Seminary, of the best too that we have, who would not fear to measure swords with any who have not devoted their lives to the subject. Besides, who does not know that teachers are now "in training" all over the land who are to give themselves wholly to this thing, and it is a worthy calling; but, "let him that teacheth wait on teaching." He has enough before him. (Note 4.)

4th. "Time enough and to spare, which is otherwise 'almost' lost!" If Methuselah were alive, and if with the intellect of a Webster, he never grew weary, and required no intermission for sleep; even then, he would find no time "almost" lost. Enough could be found to fill every moment, and then, at life's close he might grow wiser, very much wiser. Time "'almost" lost! these days, when men ride by steam, and write by lightning, and think faster than them both. When every moment souls are droping into eternity, and waking up, not in heaven, in hell. Then, time "almost lost" on the hands of those whose business it is to "rescue" and colonize heaven! Strange thought! Nay, 'twas an inadvertence. Why, what is a minister? Not merely a man who now and then, regularly if you please, stands up in "the desk" and reads a sermon or delivers one extempore. A minister does that, but all who do that are by no means ministers. A minister is "a chief servant," a chief servant of God; "one to whom a king or prince intrusts the direction of affairs of state." The King, Immanuel the Prince of life. Again, a minister is "an ambassador, the representative of a sovereign at a foreign court." The Christian minister is the ambassador of God—the representative for the Sovereign of the universe, with delegated authority. Read the commission—"As my Father sent me, even so send I you," are the words of Christ. To whom was given "all power in heaven and in earth." A high commission. Paul spoke of magnifying the office—of laying aside every weight—not surely then of taking on some "grievous to be borne." Again, a minister is a messenger, a messenger from God. To God, not to man, accountable, commissioned for a time, limited, soon personally to return that commission and answer for himself at the high tribunal, nor for himself alone, that answer. Food for thought. (Note 5.)

5th. "Drawing nothing from her (the Church's) funds for their own support." Is money of greatest worth? Lay a single soul by the side of the highest salary, hold them there, till you have time to weigh them. Besides, the money of the Church belongs to God. In "fee simple" all her wealth is His. It is held by men in this world only in "trust," with the command, "Occupy till I come." If then, those who have, withhold it from the supply of the necessary wants of God's ambassador, they are accountable. There is in the minds of some, a false sensitiveness on this point. Let the minister give himself wholly to his work, and he will not want. Let him get into his own mind and heart, the great Bible truths, let him meditate till he feels that he is "a stranger and sojourner," feels it intensely, and then others will feel it and will cling not quite so closely to wealth on earth, hoping to hoard up somewhat of treasure in heaven. Let the minister in thought, in feeling, in affection, live there, and then coming back here, tell of that country in such glowing language, that people will think about setting out to colonize it, then let him, going before, pilot the way, and through the desert his bread and his water shall be sure. Men who feel that they are travellers and that the close of the journey is near, will give, they will give to God if they expect very soon to see him, very soon to finish the journey. Then let the ambassador of Heaven do his duty, let him think, ponder well his commission; his responsibility; his "crown," and see to it "that no man take it." Let the soul first be filled full with "inspirations, teachings." Then by prayer let the spirit make all burn and glow intensely. Then you will fill the pulpit, and God will fill his house, and sinners, penitent, trembling, believing, and rejoicing, will fill the Church. Yes, be teachers; teachers teaching the way to heaven, and the way to flee hell; and those with you bound for heaven will not think it burdensome to supply you till you all reach "the city." 'Tis not very far off. (Note 6.)

O my soul, art thou "called of God," commissioned from the high court of Heaven. Then be vigilant; honour thy Master and he will soon honour thee. Look not back—look forward, and with eye on the prize, press on, yea, take heed to the ministry, which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it.

I close, having written far more than I at first intended, "but who can refrain himself" on this soul-engrossing topic. I close, repeating to myself and to every ambassador for God—ponder well the value of the soul and the length of eternity. Give "all the time, all the energy, all the talents thou hast," and all thou canst acquire unto God, then "well done," shall meet thine ear when God is near thee, and the angels and the redeemed looking on. . . May this sentence, O my soul, "well done," meet thine ear on that day, and thou shall be of the glorious of heaven: for "to him that overcometh" ease, love of the world, pride, self-will, I grant to sit on my throne. Let others, who have not the vows on them that rest on thee, be hewers in the mountains, but do thou aim to be a master workman in the upbuilding of the temple of God. (Note 7.)

A LICENTIATE.

(Note 1.) It is certain that, in our congregations generally, ministers have not time to engage in teaching. But there are some congregations where the question might be fairly asked, whether, under all the circumstances, a minister could not do more for God, by engaging, to some extent, in the work of education. Dr. Chalmers was a man of such practical good sense, that he would never think of deciding all questions of duty abstractly. His remark is unquestionably a true one, in the general sense intended.

(2.) "Which our fathers could not bear!" This is an unfortunate allusion. The fathers cheerfully bore the burden, and esteemed it a privilege. Think of Tennent, Blair, Finley, Dickinson, Burr, Graham, the Smiths, Rice, Alexander, Caldwell, Doak, Hall, McCorkle, McMillan, &c. These fathers did quite as much good preaching as any ministers that ever lived, and yet did great things at teaching. They bore the burden and heat of the day, and quitted themselves like men.

(3.) The "comforts of those who preach and teach can be only such as belong to persons ready to endure hardness as good soldiers.

(4.) Good teachers are not very numerous, after all.

(5.) These thoughts are excellent and spirit-stirring; and yet some of our ministers find a good deal of time for useful things, in connection with ministerial labour. Some of our very best pastors find time to teach; others to write books, &c. The writer of the article in the March Record is not a whit behind the best of his brethren in ministerial service.

(6.) There is much suffering among our ministers in regard to temporal things. And if, by teaching a school, a minister can support himself and family, in addition to the good done to the youth instructed, and can at the same time preach, and discharge ordinary ministerial duties, few will be disposed to blame him. He must decide the question for himself, in view of all the circumstances of the case.

(7.) The great motive which would influence a minister in teaching, is the salvation of the souls of the youth. "Feed my lambs" is not foreign to the commission "Feed my sheep," but identical with it. A self-denying servant should be ready for any service to which the providence of God may call him. If an excellent opportunity presents itself to train the rising generation in a Christian institution, he may do more for the Church of Christ by adding that burden to his labours than by declining to bear it. As a "hewer upon the mountains," he may gain skill in selecting materials for the temple; and if he have the true spirit of his Lord and Master, he may accomplish much in many a wise way, teaching included, collateral to his main work, but subservient to it.

Our object, in making these remarks, is not to encourage an indiscriminate union of the two departments of preaching and teaching—either one of which is in all ordinary cases enough to tax the time and talents of the best—but simply to urge that the question of duty ought to be decided by circumstances, as they may occur in the Providence of God. In heathen lands, our ministers lay out a large portion of their strength in personally educating the youth. We think they are wise in doing so. In our own country, teaching may also be wisely connected with the ministerial work in many instances, as in times past. We are glad to be able to fortify this opinion by the authority of one, who knew much about preaching, and much about teaching—the late ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER, D. D. This venerable servant of Christ has left on record his sentiments, as follows:

"Now while so much is said about parochial schools, I have an idea to suggest, which is, that the pastors of feeble churches teach these schools themselves. If the children are to be instructed in the doctrines of our Church, by whom can this be done better than by the pastor? Is not this the most effectual method of imbuing the minds of the children of the Church with sound principles of religion? If a pastor instruct only occasionally by catechising, even if once a week, the opportunity of instilling the precious truths of the gospel into the youthful mind is inconsiderable; but if he has access to their minds every day in the year, great progress might be made. And if the pastor's wife were such as she ought to be, she could aid him in teaching the younger children; and especially the little girls. We may learn a lesson from the course pursued at all our foreign missionary stations, where the missionary and his wife are both employed in teaching. After some time, the pastor might get an assistant, and confine his own labours to a select number of the older scholars. And if it should be inconvenient to the pastor's wife to assist in teaching, a pious young woman might be employed."

We are convinced that there is great wisdom in these suggestions. We know of a feeble church near this city, which could not be supplied with the preaching of the gospel except through the school, taught by its minister. Similar cases, no doubt, exist in all our Synods. Probably three hundred of our ministers are engaged, more or less, in teaching; and almost all these preach on the Sabbath, as pastors, and stated or occasional supplies, and do great good in their fields of labour. As a general rule, we are ready to admit that a minister had better confine his attention exclusively to his peculiar work.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

CHURCH SCHOOLS.

Christian education, like secular education, cannot be sustained without funds. School-houses cost money, and the salaries of teachers must be paid. If our children are to be trained up in the ways of piety and truth, we must be willing to pay for it. And is there any better way of spending money than in the training of the rising generation?

Many of our feeble churches need aid in sustaining schools under their care. The donation of Five Thousand Dollars, lately made for the cause of Christian education, has held out hope to a number of churches, which otherwise would not have been able to move in the matter. We are happy to state that within the last three months twenty-two applications have been made to the Board of Education for aid in establishing new schools.

CHURCH HILL ACADEMY, TEXAS.

The Presbytery of Eastern Texas are making laudable endeavours to elevate the standard of education within their bounds. At their semi-annual meeting in April, 1852, they determined upon the establishment of an institution of learning to be entirely under their own control. At their meeting in October last, the location of the institution was fixed upon; trustees were appointed, and arrangements made to have a suitable edifice built by January, 1853. Three individuals—Mr. John Robertson, Mr. John Stronge, and Mr. Samuel Wasson—in whose vicinity the institution is located, were intrusted with the superintendence of the work. These liberal, noble-hearted men, donated to Presbytery twenty acres of land, and have erected upon it a beautiful house, which will henceforth be known by the name of Church Hill Academy. The business of the Academy commenced on the first Monday in February. The twenty acres of land upon which the edifice is built, form part of a large tract purchased last autumn by the three individuals before mentioned. This tract they design selling out in lots for business houses and family residences, and devoting the proceeds of the sales (except what will amount to what they paid for the land) to the benefit of the Academy, and to building a Presbyterian Church. And in order to prevent, in future, the establishment of grog-shops and billiard-tables, they will exercise the strictest care in the sale of these lots, and will stipulate in the deed that, should the purchaser establish either, he shall forfeit his claim to the land.

Church Hill Academy is located in Rusk county, about nine miles east of Henderson, the county seat. No better site could have been chosen than the spot where the edifice now stands. It is retired and remote from every thing calculated to corrupt the morals of youth, and draw off their attention. The hill upon which the Academy is built commands a lovely view of the surrounding country, and is in the midst of a region at once picturesque, fertile, well-watered, and beautiful.—Southern Presbyterian.

LAFAYETTE COLLEGE.

We have watched with much interest the movements of Lafayette College, and of the Synod of Philadelphia in relation to it, since it became a Synodical Institution. Though the scheme by which it was proposed to raise an endowment of one hundred thousand dollars, was regarded by many as altogether impracticable, we never entertained a serious doubt but that the amount would be secured. It would be very extraordinary, if the large body of thorough Presbyterians embraced in the Synod would not liberally sustain and endow their own Synodical College. We are gratified to learn that nearly or quite three quarters of the proposed sum is actually subscribed, and that the President of the College, and the cause he advocates, are received with increasing favour by the churches.

The friends of the Institution will also learn, with pleasure, that an important addition has just been made to the Faculty. The Rev. Joseph Alden, D. D., for a number of years a highly popular Professor in Williams College, Massachusetts, has been appointed to the department of Mental and Moral Philosophy; and Trail Green, M. D., a former Professor in Lafayette, and afterwards, for several years, in Marshall College, to that of Chemistry and Natural Science. Both these gentlemen are expected to enter upon their duties immediately. Dr. Alden is regarded as eminently qualified for the department in which he is placed. He was a student of Princeton Seminary, and was licensed, we believe, by the Presbytery of New York. Though called to labour for a time in a most important sphere of usefulness, without the bounds of the Presbyterian Church, he has always been thoroughly with the Old-school branch of the Church in doctrine and feeling; and returns to its bosom, as we are assured, with sincere pleasure. He spent the last year in Europe, mainly on account of the health of his family; which, though greatly improved, requires a residence in a milder climate than that of Massachusetts. But for this providence, Lafayette College might have been unable to secure his valuable services.

Dr. Green, we understand, is quite an enthusiast in the department to which he has been called; and has always been eminently successful as an instructor.

With these gentlemen, together with Dr. McLean, the present efficient head of the Institution, Professors Coffin and Burrowes, who have few superiors in the departments of Mathematics and Languages, young men will find great advantages at Lafayette. —Presbyterian.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

The Presbyterians of North Carolina lately undertook to endow Davidson College on the scholarship plan. The result of the effort is thus given in the Southern Presbyterian:

"The efforts to secure the proposed endowment on the scholarship plan, have been crowned with complete success. Over 400 scholarships have been sold, besides a donation of $25,000 by Mr. Maxwell Chambers, of Salisbury, North Carolina. This will give, together with funds already invested, over $100,000 at interest for the support of the institution. The number of students is fast increasing.

"At a Convention of the Presbyteries of Concord, Fayetteville, and Bethel, held at Charlotte, on the 3d of November, Rev. James B. Gilland, of Fairfield, S. C., and and Mr. Benjamin F. Hendrick, of North Carolina, were elected, the former to the chair of Languages, and the latter to that of Mathematics, in the place of Professors S. B. O. Wilson, and M. D. Johnston, resigned.

M'DONOUGH COLLEGE, ILLINOIS.

The Synod of Illinois, at its last sessions, accepted the charter of McDonough College, which had been tendered them, and made arrangments for appointing Trustees and raising an endowment, and also for selecting another location, unless it should be endowed at Macomb, its present site. A meeting was held at Peoria, Illinois, on the 22d ult., with a view to securing the removal of the College to that place, at which a plan of endowment was adopted on the principle of scholarships, at four hundred and seven hundred dollars each—the former entitling the donor to send one student perpetually, tuition free, and the latter to send two. The correspondent who communicates these facts states that,

"In a short time seventy-five scholarships were taken by the most reliable citizens of that place, by which an endowment of $30,000 was at once secured, for a Presbyterian College at Peoria. If the Synod should accept of this proposal, as it doubtless will, and in addition to obtaining scholarships throughout their entire bounds, will raise ten thousand dollars for the purpose of erecting suitable College buildings; there will be no difficulty in raising five thousand dollars more among the citizens of Peoria, for the same object; and fifteen thousand dollars will defray the expense of erecting a central building, or a wing, in which the operations of the College may be commenced under most auspicious circumstances."—Presbyterian.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 CENTRE STREET, NEW YORK.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions will be held at the Mission House, New York, on Monday, May 2, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

The Rev. William T. Hamilton, D. D., of Mobile, Alabama, is appointed to preach the Annual Sermon before the General Assembly. The Rev. John C. Backus, D. D., of Baltimore, is the alternate preacher.

A Sermon for the Board will also be preached in the Church on Fifth Avenue and Nineteenth street, New York city, by the Rev. Thomas Smyth, D. D., of Charleston, South Carolina, and an Abstract of the proceedings of the last year presented, on the Sabbath evening preceding the meeting of the Board.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

MISSION HOUSE, April 13, 1853.

INDIAN MISSIONS.—A letter of the Rev. W. H. Templeton, dated March 15, mentions the admission to the church at Kowetah, Creek Mission, of two of the scholars, the application for admission of three others, and the deep seriousness of feeling of all except two or three. Two more of the scholars at Tallahassee had also united with the church at that station. Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, Miss Bowen, and Mr. and Mrs. Junkin, had been compelled to leave the Creek Mission on account of health; and Mr. McKinney and his family were expecting for the same reason to leave the Omaha and Otoe Mission. Mr. J. Harvey Nourse, teacher, and his wife, appointed to Spencer Academy; Mr. James C. Dillett, teacher, and his wife, appointed to the Omaha and Otoe Mission; Miss Anna H. Turner, teacher, appointed to Wappanucka, Chickasaw Mission, and Miss Mary Jane Wilson, teacher, appointed to Boggy Depot, in the same Mission; and Mr. Alexander McEwen, farmer, appointed to Tallahassee, Creek Mission, are on their journey to their several stations. We would commend them to the sympathy of the churches, and ask for them the prayers of all who feel an interest in their great object.

AFRICAN MISSIONS.—We have received letters dated at Monrovia, to January 20, at Kentucky, January 21, and at Corisco to December 15. The brethren were enjoying usual health, and going on steadily in their work. Mr. McQueen had spent a few days at Monrovia early in December, on his way to Corisco. At Kentucky nine members had been received in the church, who live at Millsburg, a neighbouring settlement. They had been formerly members of the church in North Carolina. The little church edifice at Kentucky fell down during the communion service, and the congregation had barely time to make their escape. They are making a spirited effort to rebuild it, but need very much the sum of $200 from this country to effect their purpose, which we hope they will receive. Moneys for this object will be forwarded, if sent to the Mission House.

INDIA MISSIONS.—Letters have been received from Lahor, to February 4; Lodiana, to January 17; Saharunpur, February 4; Futtehgurh, to February 4; Mynpurie, to January 20; Agra, to January 28; Allahabad, to January 15. Mr. Morrison and his family had reached Lahor, and Mr. Williams had reached Futtehgurh, on his way to Agra. The Rev. Gopeenath Nundy was about to remove from Futtehgurh to Futtehpore, the new station of the Allahabad Mission. This measure was considered important by both missions, as well as by our native brother himself, who was formerly a resident at Futtehpore, and understands well its importance as a missionary station. Mr. Munnis was expecting to return to this country, his health not having become better. Several of the brethren were making missionary journeys, preaching and distributing the Scriptures and Tracts. And the usual work at the stations was going on well. The missionaries at Futtehgurh continued to give instruction to the inhabitants of the neighbouring village of Akutganj. "Some four or five of the pandits or teachers, and some others, appeared to be inquiring the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward."

SIAM MISSION.—The Rev. S. Bush arrived at this city on the 19th of March, after a short and comfortable voyage, with health much improved. A letter of the Rev. S. Mattoon, dated January 7th, mentions that the work of the mission at Bangkok is making encouraging progress. Twelve boarding scholars were under instruction. Numerous applications were received daily for books. A number of strangers continued to attend the Sabbath services. An aged man is spoken of as walking nearly two miles in order to attend these services. The application for a printing press is renewed, and also for more labourers.

CHINA MISSIONS.—Our letters are dated at Canton, January 26; Shanghai, January 3; and Ningpo, to January 3. We learn with deep regret the death of Mr. Moses S. Coulter, at Ningpo, on the 12th of December. He was attacked with severe sickness last summer, but had partially recovered, and was making arrangements under the advice of physicians to visit this country. His disease returned, however, and his earthly course is ended; he has gone without doubt to "a better country, even an heavenly." The removal of two such men as Mr. Byers and Mr. Coulter is a most serious loss to the Church and to the heathen. But the Lord reigns.—One of the Ningpo letters says, "Brother W. Martin is much encouraged in his evening services in the city."

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.—We have received letters from the Rev. W. Speer, dated to February 15. "The school in the evening has been very irregularly attended, sometimes quite a number present, . . . and again not more than three or four." Preaching to the Chinese was commenced on the first Sabbath of their new-year, February 13. Services were held in the Presbyterian Church, of which the Rev. A. Williams is minister, and a large audience of Chinese and Americans was present. Great interest appeared to be felt in the exercises, and a handsome collection was made at the close, to which the Chinese themselves contributed very liberally. We omit a more particular account of this service, as the details have appeared in most of the religious newspapers. "The Sabbath services at the chapel will consist for a while of a Sabbath-school at two o'clock, and preaching at night."

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. J. H. MORRISON: LAHOR, FEBRUARY 4, 1853.

Arrival at Lahor—Missionary Work by the way—Abundant Work to be done—More Labourers Needed.

Our journey here was attended with a good deal of suffering, in consequence of the cold and rains, but by the ever-watchful care of our Heavenly Father, we all arrived safely, and in our usual health. Notwithstanding all the disadvantages attending moving and the unfavourable weather, the Pandit and I managed to do missionary work most of the way, so that our moving was almost equal to a regular itineration over the same ground. The disease in my head, although much less severe than it has been, is by no means removed, and compels me to avoid studying and writing as much as possible. I did not therefore, keep a journal on my way here.

. . . . The work in the Bazár and in itinerating agrees with me. I can also spend two or three hours a day in the schools, hearing recitations that require no previous study, without injury, and in this way I am fully occupied, but often feel sadly the want of that, which only study can supply. I suppose, however, I must be content and do the best I can, and try to employ in the best manner, the energies and talents God has given me. . . . I think I have never been situated where I could make my missionary efforts so extensively felt, and where I could so fully bring all my energies into so profitable exercise as here. It is like one perpetual mela here; we can have crowds about us all day, if we could stand the labour of preaching to them and discussing with opposers.

We need greatly to have our hands strengthened. I suppose the population here about equal to that of Saháranpur, Ambála, and Lodiána. At those stations they have eight men, and really need more—what then must be our need, where we have about the same population and only two men. Then again, they have at not very distant points other missionaries, and the country all around them has been more or less visited, the gospel preached in their villages, cities, and melas; whereas all west of us to Persia, all north, and all south to the sea, is a blank, so far as missionary labour is concerned, if we except here and there a solitary officer, who tries to do something for the good of the people. I have always felt that this point should be strengthened, but never felt it so strongly as I have since I came and saw it. And this I feel without detracting in the least from the wants of the older stations. Then, Jalandar is a large city, I should think fully equal to any station of this mission, excepting this. There we ought by all means to have an American missionary. . . .

"Movement" at Yakutganj.—Notices of a preaching Tour.

You will be glad to hear that the movement in Yakutganj is giving us considerable satisfaction; but I find it very difficult to describe it, without exciting expectations which may never be realized. It is now two months since some of the people expressed themselves as anxious on the subject of religion, and desirous to know more of the religion of Christians; and the interest, so far from declining, seems to be increasing. The chief Pandit, the one who first declared himself no longer an idolater, has given to us his idols and beads, and divested himself of every vestige of heathenism. On this account he has sustained some loss, but on account of his having been the guru, or spiritual guide of the people, he has not been treated harshly. His father and wife seem to hear the word with much attention. We have had religious worship conducted in the schoolhouse of the village for the last three weeks, and have had audiences, composed of very attentive hearers, numbering some forty or fifty people. They have lately attended our services here on Sabbath and on Wednesday evening, and express their determination to do so regularly. I cannot but think there is something more than we have hitherto had the pleasure of seeing, in this movement, and trust it is the work of God's Spirit, blessing the seed hitherto sown; and if so, we may expect to see a glorious work all around us. And yet so deceptive are all appearances of this kind, that before another month rolls around, we may see that it is only one of the artifices of the great adversary of souls, to strike a blow against the best and most glorious work of salvation. There are four or five Pandits, and many others of very respectable standing, now engaged in hearing and reading the word of God, and as long as they are willing to hear, we will preach, and pray for God's blessing to rest on his word; and will not the friends of Zion everywhere pray for us. The idols, &c., I have kept, to send to the Mission House by the first opportunity, and herewith I enclose you the idol Jagatnáth, (Juggernath,) given me by the Pandit Mul Chand, and worshipped formerly by him. Pray for us, that God's Spirit may be poured out on us, and those about us, and that many may be turned from idols unto the Lord.

Since my last, I have been out on a short itineration, having taken my family, and the girls of the Institute, for a change of air. We have had a very pleasant time in preaching to the villagers, and I trust the trip has been instrumental in doing good to many. We had great numbers to visit us at our tent every day, and besides preaching to them, we had in addition singing and prayer, with which every one seemed very much pleased. Whilst at Nanohganj, a man visited us, who seemed so much delighted with the word, that he expressed himself willing to give up all his worldly goods, and join himself to the despised followers of Jesus. We, however, advised him not to give up his Zamindári, [land held on lease,] but to consider the subject fully, and visit us at Futtehgurh, where he could see and know more about us. He promised to do so, but has not yet made his appearance. We were told, in another place, by an aged man, and of some considerable standing and importance, that his brother was wavering on the subject of religion, and was more than half disposed to be a Christian, and that his nephew was a Christian in heart, and was always reading our Bible. We had many such interesting occurrences to cheer us on our trip, but as I did not keep a journal of them, I cannot recall all. I trust the time is near when we will see all the villages around us turning unto the Lord.

INDIA: ALLAHABAD MISSION.

MISSIONARY JOURNEY TO FUTTEHPORE, AND THENCE TO BANDA, HUMEERPORE, CALPEE, AND OTHER PARTS OF BUNDELKHAND: BY THE REV. JOSEPH OWEN.

December 16th, 1852.—Left Allahabad about eleven A. M. in one of the cheap and rapid transit carriages. A little after two, P. M., we reached the second dák bungalow, thirty miles from Allahabad, where we found the worthy chaplain of Allahabad with some tracts in his hand, talking to a group of natives. After dining in the bungalow, with him and his amiable wife, we proceeded on our journey, and arrived at the dák bungalow in Futtehpore about eleven o'clock at night. The day was cool and pleasant, and we much enjoyed the change of air and scene.

December 17th.—Preparing to take a circuitous route through Bundelkhand, early this morning I sent Mrs. Owen and Henry directly on to Humeerpore, forty-four miles distant from Futtehpore. Went then to call on the residents at the station, who all express interest in our school here, and promise it liberal support. Then examined the school, with the progress of which I was much pleased. The native teachers remain attentive to their work, although they have not had the direct superintendence of a missionary since September. After dinner and tea at the house of the civil surgeon, proceeded to Chillátárá, twenty-four miles to the south, on the south bank of the Jumna, which I reached at eleven o'clock at night, where Mr. Jones kindly received me.

December 18th.—Preached this morning in two places in Chillá, in all to some fifty or sixty people. At eleven, mounted my pony, accompanied by Yunas and Thomas, each on a pony, and started for Bánda, twenty-four miles south of Chillátárá. During the middle of the day the sun was hot, and the road was shaded by no trees. The country was very open, and scarce any trees were to be seen any where. Many large fields, however, were covered with wheat, barley, and grain, the green of which afforded some relief from the glaring rays of the sun. At Chillá we entered Bundelkhand, the soil of which has a peculiarly black appearance. About three miles from Chillá we came to a small village, Dohtará, where we talked some time to from twenty to thirty people, announcing to them the simple, leading truths of Christianity. The people were all very ignorant, but we told them enough for their salvation, if they will only remember and believe. From Dohtará, we came next to Piplí, and thence to Atarahant, at each of which places we preached to audiences similar to the first. Thence we came to Piparinda, about three o'clock, P. M., where we took some tiffin in a native sarái or inn, and had opportunities of discoursing to many people. We arrived in Bánda about eight o'clock in the evening, and were received very kindly by Mr. Best, the joint magistrate.

December 19th, Sabbath.—At the request of Major Riddell, the commanding officer of the 60th Regt. Native Infantry, I preached in the church to the residents of the station and officers of the regiment. From church, went home with Mr. R. Tucker, the officiating judge, who accompanied me in the evening into the city, where I had a crowded audience of natives in one of the streets, to whom I preached a long time.

December 20th.—Called during the morning on some of the residents of the station. In the afternoon preached, with Yunas and Thomas, from the verandah of a native school to crowds of people in the street.

December 21st.—Preached again at the school verandah, and gave books, though sparingly, to those who could read. A profuse, gratuitous distribution of books is not often advisable. This is a large and rather handsome native city. The population of the city, according to the latest census, is thirty-three thousand four hundred and sixty-four, and of the district, of which this is the capital, five hundred and fifty-two thousand five hundred and twenty-six. Since the latter part of 1841, eleven years ago, when Mr. J. Wilson and I visited this place, the gospel has not been preached to any of the native population here, and never to my knowledge, before that time. Here is a large field for missionary labour, but where are the labourers?

December 22d.—Left my kind friend, Mr. Tucker, this morning at seven o'clock, and started for Humeerpore. Had a pleasant walk over fields and through ravines, some of which were very deep, until near ten, when we forded the river Keine, and soon after came to the village Achharáwror, opposite which, under a tree, we sat down to our breakfast, an old piece of masonry answering as our table, and our fingers as knives and forks. After preaching in the village to about twenty people, we mounted our ponies and rode slowly on to the village Bhamhai, where we found several men engaged in threshing corn with oxen. They, with others from the village, listened attentively to the truths of the gospel under a large tree near the threshing-floor. We then went into the village and preached to about fifty people. Thence we came to Bhainsmarí, where we preached to about one hundred people, besides children, under a large tamarind tree outside the village. About three in the afternoon, we came to Sasolar, where, hearing that we should meet with no good lodging-place within twelve miles, we stopped for the night, the coolies carrying our clothes and books unable to go so much further without rest. Sasolar is distant from Bánda about eighteen miles. I had much time for quiet meditation on the road. The heat in the middle of the day was somewhat oppressive, but I avoided it as much as possible by riding on rapidly and sitting in the shade of trees till the others came up, occupying the time thus gained very pleasantly with my pocket Greek Testament, pocket edition of the Iliad, and a treatise in Sanscrit on the Vedánta. Some natives in Sasolar obligingly furnished me with a small room, tolerably clean, where I placed my box of clothes and books, and had my bed prepared. They also furnished me with a fowl, which, with some native chhapátis, or cakes, afforded me a good dinner. In the evening I preached to about eighty people in the village.

December 23d.—Rose before three this morning, and walked eleven miles before sunrise. The air was very cold, but I soon became warm from exercise. The quiet of the morning was very favourable for meditation, and as I walked most of the time in advance of all the others, I was much occupied in singing hymns. The hymn "O'er the gloomy hills of darkness," seemed to me peculiarly sweet. Saw the moon set and Venus rise, both of which were beautiful. The stars were very brilliant, and I tried to learn what names the common people gave to various groups. The Great Bear they called a bed, and the three stars in his tail three thieves trying to carry it away! At sunrise I came to Pandharí, where I was glad to sit down and rest, and while doing so, talked to about a dozen people on the great subject of my errand. After walking a mile further, reached the large village Sameerpore, where, being weary, I sat down on a well and read my Greek Testament. Shortly a large crowd of people gathered about me, gazing at the sudden apparition in their village, for I entered it on foot, attended by no one. Then came a man from Humeerpore, with a note from Mrs. Owen, and bringing a conveyance to take me on there, twelve miles further. Before making arrangements to start, I preached to a crowd of people in the street. The Tahsildár, or native revenue collector, a very respectable old Kashmírí Bráhman, then came and took me to his office, where he insisted on preparing breakfast for me. He did not, of course, join me in eating it, but sat by conversing with me. At his request I examined the village school, and promised the teacher and scholars to send them some good books. Near Sumeerpore, I saw the place where Mr. Blunt, one of the American cotton planters, formerly lived, and where Mr. Wilson and I visited him eleven years ago. Near Humeerpore I crossed the river Betwá, a tributary of the Jumna. Reached Humeerpore about one, P. M., and found all well, with the exception of a slight fever, from which my little boy was recovering. Was sorry to hear that Mrs. Owen and he did not reach Humeerpore the same day they left Futtehpore, but were unpleasantly detained in the jungle all night, and did not reach till one, P. M. the next day, having suffered from cold and want of food. We are enjoying the kind hospitality of G. H. Freeling, Esq., joint magistrate.

December 24th.—Mr. Freeling accompanied me into Humeerpore this evening, where I preached to some sixty or seventy people, who all listened very attentively.

December 25th.—Though far from regarding this as the anniversary of our Saviour's birth, I cheerfully complied with a request to preach to the few residents of the station, who very seldom have an opportunity of hearing preaching. Once or twice in a year a chaplain comes here from Caunpore. I was therefore glad to preach on the great truth, "God was manifest in the flesh."

December 26th, Sabbath.—Preached again in English to the residents of the station, assembled in Mr. Freeling's house. Spent the afternoon in visiting the Christian families at the station, conversing and praying with them.

December 27th.—Started for Calpee this afternoon, and rode sixteen miles to Nísripúr, where I stopped with Mr. Kinlock, a pleasant, gentlemanly young man. On my way preached, first at Jhalakhar, to about twenty people, then in Huttehpúr to about a dozen, then in Siuni conversed with two Brahmans.

December 28th.—Mr. Kinlock had about one hundred people collected for me in Nísripúr this morning, to whom I preached a long time. We then mounted our ponies, and rode into Calpee, which we reached about one o'clock. There I was most kindly received by George Eckford, Esq., and his intelligent wife, a daughter of James Alexander Haldane, and niece of Robert Haldane, the Commentator. Here I first saw the Lives of her father and uncle, which have lately appeared in a handsome volume. In the afternoon Mr. Eckford took me into the city, where I preached a long time to a very great crowd. In the evening, the few residents at the station attended at Mr. Eckford's, at whose request I expounded a portion of the Scripture, and prayed with them.

December 29th.—Early this morning, Mr. Eckford took me out to show me the different places of interest. The city is large and populous, containing not less than 20,000, probably nearly 30,000 inhabitants. I preached in four different places, to large assemblies, before leaving. Started at one, P. M., on a fleet horse, that Mr. Eckford kindly lent me, and came to Babina, twelve miles, in a little more than an hour. Here I expected to find my own pony, but the man who had taken him on had missed the way. So, after preaching to a few people at Babina, I took Thomas's pony for the next twelve miles. I was not quite comfortable on a native saddle, and after riding two miles one of the stirrups broke, so I was obliged to ride the remaining ten miles still more uncomfortably, and very slowly, to Karárá, where I found Mr. Freeling's horse waiting for me. I preached a short time in Karárá, then galloped on to Jhalakhar, where I talked to a few people, but night was coming on, and I had no time to delay, with nearly ten more miles before me, and much jungle, with ravines, to pass through. Reached Humeerpore early in the evening, somewhat fatigued.

December 30th.—Came this afternoon to Chandpurná, near Sumeerpore, and twelve miles from Humeerpore. Mr. Murray, the younger brother of a Scotch laird, has several estates here, in which he invested £5000 a few years since, and lives here much of the time, attending to them.

December 31st.—Preached this morning in Chandpurná, to about thirty people. When returning to Mr. Murray's house, a zamindar, or landholder, accompanied me, very seriously asking me some amusing questions, whether I was sent out by the Chief Board of Revenue, to preach, or by the Company. I told him I was not from the Company's country, but from one several thousands of miles westward from it. He then asked what sort of person this "Company" [East India Company] was, whether it was a man or woman. After breakfast, returned to Humeerpore. First walked to Sumeerpore, two miles and a half from Chandpurná. My old friend, the Tahsildar, insisted on my mounting his pony, decked out with red trappings, on which I rode two miles, to the place where a buggy was waiting for me. Talked to a few people in Sumeerpore, before taking a final leave.

January 1st, 1853.—Preached again in English to-day.

January 2d—Sabbath.—Preached in English. Talked this afternoon to the few children of the station, whom Mrs. Owen had collected in a Sunday-school. Preached in the bázár this evening, and called to take leave of some of the Christian families. To-morrow morning we expect to leave for Allahabad. The harvest here indeed is great, but where are the labourers! Both this and Calpee ought to be missionary stations, if we had the men and the means for occupying them. In these districts are about three hundred thousand people, with none to make known to them the way of salvation.

January 4th.—Left Humeerpore yesterday morning for Allahabad, expecting to reach Futtehpore about six last evening, but were unavoidably delayed on the road till one o'clock this morning. From Humeerpore to Jahánábád I came on horseback, and Mrs. Owen by bearers. At a small village called Baudh, I preached to a few people; two miles further on, I preached in a large one, called Bari, to a great assembly in the bázár. Jahánábád is a city, and an old place. I would like to have spent several days there, but was obliged to content myself with preaching only once, to a large audience, however. Here we took a carriage drawn by bearers, and came on very slowly. Twelve miles from Jahánábád we came to Rhajuá, where we stopped the carriage, and soon a crowd assembled, to whom I preached a short time. The population of this town, according to the census taken two or three days since, is 5300. Thence to Futtehpore our progress was slow and tedious. Here we enjoy the kind hospitality of Mr. John Muir, of the Civil Service, a very ripe scholar, particularly in Sanscrit, in which language he has written and published several valuable works. To-day we examined the Futtehpore school. Mr. Muir, and others who attended, expressed themselves pleased with the beginning that has been made, and have promised liberal support to the school. I hope it may be a centre of great good to the 600,000 people of this district. My opinion of the importance of this place as a missionary station is strengthened from what I have recently seen. God grant that we may be able to send here a sufficient number of the right sort of men, to send the blessed gospel through all these large towns and villages.

January 5th.—Reached Allahabad this evening, and found all well. God has been very good to us through our whole journey, sparing us while travelling, and preserving ours here during our absence.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

SICKNESS AND DEATH OF MR. MOSES S. COULTER.

We insert here extracts from a letter of Dr. McCartee, of December 6th, concerning the sickness of our lamented missionary, Mr. Coulter, and the mystery of providence in removing such a choice labourer from fields white unto the harvest. We learn from letters of later date, that Mr. Coulter departed this life on the 12th of December, possessing a good hope through grace.

For two or three weeks after his return from Shanghai, [where he had gone on a visit for his health,] Mr. Coulter improved rapidly, and we hoped that by this time he would have been able to leave Ningpo in search of a more genial climate, where he might recover his health and strength; but He, in whose hands our breath is, has seen fit in his inscrutable providence to disappoint our hopes, and bring our brother to the borders of the grave. Feeling almost well of his disease, and anxious to avail himself of an early opportunity of leaving Ningpo, Mr. Coulter ventured to exert himself in giving directions about arranging his affairs, and packing up some articles to take with him. This exertion produced a slight return of his complaint, and added to this, his little child was seized in the night with convulsions from teething, causing to both his parents a night of sleeplessness and great anxiety. The consequence to Mr. Coulter was a sudden return of all his bad symptoms, complete prostration of all his remaining strength, and inability to take almost any nourishment. To be brief, our brother now lies in a most critical state, the event of which is only certainly known to him who knoweth the end from the beginning, and who alone can say the word and his servant shall be healed. I need not say that for our brother, as for Peter when in prison, prayer has been made without ceasing of the Church unto God for him, not only by our own mission, but by all the brethren of all the missions at our station, for we all love him; and indeed I have never seen more earnest feeling called forth by any providence that has occurred since the commencement of our mission.

. . . . Ere this reaches the Mission Rooms the event will have been already long decided. Should he recover so as to be able to return to the United States, the probability is, that the disease in a chronic form, or at least a liability to its recurrence, will hang about him for many months, and whether he will ever be able to return to us, it is beyond our power to say. How mysterious and inscrutable to us are the ways of Him with whom we have to do—clouds and darkness are round about him—he "moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform." Here is a beloved brother, whose heart is in the work, and whose talents are well adapted for high usefulness. Here are fields white unto the harvest—the harvest is great, the labourers are few. We have been praying, in obedience to the command of our Master, to the Lord of the harvest, that he would send more labourers into the harvest field, and now, to prove our faith, he calls away one of those already here, just as he began to give promise of extensive usefulness. What can we say? with David we are constrained to say, "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth; because thou didst it." He has done it who doeth all things well. Even so Father, since so it seemeth good in thy sight! But let us not be discouraged, and "it may be that the Lord will work for us; for there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." It must be that the Lord will work for us, for his promise cannot fail, and he has promised to give to his Son the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. He has announced to us his purpose of visiting the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name, and his covenant he will not break nor alter the thing that is gone out of his lips. Let not the Church be discouraged at the return or the removal by death of so many missionaries. I could easily show names and figures to prove that among those who have come to seek for wealth and fortune during the nine years of my sojourn in China, the proportion of deaths has been at least as great, and of returns to their native lands, or departures for other places in search of health, much greater than among the missionaries of the cross. And do the mercantile community feel discouraged? Did our brave countrymen feel discouraged when battle and disease thinned their ranks, and many a gallant soldier was laid low far from home and country? No. The cry was "more volunteers." And shall we be discouraged, who fight under the banners of the Lord God of Sabaoth? God forbid. But let the cry ring through the churches of our own dear native land, "more volunteers"—"To the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty!" Some of us have been here long. We know not how much longer the Lord may spare us; we are constantly reminded that there is but a step between us and death. Our numbers are few; our ranks are every year growing thinner; we look to the churches for help—will they leave us unsupported? Oh raise the cry for "more volunteers."

CHINA: SHANGHAI MISSION.

LETTER OF THE REV. JOHN BYERS: HIS SICKNESS AND DEATH.

Arrival at Shanghai.—Another house to be built.—Study of the language commenced.—Christian Experience.—Death at sea.

We insert extracts from a letter of our lamented missionary, Mr. John Byers, dated at Shanghai, September 16, 1852.

It has been a source of some annoyance to us, that we have spent nearly four weeks in Shanghai without being able to report to you our arrival. We reached this place on the 22d of August, six days after the departure of the mail. We have had very great reasons for gratitude in the quickness of the passage, the unbroken health, and freedom from all accident, with which we have been favoured since leaving New York. We made the passage in one hundred and twelve days, the quickest that has yet been made from New York to Shanghai direct. We had scarcely any unpleasant weather, and no sickness. Our captain was kind and attentive, and our passage altogether very pleasant. . . .

We have here received marked kindness from all the missionary brethren, especially from Mr. and Mrs. Wight, who have much inconvenienced themselves to afford us shelter.

As the lease, by which the house occupied by Mr. Culbertson is held, will shortly expire, and much uncertainty exists as to our ability to renew it, it has been thought advisable to proceed at once to the erection of another house. A lot for building has already been secured, about three hundred yards west of Mr. Wight's, and the principal reason for fixing our abode at the latter place was, that I might be near the building, to superintend it. The lot, however, is considered too small, and exorbitant prices are asked for lots on either side. It is true, we might build on the present lot, although it would scarcely afford space for the width of a dwelling-house, and servants' houses in the rear. But a greater objection, in the eyes of all who see it, is the presence of Chinese houses immediately in front, the smoke and filth of which, blowing upon us the whole summer season, would be intolerable. Conceive a house in one of the dirtiest lanes in your city, with those in front so near that you could step from the upper windows upon their roof, and you will understand our situation precisely. We are now waiting to see whether those who own the neighbouring lots can be brought to reasonable terms. This is our position as regards building.

I have already commenced the study of the language, but owing to weakness and languor, caused by the unaccustomed heat, I am unable to do much at it. My whole attention is given to the colloquial, without any reference to the character, which is the method generally recommended at the outset. I think the difficulties by no means so great as we imagined at Princeton. This, however, may be due to my inexperience of them yet.

. . . We have already discovered that, though we have left home and country, we have not left the world, and are by no means beyond the power of temptation. It requires no little determination to resist even the physical indisposition to study, or to devotional exercises, while the temptations to worldly-mindedness and sloth are much greater, I believe, than at home. We now conduct a prayer meeting in our own mission, which proves a refreshing season, indeed. . . .

Soon after the date of this letter, symptoms of pulmonary disease became marked, and eventually Mr. Byers was strongly advised by the physician who is connected with the London Society, as a missionary, and also by the brethren of his own mission, to return to this country. With great reluctance, this measure was decided on, but with the hope that his life might be prolonged for the service of Christ in some other part of the vineyard. Subsequent events are already known to our readers. Re-embarking on the Nestorian with his little family, on the 1st of November, he was not spared to reach the end of the voyage, but departed this life on the 8th of March, within a few days' sail of New York. His remains were interred in the cemetery of the First Presbyterian church, in this city, on the 17th of that month.

During most of the voyage, Mr. Byers retained a good degree of strength, and cherished the hope of being able to engage in the work of the ministry, but manifested a spirit of sweet submission to the will of God, and at last fell asleep in Jesus. Possessing talents of a superior order, scholarship surpassed by none of his classmates, and a religious character eminently pure and devoted, with health, on his leaving the Seminary, apparently perfect, he had caused large expectations to be formed of his usefulness in the missionary work. He was himself lowly in heart, and we can now see that he was unusually well prepared for the great change. For him to live was Christ, and to die was gain. The Church cannot but mourn over the early removal of such valuable men as Byers and Coulter; but the Head of the Church is all gracious and wise in his dispensations towards his people, and towards his cause amongst men. We can only say, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight!"

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. W. SPEER.

[Oct. 19, 1852. At Panama. Immediately after reaching that city, and "exploring" it.] There was everywhere visible a strange mixture of antiquity and novelty, of monarchy and democracy, of memorials of power and of actual feebleness, of devoted religiousness and its ruinous abandonment. I could not but compare it, in all these aspects, with heathen, antiquated China. Just like the forts about Canton, eleven splendid brass cannon, cast by the Spanish kings, lie dismounted on these crumbling parapets, pointing ineffectually towards the proud fleets of English and American steamers, riding expectant at anchor. In the gloomy, narrow streets, were the sign-boards of three American newspaper establishments. Bright medals, crucifixes, and Romish trinkets, cast in the United States, are vended in its shops; just as the English manufacture idols for India. Panama was founded by the Spaniards as early as 1517. It has had an eventful history. Pizarro started thence upon his conquest of Peru. It has been several times taken, and was destroyed by Sir Henry Morgan, the buccaneer, in 1673. It has been the abode of great wealth. Forty thousand dollars a year have been realized from the pearls in its bay. But I will not attempt a description of the city. What most attracted my attention were, firstly, its small size, for it lies, with its many white turrets, like a chess-board, on a little right-angled point of land jutting into the sea, surrounded by a wall, allowing it a breadth of less than five hundred, and a length of only about eight hundred yards; secondly, the large amount of space covered with ruins, rubbish, and gardens, for full one-third is scattered over with masses of destroyed or crumbled buildings; and thirdly, the religious atmosphere which Spanish devotion to Popery has breathed upon the place. One-fourth of the inhabited portion of the city is occupied by churches and public buildings. Its principal streets are named after the Virgin, St. Francis, St. Miguel, St. Philip, St. Dominick, St. Juan de Dios, and St. Joseph. It has eight great churches, and a massive cathedral, whose two towers are conspicuous far at sea. And yet its religious and moral character seemed most fitly symbolized in the condition of the church of San Domingo, whose roof had fallen in, its altar was in ruins, its walls disfigured, while on the very pinnacle in front, where the cross was once placed, was seated a filthy buzzard, that had gone there, sated with carrion, to rest.

Oct. 20*th.*—This morning, took our ladies out in a small boat to the steamer Tennessee, which is anchored some three miles out in the bay, and returned ashore to wait for the baggage. All day, have been in a state of anxiety lest it has been miscarried or plundered, as it was promised certainly by last night. Some of the passengers are sick from excitement, fatigue, and disappointment, to which may be added the excessive use of spirits, more than from the heat of the climate. The sun has been mercifully overclouded, and the temperature has ranged within two or three degrees of 75° at all hours of the day and evening. But an unseen malignant influence seems to heat and phrenzy the restless crowds. There must be some poisonous miasmata in the atmosphere to plant the violent and fatal fevers which break out among the passengers after they leave this port; sometimes even after a lapse of several weeks of uneasiness and debility from their arrival at their journey's end. But why need we fear? "It shall not come nigh thee." We will "take a censer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incense;" and he who stayed the plague when his servant of old stood between the living and the dead, will now deliver us from this destruction which wasteth at noonday.

Oct. 21*st.*—A feverish and restless night. The mosquitos almost as annoying as the vampire bats that sometimes bleed to death the natives of these regions. There is something grand, yet melancholy, in the survey of this memorable city. Stand on the walls which overlook the sea. You drink in with intense delight the winds, spiced with tropic odours, that flow over the white sun-lit billows, across the surrounding islands and headlands. The tide, that a few hours ago seemed to have retired for repose out far beyond yon coral banks, is now rushing in again to your feet, leaping and laughing among the snowy crags and rattling shells. There, where you see a little cove several miles to the southward and westward, is the site of Old Panama; the place where the first city was founded, in the same year that Martin Luther nailed the ninety-five theses, unfurling the stars and stripes of the free worship of God, upon the cathedral door of Wittemberg. Era of giant spirits! It is said towers of two hundred feet in height stand unbroken by earthquakes and age. Like Romanism, these great ruins flutter with green leaves, which are the noisome verdure of rankness, rottenness, and poison. Perpetual silence of death reigns, except when disturbed by the dissimilar voices of the wild boar, the parroquet, the monkey, and the serpent. Look at those native boats beneath your feet, of the size and rig of sloops, surrounded by their chattering native crews. They are hewn out of single trunks from these vast forests. Look at those chains of mountains, like the tombs of Persian kings, in which are hid treasures of metals, gems, coal, and other precious deposits. Stretch your gaze to yon dark fleet, awaiting the swarms of passengers, and the cargoes, that here find a portal from the old hemisphere of the Atlantic to the new and wondrous hemisphere of the Pacific. You behold steamers that scatter the rays of civilization the whole length of the two continents, that hence reach to the poles, and others whose wheels are revolving as they start to Australia, and the far island continents in this ocean world. Over a scene of such splendour, it is the Christian's eye that may glance with most delight, for his own Father's hand fashioned it all. Upon hopes of such glory, the Christian's soul may wing loftiest; for his God taught his disciples to pray that his will may be done on earth as it is done in heaven, and has sworn, and will not repent, that this world, so long blighted by sin, shall become like the garden of the Lord.

One returns from such contemplations to the narrow and dark streets of Panama with no sensation of pleasure. He beholds the shrivelled men and meretricious women, with disgust. Treachery, cruelty, malignity, jealousy, pride, and licentiousness, are painted on each outline of their faces. He is reminded of the prophet's curse upon idolatrous Babylon. "Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures: and only owls shall dwell there; and satyrs shall dance there." There seems to be a supernatural shade upon the land and all its people. But he soon beholds the authors of it in the forms, enveloped wholly in black robes, and the faces hid in black and extremely wide-rimmed hats, that glide about the streets; which, unlike the wizards of olden time that cast no shadow, leave eternal gloom wherever their foot treads. He is reminded, by the tales that come to his ears of the astonishing mixture of superstition and abandoned licentiousness, among these priests and their followers, of poor lost Italy; and he sees in the volcanic mountains, of which this country, like that, is full, it may be the providential preparation for a similar doom; "She shall be utterly burned with fire." Rev. xviii. 8. Many things in the construction of the houses, and the aspect of this population, reminded me of China. It is a remarkable fact, that the people of these regions style the descendants of negroes and Indian women by the name Chino, or Chinese; and, indeed, a number of those Asiatics are known to have reached this coast by various means, and been absorbed in the general mass. May not the Spaniard and the Indian be of the same stock? There is a striking passage in Humboldt—"When we consider that what we may now call Spaniards, is a mixture of Alani and other Tartar hordes with the Visigoths and ancient inhabitants of Iberia; when we also consider the striking analogy between the most part of the European languages, the Sanscrit, and the Persic; and, in short, when we reflect on the Asiatic origin of the pastoral tribes who have been pouring into Mexico since the seventh century; we are almost tempted to believe, that from one and the same centre, though by roads diametrically opposite, have issued part of those nations, who, wandering about for a long time, and after making, as it were, the tour of the globe, meet once more on the ridge of the Mexican Cordilleras."

At ten o'clock I started for the steamer, sick, disappointed, and wearied out with anxious watching, and efforts to obtain our luggage, of which, the only articles that arrived, after all, for our whole party, were one trunk that belonged to my wife, and a couple of small packages. The clothing, and other things that were needed for a voyage of thirty-five hundred miles up the coast, we were forced to purchase in Panama; since what we had brought was almost ruined by the mishaps of the Isthmus. On reaching the vessel, after thanking God for his preservation thus far, I flung myself down upon my berth, and slept soundly till the shadows of night closed over the dashing waters, on whose distant and strange shores our lot was to be henceforth cast.

[The next date is at San Francisco, where Mr. and Mrs. Speer arrived November 6th. The intervening part of his journal has not been received.—Ed.]

Monday, Dec. 20*th.*—Yesterday addressed the Presbyterian Sabbath-school on the duty of children to pray for the Chinese in our midst, and on the means by which a religious influence is to be exerted by Christian families, for their improvement and salvation.

Dec. 21*st*—Visited the hospital. The Chinese much pleased to welcome me back; and I was no less happy and grateful to God to find all alive that I had left there, and that they were generally improving in health.

Dec. 22*d.*—To-day have been visiting several of the more prominent and intelligent Chinese, to enlist them in behalf of the school soon to be established. They are delighted with the prospect. I have explained to them in full my mission and purpose. They seem to appreciate them to some extent. "But why," said one, "do you not send men to preach to and instruct the Indians." "They have untameable and roving hearts," I replied, "so that they will not learn, or stay in schools, though many good men have laboured and suffered much for them." "Yes," was the answer, "I have seen even their women naked; they are little better than wild beasts." In feature the Chinese and the Indian are not unlike; but how wonderful the providence which brings us the former, docile, civilized, polished, and prepared to receive the gospel, and convey it with commanding influence among all the multitudinous swarthy races of his native continent.

Dec. 23*d.*—This evening had a visit from Wú Sien-Sang, a Chinese gentleman, who was formerly a teacher of the Rev. Mr. Gutzlaff, at Hong Kong. He is a man past middle age, of small person, wearing a shining moustache, and clad in particolored furs, after the winter costume of his people. His manners are pleasing, and as one of the literary class, I paid him the respect of inviting in some of my friends to be introduced to him. He came over among the first of his countrymen, in February, 1849. Looking with the contempt belonging to persons of his pretensions, on the employments of the miner and the merchant, he has set himself up as a doctor. He professes to respect the Bible, but does not read it. He says "if the lips recite, but the heart does not learn, what does it profit? The Scriptures are good, and I try to keep these words of Jesus before me, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." I replied, that excellent as this sentence is, yet it is only one of myriads in the Holy Book; and we must each morning and evening read one or more chapters, and pray over and apply to our heart and life what we read, if we wish to learn the things of God, and renovate and save the soul.

December 29*th.*—A Chinaman at the Hospital, who thinks he is not getting well rapidly enough, attempted a cunning deception to obtain a prescription of his own. After our usual reading exercise was finished, he addressed me, saying, "Teacher, I have had a dream last night." "Ah! what was it?" "I saw a venerable man, who told me what medicines to get in order to effect a cure." "Is it possible? Do you remember what they were?" He asked for a slip of paper and a pencil, and wrote the names of a number of native herbs, none of which I remembered, and showing it to me, said, "The person who thus appeared to me was Jesus." The rest of the patients looked solemn and inquisitive, for their own credulity, and the marvellous tales they constantly hear about their gods, would have inclined them to accept the falsehood. But, smiling, I replied, "Truly, your mind must wander very much when you get to dreaming, in order to imagine such a thing as this. We do not pay much respect to dream-talk. The medicine you receive from your physician is the best for you. There is no dreaming about that."

January 1*st*, 1853.—The commencement of another year. How rapidly the last has fled. How changed the circumstances, how solemn the relations and duties to dying men, with which another year begins its flight. When shall "my change come?" "There is a time to die." Oh for new love to God, new life, new ardour, new fitness, wisdom, and strength, for his service.

There are quite a number of the better class of Chinese out to-day, as is their native custom, making New Year's calls among their acquaintances. Several spent a portion of the afternoon with me, and I invited some American friends in to meet them. Acting as interpreter for them, many questions of interest passed on either part. Wú Sien-Sang gave a more favourable representation than I thought possible of the condition of the Chinese females. He insisted that many of them could read, but was obliged to confess that his own wife, though he prides himself greatly on belonging to the literary class, had never learned to read, and was forced to correspond with him through others.

Sabbath, Jan. 2d.—Preached this morning at the Methodist Church South, at the request of their presiding elder, Rev. Dr. Boring, in reference to my missionary work. I have occupied several of the pulpits of this city with discourses on this subject. They are heard with interest by all denominations, and may awaken more effective efforts for the spiritual good of these heathen among us.

Monday, Jan. 3d, 1853.—A few days since, one of the Chinese at the Hospital handed me a list of about one hundred characters, which, in the course of their reading of our tracts, they could not understand. This proved in a gratifying way, both that they had read a considerable portion of the books, and that they had reflected and inquired as to their meaning. Four of them seem very desirous to learn of Christ. At my afternoon visit to-day, after reading a sermon of the Rev. Dr. Milne, "on the return of the wandering sheep to their shepherd," (1 Peter ii. 25,) I dwelt at length on the sufferings of the Son of God, that he who was Almighty, and could by a word have destroyed the Jewish nation, the world, the universe, yet chose to endure such indignities, such sufferings, and to die on the cross on our behalf. They seemed interested and impressed. At the close one of them said, "Teacher, how is it that we are to pray to Jesus? Some of us have folded our hands and closed our eyes as you do, but we do not seem to pray. Our hearts float about, and do not know what to say." This led to a full explanation of the various subjects, and the mode of prayer; the simple expression of our desires, in a spiritual manner, to God, for Christ's sake. Oh that God would lead those inquiring, and perhaps sincere souls, to know him, to blessed communion with him, and in him to find eternal life.

Jan. 4.—This evening visited some Chinese merchants. One of them made particular inquiries as to the existence and character of evil spirits. Taking up several of the most common superstitions of the Chinese, such as the offering of pork and paper money at funerals, the supposed visions of demons seen in flames at night on the hill sides, which, in a little, separate, scatter, and disappear, I tried to show the folly of crediting any material or supernatural manifestations, and yet explain how Satan leads all men into temptation, spiritually, and plunges many in sin, to the destruction of their souls in hell. All to whom I have yet spoken, express gratification with my missionary designs.

God has furnished me here with a couple of faithful friends, in two young men educated at one of our mission schools. With one I spent two hours this evening in profitable religious communion. After the most searching examination, he appears to give evidence of sincere and tender love to Jesus Christ. Speaking of prayer, he said, "I love to pray, I cannot do without it. If I lie down without praying, I am unable to sleep; often when engaged in it the tears run down my cheeks." He thinks he should not fear if death drew nigh to him; but while he does not long for it, yet would be willing, if Jesus called him, to meet a change from sin to the presence of God above. He joined us in family worship with evident pleasure, and indeed during the whole time we were conversing his eyes were filled with moisture.

January 6th.—This afternoon took to the Hospital, in accordance with the wish of some of my Chinese friends there, written specimens of prayer, and after reading some pages on that topic from a religious tract, and preparing their minds for it, by explanation of its objects and nature, proposed to some of the patients to join with them in this act of worship of God. The ward contained, beside the Chinese patients, a few other foreigners, whom I thought might be also impressed, even though our exercises were in a strange tongue. Of the six in this ward, one old man was not engaged with us, one was too feeble to rise, and another was in his cot without clothing. The other three willingly and solemnly kneeled round a bed, and for the first time they offered worship to God Almighty. They solicited permission to retain the written prayers, in order that they might copy out and keep them.

MISSIONS AMONG ROMANISTS.

MEXICANS ON THE BORDERS OF TEXAS.

A call for a Missionary.

A respected correspondent, than whom no one can be better informed concerning the matters of which he writes, has sent to us the following letter, dated March 1, 1853. We ask for it the earnest consideration of our readers, and especially of our brethren in the ministry. Who will go to occupy this important missionary field?

Knowing that your thoughts have been turned to the spiritual wants of the Mexican population in the valley of the Rio Grande, I wish to acquaint you with our present condition. In four counties on the American side of the river, we have a population of some twenty thousand souls, most of them residing in small towns and villages, where they may be easily approached. Between four and five thousand of this number are in Brownsville, [Texas.] The French, Germans, Italians, and Jews mingle with us in considerable numbers, but at least nine-tenths of all speak the Mexican tongue, which differs in several particulars from the pure Castilian. Some five or six priests, with as many nuns, have planted themselves at Brownsville, and are now opening schools for the promotion of their peculiar objects, with high pretensions of knowledge and charity. They propose to commence immediately the building of a college, and promise abundant protection and provision for destitute and orphan children, of whom there is an interesting class. They are Europeans, and it is said have brought funds with them to a considerable amount. It is evident that they have regarded this as the gateway into Mexico, and hence their choice of position.

But what are Protestants doing for these twenty thousands? They have one Presbyterian minister in Brownsville, as you know, and at the present time he is the sole representative of the Protestant Church in the valley of the Rio Grande; not an agent, not an individual besides, to herald the truth as it is in Jesus. The Episcopal minister, who has been absent some months, is expected to return. Our Methodist brethren have been destitute more than a year, and we know not when they are to be supplied.

There have been wars and rumours of wars. But we now have peace, at least for a season. [Referring next to the character of the Mexican population, our correspondent speaks strongly of their need of the gospel, and mentions various things to show this; he also speaks of them as "fluent readers, eminently social, always ready to talk, . . . with no sullen reserve. They are all easy of access." He then proceeds as follows:]

Now allow me to suggest, that your Board send a missionary to this people, who can learn their language; who can become all things to all men, in the sense of Paul; who can patiently break up fallow ground, sow the good seed, and wait for the harvest. It must be a work of time. He may distribute tracts and books, having the field to himself; become acquainted with the people; secure their confidence; discover the avenues to their hearts; and plant himself in their affections, for the glory of Christ, and their salvation. If he choose, he may become a teacher among them, for the benefit of their children. They are ambitious of learning the English language. Regarding Brownsville, as the Jesuits do, as the gateway into Mexico, he may make it, or Rio Grande city, the centre of his operations, with abundant opportunities of preaching the gospel in our Anglo-Saxon tongue, either constantly in one place, or, which would probably be better, in several different places.

Can something of this kind be done? Or must we wait until the present generation have gone to their graves, and Rome has rivetted her chains of superstition with tenfold power over the bodies and souls of those who succeed them? . . . I earnestly pray that our blessed Master may provide the man and the means, and that the work of the Lord may go forward.

ROSES PLANTED IN THE WILDERNESS.

It is a characteristic feature of the Colportage operations of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, that they are not confined, nor chiefly directed, to large towns, and thickly settled and wealthy neighbourhoods, but the colporteurs are instructed to explore thoroughly, and cultivate carefully, the field assigned them; to visit from house to house, and not to neglect any accessible family. Some of the most venerable and judicious men in our Church regard the missionary aspect of the work as its most influential one. In consequence of this, the pecuniary results of the work, in many instances, are no certain criterion of the amount of good done. Yet who that loves souls, and seeks the glory of God, will not rejoice that through the labours of these humble agents, the wilderness is occasionally made to rejoice and blossom as the rose?

The following extract of a letter from one of our most faithful colporteurs in Mississippi, presents such a scene.

"I spent over six weeks in the parishes of —— and ——; they are truly a wilderness, spiritually considered. No regular preaching, no Sabbath-schools, and, worse than all, no real desire for these things. I found but two Presbyterian families in six weeks. The time spent in exploring these parishes has been the most laborious portion of the time spent in the service of the Board. I have been cold, wet, and hungry, and no remedy but bear it, at the time. But still there are bright spots, that I can look on with pleasure. I found many destitute, to whom I sold five and ten dollars' worth of books, and many families that never had a Bible now have one. I sold or gave something in almost every house. Here and there I met with persons that were glad to get books for themselves and families. I travelled once nearly all day and sold very little, when I came to a house, and sold fifteen dollars' worth of books. When the gentleman paid me for them, the lady gave me five dollars to give where I found them destitute. I could not describe my feelings—it put fresh energy and strength, as it were, into me. It was the first that had been given me to supply the destitute. If that lady could have followed me next day into the house of a poor and pious widow, destitute of books, and but little to buy them with, (as she lost all she had in 1850, during the time of high water,) she would have been more than paid for her five dollars. I asked her to buy some books; she said she would like to buy a good many, if she had the means. I thought I could not spend a portion of the lady's money better than in supplying this poor widow and her small family. I told her to select some of the books, and I would sell them to her at half price. She then selected near five dollars' worth. She put the question to her children, before paying me, if they would allow her to pay for them out of their money. (They earned it by picking cotton.) They all said, Yes! I left that house with a heart full of gratitude to God, that it was my privilege to supply such families, as well as the wealthy. By talking and reasoning with them, I sold something in nearly every house. The majority are not members of any church."

INCIDENT OF COLPORTAGE.

A colporteur in one of the new States gives the following interesting statement of the result of his labours in this field of benevolent operation.

"I have sought to be engaged in this work, not more for the emolument, than that I may have an opportunity of doing good, by employment in the Master's cause, as there are many in this county who cannot be reached with Christian influence otherwise than by itinerant service, visiting from house to house. And little as my 'labour' has thus far been in this respect, I have some pleasing indications that it has 'not been in vain in the Lord.'

"The case that I shall mention, is that of a gentleman, apparently from fifty-five to sixty years of age, a widower, without children, living in retirement from business, apparently wealthy, and devoting much time to reading—a member of a New-school or Congregational church, and of Unitarian tendency. This person is boarding at a hotel, at which I put up on my way to M——. Being alone in the parlour when I entered, we very naturally commenced a conversation, in the course of which, finding that I was a minister of Christ, he spoke at large upon that charity that should characterize Christians of all denominations; and asked particularly if we should not have charity for Unitarians? After giving him my views on this subject, declaring, that as they lay the axe at the root of the tree of Christian hope, by reducing the Saviour to the level of a mere creature; denying the atonement; justification by faith; the righteousness of Christ in behalf of sinners, and all the cardinal doctrines, on which alone orthodox Christians, in the light of the Scriptures, exercise charity towards their fellow-men, so far as to believe them to be prepared for communion with God in this world, or ready for death, judgment, and eternity, I must say to him, in language I had understood that the late celebrated Dr. John M. Mason once used in a sermon—"Cursed be that charity that has charity for all men." That as Unitarians, I could exercise no further charity for them than for any other unbelievers—especially intelligent or philosophical unbelievers—those who set aside the Bible in a greater or less degree, and hold to free discussion on all religious questions, untrammelled by religious creeds and written opinions, like the progressionists of the present day.

"I then informed my companion on what business I was travelling—in the employ of the Board of Publication, telling him that, on my return, I could probably supply him with some reading that might be useful to him; and offered to show the invoice, the only catalogue I had with me, that he might make such selections as suited him. But he preferred to continue the conversation, telling me, that I could select for him such works as I might judge proper—to a reasonable amount; and if I would stop on my way home he would buy them. Accordingly, I took from my boxes for this individual, in whom I had become greatly interested, the following works—"The Converted Unitarian," "Christ All in All," "James's Anxious Inquirer," and, as a dish of strong meat, "Dickinson's Five Points;" the tracts "The Sum of Saving Knowledge" and Dr. Alexander's "Refuge of Lies;" to which, on the suggestion of my brother B———, of the M——— church, to whom I mentioned the circumstance, and the selection I had made, "The Divine Purpose" was added. This had been thought of before, but I hesitated, because my selection had been previously exhibited to a lay brother of our church, who rejected the "Five Points" as a little too "strong," for such an individual. But when I offered to my new friend the books I had chosen for him, to my delight, and no small surprise he took hold of Dickinson with comparative eagerness, saying, that it was doctrine that he wanted. He purchased all the volumes selected, with the exception of the "Anxious Inquirer," which I left in the same house, as I afterwards disposed of it to the bar-keeper, in paying my bill. I presented to the gentleman the tracts above mentioned. When I left him, he gave me his address, requesting me on my return home to write to him "some scriptural testimony" that Jesus Christ is entitled to "supreme adoration;" and accordingly I have filled a foolscap sheet with parallel passages of the Old and New Testaments, together with such reflections as my mind suggested, bearing on this subject. Making free use of such books of reference as my own library afforded to assist me in such an important and unexpected call, to give a reason of the hope that is in me."

PUBLICATIONS OF THE BOARD.

The Board have lately republished

THE DOCTRINAL DIFFERENCES WHICH HAVE AGITATED AND DIVIDED THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH; or Old and New Theology. By James Wood, D. D. Enlarged edition. Price 62½ cents.

In the Introduction to this third edition of his popular and highly useful work, the author says, "The following treatise is designed to demonstrate that the issue between the two parties in the late controversy in the Presbyterian Church was strictly a doctrinal one. Hence the work consists mainly of a comparison of doctrinal views, as contained in the productions of Old and New-school writers. Near the close of the volume we remark, 'It has been our aim, both in our statements and quotations, to exhibit the doctrines of the New Theology, just as they are, without the least exaggeration. For this purpose our extracts from New-school authors have been numerous, and sufficiently extended as to length, to give a correct view of their sentiments. But if it can be made to appear that we have misrepresented their views in a single important point, we shall cheerfully rectify the mistake.' The first edition was published in 1838; and the second in 1845. It has been circulated widely; but up to the present time, (1853,) no refutation has been attempted, and no corrections proposed. Is not this silence a virtual admission of the fidelity of our quotations, and the essential verity of our statements? It has been denied, indeed, that the New-school Presbyterians, as a body, maintain the errors imputed to them by their Old-school brethren; and yet the existence of those errors among them, they themselves acknowledge."

As a specimen of the work, we select a few paragraphs, which exhibit one of the New-school theories of regeneration. The author righly introduces a diagram, published by the Rev. Dr. Gilbert for the purpose of illustrating the new theory, and which demonstrates that the difference between the Old and New-school was from far being a mere logomachy. And it should be remembered that the inventor and publisher of this diagram was subsequently, in the organization of the New-school General Assembly in May, 1838, chosen Permanent Clerk!

During the progress of the discussion concerning the New Theology, it was alleged by some, by way of objection to the new theory, that it involved the principle that regeneration is not an instantaneous but a gradual work. This allegation, so far as I recollect, was for a time neither admitted nor denied. But recently the doctrine of gradual regeneration has been avowed. Mr. Gilbert, of Wilmington, Delaware, published in the Philadelphian in 1833, a number of communications on this subject; which were afterwards revised and enlarged, and in 1836, at the "earnest request" of the "members of the Ministers' Meeting of New Castle county, Delaware," were published in a pamphlet form, under the title of "Moral Suasion; or Regeneration not a Miracle," &c. It is dedicated to the members of the Ministers' Meeting, and to the Elders of the churches under their pastoral charge. These facts appear to show that Mr. Gilbert's views accord with the sentiments of the other ministers with whom he is associated in that State, and that they desire to have them prevail throughout their churches.

Mr. Gilbert affirms that "the Bible knows no instantaneous regeneration;" this is a refinement of theological philosophers. Being born again and changing the heart of stone to a heart of flesh, is a gradual process; although under some circumstances it may be a very short one." The remark of Dr. Griffin, that "motives can never change an unholy temper," &c. he calls "strange philosophy; flying not only in the face of Scripture, but of every day matters of fact." "How often," (says he,) "do we see enmity to a neighbour, corrected, moderated, subdued and turned to love, by proper motives presented to the mind? And enmity to God is restrained and subdued in the same manner." These motives, he maintains, are presented in the latter case by the Holy Spirit, who convicts, converts, and sanctifies, "by the influence of truth presented to the mind and in no other way." In one place, he says: "Regeneration cannot be wrought without the truth. It is in view of the truth, through the truth, and by the truth, the soul is convicted, converted, and sanctified from beginning to end."

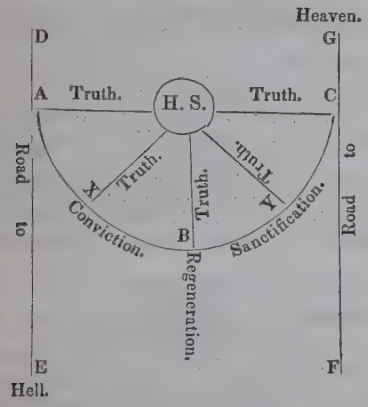
To illustrate his views he has furnished a diagram consisting of an arc of a circle, in the centre of which he has placed the Holy Spirit. From this centre are drawn straight lines to various points in the arc, representing truth, as employed by the Spirit. A sinner pursuing his way to hell is represented as being met by one of these lines, through the influence of which he is persuaded to diverge a little from the path he was pursuing, and proceeding at an angle of about forty-five degrees, he passes gradually through the several steps of conviction, regeneration, and sanctification, describing in his progress the arc of the circle; until arriving at a point directly opposite from where he started, he becomes perfect and ascends to heaven.

That the reader may see for himself this new and improved method of regeneration by attraction, we will give the diagram with the author's explanation.* We ought to remark, however, that he uses, the terms conviction and sanctification in accommodation to the views and language of others. According to his own views the whole process from beginning to end belongs to the work of regeneration. "By regeneration," says he, "is understood the divine agency in the whole process of a sinner's conviction and conversion; but in this discussion I use it as it is used by Dr. Griffin, Mr. Smith and others, in the restricted sense as distinguished from previous conviction and subsequent sanctification." "It [the Bible] knows of no regeneration as distinct from conviction and the beginning of sanctification."



THE AUTHOR'S EXPLANATION.

"Let the semicircle, A B C, represent the sinner's course from sin to holiness. Let D E represent the road to hell, in which the impenitent sinner is found by the Holy Spirit, and influenced at the point A by a new presentation of truth, to stop and turn gradually from his downward course, through the curve of conviction, towards the point B when his conviction becoming perfect and irresistible, he yields and turns from his downward course, through the process of sanctification, until at C (or at death) becoming perfect, he flies off, if you please, in a tangent, to heaven. Till he reaches the point B though turning gradually from the more direct road to hell, he is still in the downward course, and should the Spirit let go of him at any point, he flies off, by his own centrifugal force, in a moment towards perdition. The point B represents what these writers call 'Regeneration.'"

"The Holy Spirit, like the sun in the centre, is the source of all right motion; and the power by which he attracts or influences the sinner, is the power of truth, or moral motive; by which the moral agent is checked at A, and moved and controlled through the whole course from A to C. It is understood, of course, that the whole process may be longer or shorter, according to circumstances; may begin and be perfected, as with the thief on the cross, in a single day; or as in the case of Methuselah, may occupy nine hundred or one thousand years. Conviction, also, may be short, and sanctification long, or the reverse. But conviction must, from the nature of the case, precede regeneration, or regeneration cannot be a rational change. A physical change may take place without conviction; but physical regeneration is a thing which I cannot comprehend, any more than physical conviction or physical sanctification. The doctrine of the moral suasionists is, that the influence which convicts, also regenerates and sanctifies. That the same power which moves the sinner from A to B moves him through the point B and along the line to C. And that the whole change is wrought through appropriate means, without a miracle, by the Holy Spirit."

Agreeably to these ideas of gradual progress from the first point to the last, he says: "There is very little distinction between the last degree of sin and the lowest degree of holiness; between the last exercise of an unconverted and the first of a converted man; between the last feeble struggle of selfishness and the first feeble exercise of love." . . . . "There is a great difference between supreme selfishness and supreme love in their extremes; but between the last feeble influence of selfishness and the first feeble exercise of love to God, the difference is as imperceptible, as between the adjacent sides of the equatorial line." . . . . "The point B on the diagram represents the transition line. And it may be asked, Is it not an important one? I answer, Yes. Important on many accounts, but not because of any special influence used then, but like the equator, as a measure of relative progress, and as the era of a great change in all our moral relations and circumstances. Like the equatorial line, however, it is in itself of no consequence at all."

If this were not a subject too serious for ridicule, Mr. Gilbert might be successfully assailed by this weapon. He has fairly exposed himself to this mode of attack. But if I possessed a talent for the humorous, and were disposed to indulge in it, I feel too much shocked at his method of illustration to treat it with ridicule. He appears to have felt himself, that he would run "the risk of being counted very presumptuous;" and I doubt not he was correct in his apprehensions. A majority of his readers, it seems to me, (unless they belong to a particular class,) will feel that he has "trodden on holy ground," without "taking his shoes from off his feet;" that he has "put forth his hand and touched the ark of God," without "sanctifying himself;" or in other words, that he has so presented the subject, as to make him appear almost profane.

This very circumstance, however, serves to show the fallacy of these new doctrines. Mr. Gilbert uses no irreverent language—he does not caricature the New Theology. The views expressed by different writers as quoted in the present chapter, if carried out to their full extent, and illustrated by a diagram, could not perhaps be exhibited more accurately than by that which has been presented. But a description given in words, which have often an equivocal or doubtful import, produces not only a less vivid, but a less accurate impression, than that which is made by a figure faithfully drawn and presented to the eye. This remark is true not only in reference to landscapes, &c., but to a certain extent in regard to moral and religious truth. Mr. Gilbert has shown by his diagram, that it is capable of being employed in the present instance; and possibly it may be of service to the cause of truth, by showing in a more striking manner than can be exhibited by quoting their language, the dangerous extremes to which those men are tending. Give not only words but visibility to their doctrines—let them be seen as well as heard—and they will arouse the feelings of many who have not before been seriously alarmed.

The pastoral relation between the Rev. Wm. H. Kirk and the Solebury church has been dissolved.

On the 7th of April, by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, the pastoral relation between the Rev. William H. Ruffner and the 7th church, Philadelphia, was dissolved.

CALLS.

The Rev. John M. Cochran has accepted a call from the church in Indianola, Texas.

The Rev. Robert McCartee, D. D., has accepted a call from the Canal Street church, New York.

The Rev. Joshua Phelps has received a call from the church in Burlington, Iowa.

The Rev. Henry J. Vandyke has received a call from the First church in Brooklyn, New York.

The Rev. A. T. Hendricks has accepted a call from the church of Petersburg, Indiana.—

The Rev. John Crozier has received a call from the church of Iowa city.

The Rev. John A. Scott has declined the call from the Third church of Baltimore, Maryland.

ORDINATIONS AND INSTALLATIONS.

On the — of March the Rev. C. A. Stilman was installed pastor of the church of Gainesville, Alabama.

LICENSURES.

On the 7th of April, the Presbytery of Philadelphia licensed Messrs. Henry E. Spayd, J. Henry Kaufman, and Alexander W. Sproull to preach the gospel.

CHANGES OF POST-OFFICE ADDRESS.

The post-office address of the Rev. William H. Kirk is Albany, New York.

That of the Rev. Charles White is Berryville, Clark County, Virginia.

That of the Rev. J. W. Knott is Shelby, Richland County, Ohio.

That of the Rev. A. Barr is Danville, Pennsylvania.

That of the Rev. J. W. Scott, D. D., is Washington, Pennsylvania.

That of the Rev. R. F. Bunting is La Grange, Fayette County, Texas.

That of the Rev. Luther Dod is Bloomington, McLean County, Illinois.

That of the Rev. John Arthur is Hibernia, Franklin county, Ohio.

That of the Rev. Daniel Motzer is Warrentown, Virginia.

DEATHS.

On the 31st of January, the Rev. James H. Anderson, principal of Maumee Presbyterial Academy, aged 41 years.

On the — of March, the Rev. Nicholas Murray, Professor in Washington College, Pennsylvania.

On the 21st March, the Rev. W. F. Ferguson, D. D., President of McDonough College, Illinois.

On the 18th of April, the Rev. James Lowrie, D. D., of Washington City.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Rev. J. C. Knapp has accepted the Chaplaincy and Professorship of Ethics and Belles Lettres in the Military College at Drennon Springs, Kentucky. His post-office address is Drennon Springs, Kentucky.

Union Theological Seminary, Virginia.—We are gratified to learn that Rev. R. L. Dabney, of Lexington Presbytery, has been unanimously elected to the vacant Professorship in this Institution. Mr. Dabney is a man of talents, and will, no doubt, prove a valuable acquisition to the Seminary.

The Rev. A. Williams, Professor of Languages in the Ohio University, has been elected Professor of Latin Language and Literature in Jefferson College, Pennsylvania.

The Rev. Stuart Robinson has resigned his charge as pastor of the Independent Church in Baltimore.

Church Burnt.—We have learned, through the daily papers, with regret, that the Westminster church at Utica, New York, of which the Rev. H. S. Dickson is pastor, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 10th inst. There was an insurance of $3500 on the building, but we presume this amount will go but a little way towards covering the loss. In a few days $21,000 were subscribed to rebuild it.

The Synod of Illinois, at its last sessions, accepted the charter of McDonough College, which had been tendered them, and made arrangements for appointing Trustees and raising an endowment, and also for selecting another location, unless it should be endowed at Macomb, its present site.

The Presbyterian church in Grand street, of which the Rev. Dr. McElroy is pastor, has been sold to the Associate Presbyterian congregation, now worshipping in Broome street, under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Thompson, (formerly Rev. Dr. Stark's.) The sale was made for fifty-five thousand dollars, and Mr. Thompson's congregation are to have possession on the first of July next. It will be remembered that Dr. McElroy's congregation are building a new and elegant edifice in the upper part of the city.

A negotiation has been going on between the city authorities of New York and the trustees of the Brick Church, where Dr. Spring has ministered for more than forty years, with a view to the sale of the present church property. The ground was given by the city to the church many years since, subject to a small ground-rent, and the consent of the city is requisite in order to a sale. The committee to whom the subject was intrusted, have reported to the Common Council in favour of the measure. The minimum value set upon the property is two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, of which, according to the terms proposed, fifty-eight thousand dollars would go to the city. The remainder the congregation would appropriate toward building a new house of worship in the upper part of the city of New York. Many hearts will be made sad by seeing the old Brick Church pass away.

THOUGHTS FOR MINISTERS.

Do not rest without success in your ministry. Success is the rule, under a living ministry; want of it is the exception.

We must have the taste of the manna in our mouth; "milk and honey" under our tongue, or we cannot tell of its sweetness.

A word spoken by you when your conscience is clear, and your heart full of God's Spirit, is worth ten thousand words spoken in unbelief and sin.

Prayer is much more powerful than preaching. It is prayer that gives preaching all its power.

If Satan can only make a covetous minister, a lover of pleasure, a lover of praise, a lover of good eating, then he has ruined your ministry.

Nothing is more needful in making a sermon memorable and impressive than logical arrangement.

Preach the word, the most essential parts of it especially. Preach the word. I would humbly suggest for the consideration of ministers whether they should not preach more in the manner of God's word. It is certain the fathers used to preach in this manner.

Brethren, they will not thank us in eternity for speaking smooth things, and crying, "Peace, peace," when there is no peace. No, they may praise us now, but they will curse our flattery in eternity.

Speak boldly; what matter in eternity the slight awkwardnesses of time.

It has been said of a good man, "He fed on the word, not in order to prepare himself for his people, but for personal edification." To do so was a fundamental rule with him.

It was his wish to arrive near the primitive mode of expounding Scripture in his sermons. He said, "I am just an interpreter of Scripture in my sermons."

Not the words he spoke, but the holy manner in which he spoke, was the chief means of arresting souls.—McCheyne.

Incentives to Action.—Could I this day remove the veil that covers the heavenly world; could I place you upon the summit of one of the luminous hills of Paradise; could I impart vigour to your visual faculties, and extend their power to the almost interminable regions of the blessed; could I raise your eyes to the Lamb in the midst of the throne, from whose countenance beams the felicity of the redeemed; could I open your ears to the songs of the conquerors, and the acclamation of the martyrs, which, swelling in the majesty of thunder, ascend through the expanse of heaven, and fill with acceptance the ear of God; could I cheer your hearts with the sight of multitudes entering in blessed succession, through the mediation of Jesus, from Hindostan, from Africa, and the islands of the Southern Sea—the trophies of divine power, the purchase of the Saviour's blood, the gems that shall ever sparkle in the Mediator's crown, the first fruits of the missionary labours—what inspiration would the glorious object impart to your souls! Work, oh work while it is day; whatever your minds find to suggest, whatever your hands find to do, do it now. No device, no work in the grave. Turn your moistened eyes to my yet recent grave, and let the sight arouse, animate, and sustain your exertions. I did a little, and if my constitution sunk under the pressure, I regret that my nerves were not nerves of brass, and my limited measure of threescore years and ten did not extend to an antediluvian age. Should your hearts ever feel languor invading their powers of action, hasten to Calvary. There, redeeming love will invigorate your fading faculties, and constrain you to put forth all your strength in the cause of him who bled for you. Look forward, each of you, to the eventful hour when the Son of God shall pronounce over you the sentence that shall ever form your destiny of blessedness:—"Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Dr. Waugh.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, will hold its next annual meeting in the Central Presbyterian Church, in the city of Philadelphia, at eleven o'clock, A. M., on Thursday, the 19th of May next, and will be opened with a sermon by the Rev. John C. Lord, D. D., the Moderator of the last Assembly.

☞ The Committee of Commissions will meet in the Lecture-room of the Central Church, on the Wednesday afternoon preceding, at four o'clock, and in the evening at eight o'clock, to receive Commissions, and on Thursday morning, the day of the meeting, at nine o'clock, for the same purpose.

John Leyburn, Stated Clerk.
Alexander T. McGill, Permanent Clerk.
May 1, 1853.

P. S. Stated Clerks of Presbyteries are respectfully requested to make out their lists of persons entitled to the Minutes on a separate sheet, and to send that, together with moneys for the Minutes, to G. H. Van Gelder, Esq., Philadelphia, Treasurer of the General Assembly.

TO STATED CLERKS OF PRESBYTERIES.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly wishes us to inform the Stated Clerks of Presbyteries that he will furnish them with blanks for Presbyterial Reports, as they may order them. Blanks for Sessional Reports are not furnished by the Stated Clerk, but are published and for sale by the Board of Publication.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

As applications from young ministers and others for the back volumes of the Home and Foreign Record are now becoming frequent, we find it expedient to give the general notice, that no copies of the volume for 1850 are on hand of either edition. That we have still a few copies of the newspaper edition for 1851 and 1852, which can be had bound for 87½ cents each. We would suggest to those who have a copy of the volume for 1850, the propriety of preserving it, as in a few years it will be much sought after as a valuable depository of original information.

OUR REST.

"The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us."

My feet are worn and weary with the march
O'er the rough road and up the steep-hill side;
Oh! city of our God, I fain would see
Thy pastures green, where peaceful waters glide.

My hands are weary, too, with toiling on,
Day after day for perishable meat;
Oh! city of our God, I fain would rest—
I sigh to gain thy glorious mercy-seat.

My garments, travel-worn and stained with dust,
Oft rent by briars and thorns that crowd my way,
Would fain be made, O Lord, my righteousness,
Spotless and white in heaven's unclouded ray.

My eyes are weary looking at the sin,
Impiety, and scorn, upon the earth;
Oh! city of our God within thy walls,
All—all are clothed again with thy new birth.

My heart is weary of its own deep sin—
Sinning, repenting, sinning still again;
When shall my soul thy glorious presence feel,
And find, dear Saviour, it is free from stain?—

Patience, poor soul, the Saviour's feet were worn;
The Saviour's heart and hands were weary, too;
His garments stained, and travel-worn and old;
His vision blinded with a pitying dew.

Love thou the path of sorrow that he trod;
Toil on, and wait in patience for thy rest;
Oh! city of our God, we soon shall see
Thy glorious walls—home of the loved and blest!

THE WOLF-SCALP.

It is the remark of an old writer, that "he who is disposed to mark the providences of God, will never be at a loss for providences to observe." The doctrine of a particular providence, which concerns itself not only in the revolutions of empires, but in the most minute circumstances of a believer's lot, has been much abused by ignorance and fanaticism, and thus been brought into discredit; but still it is a doctrine of revelation, and has proved to the people of God, in all ages, a ground of confidence and a source of consolation. It is the Divine Saviour himself who says, "The hairs of your head are all numbered."

The Presbyterian Board of Publication have published a little volume entitled "The Providence of God displayed in a Series of interesting Facts." It is a collection of authentic anecdotes, illustrative of a particular overruling Providence, the perusal of which will tend to deepen the impression in the serious mind, that the world is under the direction of a vigilant Providence, and not of blind chance. To the remarkable facts there stated, I would add one which I believe has never appeared in print. It was communicated to me by a venerable patriarch in the Western Church, the late Rev. Joseph Patterson, who was familiar with the circumstances. Although my imperfect memory does not enable me to relate the anecdote with that particularity of time, place, and name, which gave to my aged relative's narrative such a life-like freshness and interest, the main circumstances, even at the distance of thirty or more years since I first heard them, are indelibly fixed on my mind.

The old log meeting-house in which a Presbyterian congregation in Western Pennsylvania had long worshipped, had fallen so much into decay, that a meeting of the church was called, to consider the propriety of taking measures for the erection of a new house. Moved with a zeal for the honour of God's house, and with a spirit of self-denying liberality not too common in these more prosperous days, the meeting resolved at once to commence a subscription for the purpose. A paper was properly headed, and handed to the ruling elders of the church first, as it was naturally expected that they should set an example of liberality to the people. One of them was a poor man in this world's goods, but rich in faith, who walked with God, and acknowledged him in all his ways. He felt constrained to set down his name for eight dollars, a large sum for a man in his circumstances in those days, more than half a century before California had begun to pour her golden treasures into the land. He hoped, by industry and economy, with the blessing of God, to raise the sum before the time of payment should arrive, which was many months ahead; but everything seemed to go against him. With all his exertions, he had not been able to save a dollar, after defraying his most frugal household expenses. To add to his perplexities, he owed a bill of two dollars for taxes, which was to be paid at the same time. With a heavy heart, he started on foot to the place of meeting, which was at the county-town, several miles distant, with his rifle on his shoulder—the backwoodsman's inseparable companion in those days, when a hostile Indian or a wild beast might be expected at any moment to cross his path. As he proceeded on his solitary way through the woods, he was permitted to talk familiarly with the Lord on the subject of his painful dilemma; and we may suppose that he pled with him somewhat in this manner:

"Lord, thou knowest that it was not in any spirit of vain boasting that I took on me this obligation, but in humble reliance on thy providence, and with a single eye to thy glory. Wilt thou not graciously interpose to save thy servant from the disgrace of a broken pledge, and thy holy cause, which is dearer to me than life, from discredit and reproach? Thou hast all power in heaven and earth. The silver and the gold are thine. I ask not for my righteousness' sake, but for thine own name's sake. I believe; Lord, help mine unbelief!" While thus pleading, all his burden was removed, and he felt an assurance that all would be well; but how he could not imagine. He had nearly reached his destination, when he perceived a large wolf standing right across his path, as if spell-bound, and awaiting his fate. Raising his trusty rifle, and taking an unerring aim, he brought the animal to the ground with a ball through the heart. In a few minutes he had its bleeding scalp removed and deposited safely in his pocket, and went on his way rejoicing in the Lord. But what was the ground of his exultation and gratitude? Was it his deliverance from danger? No; he was too true a backwoodsman to fear any monster of the forest while he had his rifle in his hand. Wait, reader, and you shall learn. When he reached the town he proceeded straight to the office of the county treasurer, and handed him his wolf-scalp, and at the same time, his bill for taxes. The farmers had suffered so much in their flocks from the depredation of wolves, that a reward had been offered for the scalp of every wolf killed within the county. The treasurer, taking it, said, "I need not put you to your oath that the wolf to which this belonged was killed within the county; I find it is still warm." Putting a receipt on his bill for two dollars, he handed him eight dollars, the balance of the premium. Thence the good man proceeded to the church-meeting, and, with feelings of delight which may be more easily conceived than expressed, he paid his subscription for the new meeting-house.

Let the sceptic talk of a lucky accident, and laugh at the credulity which can see the finger of God in this; I envy him not. To me, it is a most rational, as well as consoling truth, that not a sparrow falls to the ground, without our Heavenly Father; and while I believe that Elijah was literally fed by "ravens," and not by "merchants," or "Arabians," or by "the inhabitants of Arbo," as some neological commentators would translate the word, I am prepared to believe any well authenticated facts of Divine interposition in behalf of God's afflicted and believing people. J. P. E.

THE ASSEMBLY'S CATECHISM.

The Assembly's Catechism will stand an enduring monument of Christian genius, as well as a precious aid to parents in fixing truth in the mind. It is indeed a skeleton; but the bones, the foundation, the first principles of truth are there. The sentiments of the Bible are expressed as well as brief terms of uninspired men can express them. The Christian mind, when it has most carefully and prayerfully analyzed divine truth, will come to its conclusions, and strive to express its ideas. Then why not give it to children, and let them possess, by dint of repetition, this frame-work of Christian doctrine. In after life, they can build upon it, cover it, and adorn it with the ample materials which the Bible affords. If you make a strong solution of alum, of warm temperature, and let it cool to the right degree, and then drop in one little crystal, instantly you shall see all the particles, before invisible, coursing their way each to its proper place, till the sides of your container covered with similar crystals, glow with beauty and richness, like a fairy's grotto. Fix the Assembly's Catechism in the mind of a child, and in some future day the edifice of God's truth may suddenly shine forth in all its proportions, its adorning, and its glory, like the resplendent sun. God the Holy Sanctifier can do it. Blessed be his name, he does do it, and in such temples he dwells, he lives, and is the light thereof.—Rev. J. Richards, D. D.

CALIFORNIA.

Present condition and obligations of Protestantism.

We have within a few days received a communication from our esteemed brother, Rev. Albert Williams, of San Francisco, California, of great interest and value, but its length prevents its insertion entire in the Record. It has however been published entire in the papers of our Church, and will thus reach not only the eyes of our ministers and people, but their hearts also.

Certain is it, that with all the excitement which the acquisition of California, and the discovery of its immense mineral wealth has created throughout the United States, and we may add, the world, correct information relative to that wonderful land, in respect to its mineral and agricultural resources, its civil, social, moral, intellectual, and religious condition, is not as much diffused among us, as it should be. Particularly, as Protestants, we are not aware of the importance of California as a strong hold of Protestantism. Mr. Williams in his communication gives a brief history of Popery in California, from the period that the first emissaries of that religion took possession, down to the present time. Miserable and fruitless have been the results of their labours.

The entire population of California by the late official census is 224,435, and the increase in two years more than one hundred thousand! San Francisco has a population of 34,876! It must now be about 40,000.

We insert the closing part of Mr. Williams's letter, which will furnish much information, and presents the true state of the religious world in California, and points out our responsibilities as Protestants. Where are the ministers who will go—and go qualified for the work to be done there, and go with a determination to stay and fight the battle out?

While, therefore, it is true that the teeming resources of this goodly land had not been developed, and the civilized world was kept in ignorance of its advantages, chiefly for the reason that the religious, the Christian cultivation of this field had been in Popish hands, the lines of separation were removed by a righteous Providence, and the doors opened wide for the entering in of Protestant cultivators for this ample and splendid domain.

Mark the change! I admit that peculiar circumstances have conspired to produce this transformation, particularly in the enterprise and progress of secular business. But it is quite evident that another class of stewards have come into possession. And they have brought with them their wonted intelligence, enterprise, and skill; and in circumstances so prompting to effort, they are here searching out the many and extended hidden stores of wealth. Among these new comers are many who have brought with them their Bibles and a cherished love for its truths; they have not lost their regard for the Sabbath, the sanctuary, and the gospel ministry; these blessed divine instrumentalities, already in so gratifying a degree furnished to the thronging immigrants to this land, are fostered and sustained with a justly commendable zeal.

An interesting commencement has been made in the supply of California with the gospel. The beginning was small, It is now four and a half years since the first Protestant clergyman came to this country, who has made it a permanent place of residence, and of ministerial labour. Six months afterwards five others joined him in his work. Gradually the number of ministers and organized churches has increased. At the present time, the whole number of evangelical clergymen is one hundred and eleven. These are distributed among the different branches of the Church in the following proportions:—Of the Methodist Church, North, thirty-eight; Methodist Church, South, twenty-six; Congregationalist, nine; Baptists, five; New-school Presbyterians, eight; Associate Presbyterian, one; Reformed Dutch, one; German Reformed, one; Episcopalians, six; Cumberland Presbyterians, four; Old-school Presbyterians, nine.

Some of the above ministers are engaged in teaching; a few in agencies for benevolent Societies; all are, more or less, and the greater part exclusively employed in preaching. The number of distinct church organizations does not differ much from the aggregate number of ministers, probably they are somewhat fewer.

Still the country at large is very inadequately supplied with spiritual and educational instrumentalities. To the ministers and members, therefore, of our own branch of the Church, the appeal is made with earnestness, to look after the home interests of this field, in furnishing it, as far as we are able, with the enlightening and saving influences of the Protestant evangelical faith. At the beginning, we were "not a whit behind" other denominations; but that prominence which we then had has not been maintained, but has since been lost in the superior zeal of those who far out-number us. We want more preachers; and we want more teachers. It is high time to enter actively into schemes of education, and begin to lay the foundation of one or more collegiate institutions. What, with the foundation already secured in primary schools, we should at once have a beginning made towards a regular, chartered, liberally endowed, and commanding university; and this, as well to preserve the consistency of our Presbyterian reputation, as the friends and promoters of useful learning, as also to meet the wants of the rapidly multiplying population.

Our Roman Catholic neighbours, though so laggard in the cause of education when they exclusively possessed the field, are now, with all their might and skill, seeking to extend their influence, by the educational facilities they offer to our youth. With their usual boastfulness, they parade their qualifications, economy, and transcendent merit; and some of our Protestant friends are caught in the snare. The Jesuit seminary they have founded is an effect of their being brought into contact with Protestant Christian enterprise; it is also a proof that, in the view of its proprietors, there is an object to be gained. Let the stimulus of such competion, as well as other motives, prevent us from failing to furnish to the youth of California the best educational advantages which can be afforded.

These two objects, then, the interests of evangelical religion, and of sound literary and scientific learning, through the instrumentality of the Church, cannot be too earnestly and strongly commended to the members of our communion. We have churches in California, but we require more of them. We have no college, but we forthwith need one. When, therefore, our brethren in the older States are turning their attention and their faces towards us, let them think of the wide field which is open to the teacher and professor, as well as the preacher. Let them stir themselves to enter with zeal into the work which will, more and more, fill this land with healthful and elevating moral influences. If they have not capital to invest in the cause of education among us, let them come, bringing what is better, and what is especially requisite in a new undertaking, much of self-denial, fortitude, faith, and perseverance. Let them come, not needing nor willing to build on other men's foundations. Many a new field of Christian enterprise is yet open among us, to those who covet to be useful. Let the whole Church feel, that upon it as a body rest peculiarly strong obligations to send forth labourers into this inviting field. Let not our friends at a distance excuse themselves from a service, at once so promising and so urgent in its claims.

Much more I might add in direct appeal, to my ministerial and Christian brethren, to induce them to continue, more and more, to feel a kindly interest in the religious welfare of California, and materially and efficiently to aid in preventing the spread of infidelity, and the prevalence of impiety in our communities; the fear of which is even now sufficient to cast a darkening gloom over our prospects.

Protestants have nominally succeeded Papists in the possession of this field. The latter are now in an inferior position, as to numbers and influence—Protestantism is in power, and ought to maintain and improve its ascendency. It remains to be shown whether this stewardship shall be more faithfully and acceptably executed than the former. Let us think that it will be a poor substitute for the gospel, and the saving influences of Protestantism, to rear here our commercial marts for the traffic of nations; to concentrate wealth and power to compare with Phœnician or Babylonian greatness; to have schools and colleges and libraries—for these we shall have—and to accumulate all the refinements and luxuries of the world. Without the gospel, with all our gold and other teeming riches, we can be only poor. Our true riches cannot be brought out of our fertile soil, nor dug out of the mines; but the great King in Zion alone can give us the true riches, through the instrumentality of his Church, the unsearchable riches of the knowledge of Christ. That this great blessing may not be withheld, is the desire and ardent prayer of Yours truly,

Albert Williams.

MORE MINISTERS NEEDED.

We publish below a short extract from a letter which we recently received from the Rev. J. S. Armistead, of Cumberland county, Virginia. It makes an earnest appeal for more labourers, and alludes briefly to the kind of men needed, and where the Church must look in this extremity for influences to enlarge and build up Zion. That we all need to cultivate more of the spirit of our Master, there can be no doubt; and just in proportion to our peculiar situation, and the great mission God has given us as a Church to perform, do we need these gracious influences. God's people needs to be waked up to see—in a measure at least—the greatness of the work to be accomplished, as well as the great need of faithful labourers. Shall there not be more prayer to the Lord of the harvest? He surely encourages us to make this petition.

"What is to be done to supply our vacant churches with the ministry of the gospel? and how are our borders to be enlarged? We receive frequent applications to send ministers, but we can find none to send. Really things do look gloomy for our beloved Zion. We have now quite a number of vacant churches in our Presbytery, and yet a large territory to be occupied, and we have looked in every direction for ministers to do the Lord's work, and see as yet no prospect of a supply. I trust that the feeling is becoming general among our ministers and people, that we must pray more to the Lord of the harvest, and that we must labour with more faith and zeal to build up the kingdom of our Master. I am persuaded that the present pattern of our ministry, and of the piety of our people, must be altered, before much will be done to supply the present awful destitution of ministers in our Church. The great question is, how shall we get our ministers and people wide awake to the actual condition of things? I am thinking of trying at the coming meeting of our Presbytery, to get a meeting of inquiry, or a convention, or an extended free conversation on the state of religion in our churches, so that we may see the necessity of more vigorous efforts, and more earnest prayer, to get the Lord's people on some better ground. The fathers of the Presbyterian Church laid its foundations by earnest prayer to the God of salvation, and by vigorous and self-denying effort; surely we may, and ought to build it up, by the same means. The Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save: his ear is not heavy, that it cannot hear.

FROM AN ITINERANT MISSIONARY IN OHIO.—MORE LABOURERS NEEDED—WHO WILL GO?

Rev. and Dear Sir—The first quarter of the present missionary year has just closed, making it necessary for me to report to the Board; and in doing so I have only to say that my labours in this field have been for the quarter as heretofore reported. The churches and missionary stations in connection with them I endeavour to supply as much as possible on the Sabbath. On this account, my labours on the Sabbath are necessarily very much divided—too much so for the good of the several churches, and entirely too laborious for me to continue to do so much longer. I have now been more than five years in this field as an itinerant missionary of the Board, without having my ride greatly lessened at any one time, or my labours materially decreased. I have induced two brethren, and only two, to take, at different times, a part of the territory occupied by myself the first year. One of these has, now, in the mysterious providence of God, been called to his reward, (the Rev. James H. Anderson,) the other, Rev. D. S. Anderson, has been called to take his brother's place in the Academy under the care of this Presbytery, so that I am again left alone as a constant labourer in all that part of our Presbytery lying on the north side of the Maumee river. You, dear sir, and the Board, will at once perceive the necessity of exerting your powerful influence to induce some of our young men, say from Princeton, to come to this field, and to our relief. A few more hardships and exposures, such as have caused, it is believed, the premature death of our dear brother Anderson, may be the means of removing another of us from this field soon; and then the Maumee Presbytery must be dissolved, and our Zion long mourn, because no one was found with sufficient self-denial to "go out into the highways and hedges" of this Presbytery. We need assistance, and must have it, if we would maintain the ground we now occupy. As the matter now stands, I have little hope of benefiting to any considerable extent, the churches among which my labours are so much divided. It is impossible for me to attend prayer meetings, monthly concerts, Sabbath schools; get up and attend Bible and Catechetical classes, and give that interest to them all, in all the churches, necessary to their advancement. Nor is it possible for me to visit and instruct from house to house, which I know to be necessary to the proper discharge of duty, on account of the distance to be travelled every week to meet my appointments. We have now two vacant churches, and no one to preach to them even on Sabbath. Others must become vacant soon without more labourers. O that the Great Head of the Church would direct the steps of some faithful brother to this field!

Yours very truly, J. M. C.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN WISCONSIN.

Dying Testimony to the Gracious Doctrines of our Church—A promising Missionary field.

The early history of this little church, with which I have laboured since the middle of November last, you are probably well acquainted with. You know the opposition from those around, to its organization in its present form and ecclesiastical relation. But it is with great satisfaction that I have reviewed the providence of God, as seen in its organization and history up to the present time, as I have learned it from its members.

Probably no other man could have effected its organization as it is, than our lamented brother Stuart. He faithfully instructed them in the doctrines of the word of God, and established the church therein. And then, when it was said that it was all of the head—that there was no heart, and that there was no, or very little piety in the Presbyterian Church—that their religion consisted in cold dogmas—God called that dear brother up from his field of labour in his visible church to the church triumphant. On his death-bed he witnessed to the power of the doctrines he had preached to sustain the soul in the hour of death. The wicked stood by his death-bed in amazement. Is this religion? said they. How can he part with his young and beloved wife and infant child (little Toney) so cheerfully? They were told—"he believes in the Saviour crucified, and in justification and eternal life through him, as he has preached to you." "And how can his wife encourage him—keep your eye on the Saviour—forgetting herself, so soon to be a widow?" They were told "she fully believes these great eternal truths herself." "Could I die as he dies I would wish to die to-day," said a wicked man present.

Those who had said his religion is all of the head, were obliged to confess "he truly is a Christian." The labours of that dear brother are still visible. How true, "and their works do follow them." The opposition to this church still exists, although shorn in a great degree of its strength. The church has been supplied with one year of steady preaching from Mr. ——, and with this exception they have been destitute, except as they have been supplied by the brethren of the Presbytery; and they to do so have made great exertions, some travelling over one hundred miles.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

AN OBJECTION TO MISSIONS.

There are persons, reckoned by some so numerous as to form no inconsiderable class, whose benevolence possesses the remarkable quality of being general, without including any particulars! Or, in another aspect, it is a sentiment, highly beautiful and virtuous in appearance, but incapable of any practical applications. It is illustrated in graphic and affecting delineations of human misery and human happiness—very artistic "dissolving views" of these realities, but unaccompanied by any available plan, or even plausible theory, for man's relief from the infelicities of his condition. Nor is this serious defect the only fault we find in this spurious benevolence. It indulges in captious criticism of the plans and efforts of true benevolence, and utters obloquy against both the measures and motives of the Christian philanthropist, on account of incidental circumstances connected with his works, not peculiarly, but in common with all human undertakings.

These tender-hearted persons utter pathetic laments over the loss of life and treasure in carrying on the work of missions; and they could almost blame the church for persisting in an enterprise in which so many precious lives have been lost, and so many precious dollars have been expended. They shudder at the recital of the perils encountered by the missionary—perils by sea and land, perils by noxious climates, perils by barbarous men—and they grieve for the expenditure of money in conveying them to their fields of labour, and in supporting them there. They confess themselves shocked at the idea of talented young men, and amiable and refined young women, exposing themselves to the privations and mortifications of such a life, and especially when they consider how much money it takes to sustain them. Indeed, it is not easy to decide, whether their feeling of humanity, or their principles of financial economy are most disturbed.

The objections would approach nearer to validity, if the missionary enterprise claimed to have for its workmen an immunity from trials, privations, and death. But death is the common lot of our race, and expense for subsistence is not incurred in the missionary's case alone. The world has its enterprises too. And what sacrifice of life and treasure has occurred, in carrying on the world's missions of empire and aggrandizement! The road to California may be traced by the graves that border it, as readily as the thoroughfares of our country by the telegraph wires. Death, in all the appalling forms of disease, exhaustion, violence, and starvation, has filled those graves with the young and hopeful sons of our land. Yet the living current still flows on, in the same grave-girt channel. Shipwrecks do not abrogate marine commerce; financial embarrassments do not terminate trade; mortality does not supercede, it rather stimulates the activities of life. That men suffer and die in the missionary service is no better reason for abandoning that work, than the same circumstances would present against the prosecution of any other. And the same remark applies to the matter of expense. Men cannot live without cost in any position. And it is ridiculously absurd to complain of the expense of supporting men, in an enterprise that cannot be carried on without men.

But why is such puerile objections urged against the work of missions? Benevolence is the pretended basis, and reason the avowed form, of the objection. Yet it is as irrational as it is void of benevolence. It is not urged against the world's enterprises; one perilous expedition after another has proceeded to the Arctic seas, amid the plaudits of mankind. Why then this objection here? It is because the objector does not, in reality, value the object contemplated in Christian missions. It is not that he loves the missionary more, but his mission less. The conversion of sinners is, in his esteem, a less important work than the construction of railroads, or the draining of unproductive lands. It is because the love of the world and of the things that are in the world, is a stronger passion than the love of Christ.

I trust no Christian will entertain this hypocritical benevolence, or yield the slightest respect to the weak sophistries which it suggests. The work of missions, whether in our own or in foreign lands, is a noble one. It was planned by the Son of God, and revealed, in its simplicity, by his mandate, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." And is there not a laudable heroism in facing the dangers and bearing the hardships connected with its execution? A pure and exalted benevolence stimulates and cheers the Christian missionary, as he goes, not to enrich himself, but to bless others, to raise up the debased, to enlighten those who sit in darkness, to proclaim salvation through Jesus Christ to the lost. He may long labour and suffer, or he may early die at his post; the enterprise is not dishonoured by his trials or his death.

O, Christian, will you not sustain this good cause? Will you not ascribe to their true source the benevolence, the self-denial, the heroism of the missionary,

"By pleasure unsubdued, unbroke by pain?"

And will you not share the faith, and hope, and love, that animate his soul in labours, and cheer it even in death,

"All-bearing, all-attempting till he falls,
And when he falls writes 'victory' on his shield?"

J. F. McLaren.

Allegheny City, April 1, 1853.

AN INTERESTING INCIDENT IN MISSIONARY LIFE.

One of our missionaries now labouring in an interesting field in New Jersey, among the foreign population, himself a Foreigner, and an excellent, laborious brother, thus writes us:

"I must now give you an account of a singular marriage, such as I never had during the administration of my office during the last twenty-four years. A little while since I married a pair, of which the bridegroom was a Frenchman, who understood neither German nor English, the bride, on the contrary, was a German, who understood neither French nor English. I was therefore obliged to perform the ceremony, and propose the usual questions in both the French and German languages. May they be united in faith and love, in a common Saviour."

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ——, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

WHY ARE CANDIDATES DECREASING?

The Board of Education have frequently alluded to the decrease of candidates in their reports, periodicals, documents, &c. It is a subject which must be kept before the Church. The following article is from the "Presbyterian Herald," of Louisville, Kentucky.

"We see it stated by many of our ecclesiastical bodies, that candidates for the Gospel ministry are decreasing. Almost every thing else is on the increase and advance. This fact, which actual statistical figures clearly show, well deserves our attention, for it has a bearing upon the prosperity of the Church at home, and upon the missionary operations in foreign lands. "Every phenomenon supposes a cause," and this decrease is only the reaction of certain things—the effect of a cause. We purpose to glance at some of the reasons why it is so.

1. There is not that pecuniary assistance afforded to candidates that there was years ago. We well recollect when every suitable person could obtain timely aid through his whole course of study, preparatory, collegiate, and theological. It is not now given to the extent it was.* It is well understood, in some quarters at least, that it is about as well for a young man to depend on himself as on educational societies.† The Church should be judicious in the disbursement of its funds, but worthy indigent young men should not be embarrassed and crippled for the want of aid. I have no doubt many have been deterred from this cause. They have not been willing—they have not thought it judicious to incur all the pecuniary embarrassments that they must, of necessity, have endured under existing circumstances.

2. It costs more now to prepare for the ministry than it did years ago. In some of our Seminaries, I am told, the expenses have increased 25 or 30 per cent. within a few years, and public sentiment is not just what it was in respect to a young man's aiding himself, in one way and another, with his own hands. This has had its influence.

3. The tendency to change has greatly increased, both on the part of the people and the ministry. This has had something to do in the matter. It is not to be denied that ministers, in many instances, have encouraged this state of things, in their congregations, by yielding to slight causes and suffering dissolutions to occur when there was no just ground for them. In many of these dissolutions Christ's ambassadors have been grossly injured and shamefully betrayed. There are many noble examples, it is true, in which ministers and people have not removed the old "land-mark." O, that there were more! Yet it must be admitted that the duration of the pastoral relation, on an average, has greatly shortened, compared to what it was years ago. And hence the prospect before the candidate is, that he may be driven to and fro almost by every wind that blows. He may not reckon with any degree of certainty or permanency. The prospect of no home, nor abiding place, is repugnant to our nature. Many shrink from encountering it.

4. The ministry has not been supported, pecuniarily, as it deserves, nor as the Church has the ability to do. I think I may safely say, that not one half of the Presbyterian ministers in our country are supported as they should be. I am satisfied, that if there was not something more to support and encourage Christ's ambassadors than the salaries they receive, not one-fourth of the congregations west of the mountains, in our whole Church, would have the ministry of the word in one year.

With many, the scanty promised salary is kept back, and now most of our missionaries in the West, owing to an empty treasury, are suffering, and are put to "their wits' end" to know how to get along. These are not isolated facts, but known and felt by scores and hundreds. The reflection will come home to them that there are doors to comfort and opulence opened to them in other callings, and that they might have had these as well as others. Nothing can support them suffering the want of many things, but that they are toiling for "other worlds than this." Noble men, and true, self-sacrificing followers of Christ! How much the Presbyterian Church and the world owe to such!

But these trials and embarrassments are known to those whose thoughts are turned towards the ministry, for many of them are ministers' sons. Concerning some of these things we speak what we do know and feel.

An inadequate support is certainly one cause of the decrease.

5. The ministry has not the respect it once had. The profession is "looked down upon" by many as menial, and not as bearing the embassy of heaven to men. There are several things operating and have operated to bring about this. The ministry is not entirely exempt from blame, while it is lamentably true that the churches do not love, esteem, and venerate them as formerly, "for their work's sake."

6. Young men of suitable talents and acquirements have not been encouraged to prepare for this work. This cause has been rather the result of other causes. Ministers, to tell the truth, have not felt like encouraging their sons to embark in a calling so illy supported, and little respected and loved by the Church. Laymen have felt much so, too. There has been an error here, doubtless. The good of the Church of Christ, as well as of the world, depend on the preaching of the word.

Our Presbyteries have not been vigilant and active enough in this matter. Nor have they manifested sufficient patience and interest in candidates and in their examinations, forgetting, almost, that this is a part of their work.

7. I will mention one more reason—the want of powerful and extensive revivals of religion. Revivals of religion are embraced in the divine economy. For some years back, unless we make the last year an exception, there has been a great drought in our land. The gentle showers of heaven have been withheld, and from many churches the gentle dew of divine influence in the conversion of sinners. This has doubtless had a great effect in producing the state of things that we deplore, for a large portion of those preaching the gospel have been received in revivals.

There are two reflections from this subject we will notice:

1. Something is wrong. While other professions are being crowded with candidates, there should not be wanting students in the "schools of the prophets." The wants of a perishing world were never greater or more pressing; the work of the ministry never more important; hence something is wrong, and something must be done.

2. I believe the Lord intends that the churches shall feel differently towards the ministry. He may leave them to feel their need so much that they may be compelled to "pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth labourers into his harvest."

S. S. P.

THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS AND PIOUS PARENTS.

Providence is an unerring teacher. God expresses truth in the execution of his decrees. Are there any facts to show the connection between the piety of parents and the supply of the ministry? Let the reader ponder upon this extract, taken from a late number of the Presbyterian:

"Whatever may be the occasional demonstrations of God's providence and grace, a careful examination of facts would abundantly show that the divine blessing, as a general rule, is upon the seed of believers. A very large majority of ministers of the gospel are the children of pious parents, whose faithful instructions and earnest prayers have resulted in their conversion and entrance on the ministry. Almost all the most eminent of God's servants, whose biographies have been written, have been nurtured by godly mothers. The piety of the family circle is the harvest-ground for the Church and the ministry. The following statistics, furnished us by a student of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, New Jersey, will be found interesting, and will verify the principle that God puts special honour on the faithful training of children by his professing people.

"It has been ascertained, upon careful inquiry," says our correspondent, "that of the one hundred and twenty students in this Seminary this session, ninety-five had both parents pious, eighteen had pious mothers only, one a pious father only, and five had neither of their parents pious. Of the whole number, twenty-two, or about one-fifth, were sons of ministers, and a large proportion of the remainder sons of ruling elders.

The different classes stand as follows:

	Both parents pious.	Mothers only pious.	Fathers only pious.	Neither parents pious.	Ministers' sons.
1st Class,*	37	5	.	3	7
2d Class,	26	8	1	2	5
3d Class,	32	5	.	.	10
	95	18	1	5	22

* Including one resident graduate.

* We are not aware that aid is not granted now to the same extent that it was formerly. The Board of Education has made no diminution in the amount of aid; nor do we think that there is less disposition to assist in private, than at any previous period.—Cor. Sec'y Bd. of Ed.

† The theory of our Church on this subject is, that a young man may "both depend upon himself" and upon aid from the Church. The amount of aid, offered by the Church, was never supposed to be sufficient for all expenses in the preparatory course. It was intended to encourage the student to use his own efforts, in connection with aid from his friends, to obtain the balance necessary for his comfortable maintenance.

THE BAPTISMAL COVENANT.

In the covenant that God made with Abraham, on occasion of the institution of the rite of circumcision, he expressly stipulated that his favour should be extended to the children, also, of those who loved him, and kept his ordinances. "I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and thy seed after thee." In every age, under the Christian, as well as under the Mosaic dispensation, God has proved true to this covenant. Innumerable parents, who have pledged their children to God at his altar, and have thus honoured his ordinance of baptism, have found him a Father to their children. God has loved the children for their parents' sake.

Some years since, a hundred and twenty students, connected with the Theological Seminary at Andover, Massachusetts, ascertained, by mutual inquiries, that more than one hundred of their number were the sons of pious mothers. Of one hundred and fourteen students, who, about the same time, were pursuing a course of study for the ministry, in connection with the Theological Seminary at Princeton, New Jersey, all but ten were the sons of pious mothers, and all but thirty-two of pious fathers also. In every case where the father was a member of the church, it was also true of the mother.

For a period of ten years, the Third Presbytery of New York have been pursuing a course of inquiry of the same nature. Every candidate for the ministry whom they have received under their care during this time, has been asked to state whether he was the son of pious parents or not. The whole number of candidates received, since the rule was adopted, has been one hundred and twenty; all but twelve of whom have been licensed to preach the gospel. Of the whole number, one hundred and three have been the sons of pious parents. In eighty-five cases both parents were pious; in sixteen, the mother only; and in two, the father only. One hundred and one had pious mothers. Several of those who had not the privilege of a pious parent's supplications, were foreigners, whose parents had complied with the customs of their particular churches, and had presented their children at the sacred font.

It will be observed, that in these three cases, the proportion of pious parents is very nearly the same. In the latter case the students were nearly all from the Theological Seminary at New York. A remarkable accordance is thus found to have existed, as regards this particular, in our three principal Theological Institutions. Whatever this accordance may indicate in other respects, it certainly does indicate, that God is mindful of his covenant; that he does not forget the children of those who believe in him; and that he chooses his ministers, at the present day, for the most part, from pious households. Thus he confirms the word of his servant Paul, "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—New York Evangelist.

MINISTERS AND COLLEGES.

A letter recently published, from Professor Tyler, of Amherst, contains the following very interesting statements:

"Out of two hundred persons hopefully converted in the College, one hundred have entered the ministry. There have been nine powerful revivals of religion, occurring at intervals of one to four years, during the whole existence of the College, (viz. in 1823, 1827, 1828, 1831, 1835, 1838, 1842, 1846, 1850,) and numbering from twenty-five to thirty converts each. Moreover, scarcely a year has passed without more or less conversions, when there has been no revival. The aggregate of the conversions during the thirty years from the establishment of the College to the issue of the last Triennial, cannot, therefore, be less than two hundred and fifty—probably three hundred is nearer the truth. The list of converts includes thirteen Foreign Missionaries. The entire number of alumni who have entered the ministry, according to the last Triennial Catalogue, is four hundred and thirty-five. The whole number of graduates, by the same catalogue, is nine hundred and sixty-three—and of these, 'between one-quarter and one-fifth were hopefully converted in College.' Of the ministers graduated at the Institution, one-quarter were hopefully converted in College."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

CATECHETICAL INSTRUCTION.

SYNOD OF DORDRECHT.

Religious instruction in schools, in the catechetical form, has always been in repute. The following paper on the general subject, adopted by the famous Synod of Dort, will be read with interest. It is copied from the "Christian Intelligencer," the able weekly organ of the Reformed Dutch Church.

THE RESOLUTION OF THE NATIONAL SYNOD OF DORDRECHT ON THE SUBJECT OF A CLOSER SYSTEM OF CATECHIZING OF ADULTS AND YOUTH. ADOPTED NOVEMBER 30, 1618, AT THE SEVENTEENTH SESSION.

In order that the Christian youth may be from their earliest youth diligently instructed in the rudiments of true religion and endowed with true piety, the following three-fold method of catechizing shall be observed: Domestic by parents, in the schools by the school-masters, and in the churches by the ministers, elders, and readers, or visitors of the sick. And in order that these all may diligently perform their office, the Christian Government shall be requested to forward by their authority so sacred and needful a work. All those also on whom are enjoined the oversight and visitation of the churches and schools should be exhorted to take great pains in reference to this point.

The office of the parents is in the most diligent manner to instruct at home their children and the entire household intrusted to them, according to each one's capacity, in the first principles of the Christian religion; to exhort them earnestly and with diligence to the fear of God and genuine piety; to accustom them to the exercise of family prayer; to take them with them to the hearing of the divine word; to rehearse diligently with them the sermons which have been heard—in particular, the catechetical sermons; to read or cause to be read to them several chapters of Holy Writ; to cause them to learn by heart, to impress on their minds the most important passages of Scripture, and in a general way and a method suitable to the tenderness of youth, to expound the same, and in this way to prepare them for catechizing in the schools; and, after they have advanced thus far, to strengthen, excite, and help them forward with all their might. To this bounden duty shall all parents to whom this admonition can at all find access, be diligently and earnestly admonished by the ministers, elders and visitors of the sick, both openly in preaching, and, in particular, as well in the ordinary visitations before the communion as on other suitable occasions. Inasmuch as some parents who profess the Christian Reformed religion are found to be remiss in this sacred work, such shall be brought to their bounden duty by pointed admonitions from the minister, and, if need be, by the censures of the Consistory.

Schools, in which the advancing youth are as far as possible to be instructed in piety and in the rudiments of Christian doctrine, shall be established, not only in towns, but also in all villages, if it be so that in any places none have been established heretofore. The Christian Governments shall be requested to provide the school-masters everywhere with honourable remuneration, in order that such persons as are competent to this service may be used and be the more diligent in their enjoyment, but in particular, that the children of the poor may be instructed gratis, and not debarred from the benefit of the schools.

In this service of the schools, no person shall be made use of who is not a member of the Reformed Church, and furnished with testimonials of a genuine faith and a godly life, and well versed in the doctrine of the Catechism. He shall, moreover, be one who acknowledges the Confession and the Netherlands' Catechism by subscribing them with his own hand, and who sacredly pledges himself that he will earnestly catechize the youth intrusted to him in the rudiments of the Christian religion, according to these standards.

The duty of these school-masters shall be to exercise all their scholars, in proportion to their years and understanding, at least two days in the week, not only in committing to memory, but also in the understanding of the principal points of the Catechism; and to this end, there shall be used a three-fold method and form of the Catechism, as the Catechism itself adapts itself to three different periods of youth.

The first shall be for the children, containing the Articles of Faith, the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, the institution of the Sacraments, besides the Church Discipline, with several short prayers and simple questions, based on three parts of the Catechism, to which may be added some of the most important sayings of Holy Writ promotive of godliness.

The second shall be a short compendium of the Palatinate Catechism used in our churches. In this, those shall be progressively instructed who have made some proficiency in the former.

The third shall be the Palatinate Catechism adopted by our churches, in which those shall be instructed who have made still further progress in years and knowledge. The Welch Netherlands' churches, which till now have used the Genffer Catechism, can retain the same in their churches and schools; but other formulas of catechizing the schoolmaster shall not have the right to use in the schools, and Government shall be requested to cast out of all schools all Popish Catechisms, and other books containing error and impurity. Also, the schoolmasters shall be careful that the scholars not only commit to memory these formulas, but also understand in a good degree the teaching contained in them. To which end, they shall explain them clearly, diligently, and frequently put the questions and repeat the matter, and find out whether they have rightly conceived the meaning. The schoolmasters, every man of them, shall bring the school-youth committed to them to the hearing of the Holy Word, but chiefly to the catechetical sermons, and diligently demand from them an account of the same. And, that both the diligence of the schoolmasters and the proficiency of the scholars may be known, it shall be the duty of the minister, with an elder, and, if necessary, several magistrates, frequently to visit all the schools, both public and private, and stimulate the industry of the teachers—give them an example of the manner of catechizing and instructing the youth, speak in a friendly manner to them, ask them subquestions, or bye-questions, (underfragen,) and, with serious exhortations, praise, and little commendations, excite them to all diligence and godliness. The schoolmasters, inasmuch as some have been found to be remiss and refractory, shall be earnestly admonished of their duty by the ministers, and, when necessary, by the Consistory. In case they shall not behave in pursuance of this admonition, the magistrate shall be requested to bring them to their proper duty, or to appoint others more competent in their places.

Finally, it shall be requested of the magistracy that no schools be tolerated which either do not admit or evade these sacred catechetical exercises.

The office of the ministers shall be to establish at their discretion public catechetical preaching, having due regard to brevity, and being careful to adapt it not only to older persons, but also to the comprehension of the young. It shall be to the praise of the diligence of the ministers, if they devote a portion of their time to repeating these sermons in the schools, particularly those in the country, and if they bestow particular attention on this work.

And in order that such persons also as are of age, or have never been instructed in the schools, or whose proficiency in them was insufficient, may be better instructed in the principles of the Christian religion, (for experience teaches that the usual instructions in the church, as well the catechetical as others, are with many persons not sufficient to implant the knowledge of the Christian religion, which, nevertheless, ought to be in vogue among the people of God; and custom proves that the living voice has very great efficacy when the elements of religion are impressed on the heart by general stated questions and answers adapted to each one's capacity, which is the best method of catechizing;) accordingly, the duty of the preacher shall be to look out all such as are of a teachable disposition, whether already church-members or other grown persons, and in company with an elder, assemble them together every week at some suitable place, and there discuss with them in a general way the main points of the Christian religion, and catechize them according to their understanding, improvement, and capacity. Let him repeat with them the catechism sermons, and apply every effort to bring them to a clear and binding knowledge of the Catechism. Those who after this desire to unite with the Church, shall, during three or four weeks previously, be diligently and repeatedly instructed at some particular place in the doctrine of the Lord's Supper, that they may become the more expert and perfect to give an account of their faith.

The ministers, however, shall exercise particular foresight in calling out those to be instructed separately who they perceive exhibit more particular evidence of hope and fruit, and who they know to be concerned about their soul's salvation; and these persons should then be brought together, such especially as are of about equal understanding, that they may be excited to freedom and familiarity of conversation among themselves. These assemblies shall be opened and closed with prayer and serious exhortation.

All this, so far as it shall be observed by the ministers, who once must give an account of the flock intrusted to them, with such pleasure, alertness, carefulness, fidelity, zeal and discretion, as shall be expedient, it is in no way to be doubted would in a short time produce such abounding fruit in the progress of the faith, in holiness of life, to the honour of God, and the perpetuation of the Christian religion, through the blessing of God, as would be seen of all men, and promote the prosperity and increase of our Church.

REMARKS.

1. The above article is translated from (so far as I am a judge) a very bad German translation from the original Low Dutch. The original itself is contained in a most valuable, and, I believe, rare work, on the Heidelberg Catechism, by Rev. Petrus De Witte, preacher of the gospel at Leyden. It is a duodecimo volume, of some bulk, on the inductive system, and I know of nothing in any language equal to it in depth or thoroughness. In a very few years it ran through sixteen editions in the Holland language, and was then rendered into German from the second edition, from which language the above article is derived. This second German edition itself was published in 1680.

2. We see from the above action of the Synod (of Dort) what were the ideas attached in that day, and long afterwards, to the true nature of catechizing. It was by no means a mere dead mechanism, as the abuse, misuse, or perversion of it is at the present day, in the vast majority of the Lutheran and German Reformed churches of this country, at least. On the contrary, what is now made in these churches the main body of the duty (the three or four, or perhaps five or six weeks' catechizing immediately previous to the communion) was in the early Netherlands, and the Reformed Church generally, the smallest possible fraction almost of the system. Catechizing then commenced, as it always should, and everywhere, with the earliest dawn of the youthful intellect.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, May 13, 1853.

Africa.—Letters have been received from Monrovia, to March 14; Sinoe, February 21; Settra Kroo, February 8; Corisco, February 14. We learn the arrival of Mr. McQueen at Corisco on the 29th of January. He was able to assist Mr. Mackey at once in the schools, and to preach through an interpreter. The affairs of the Corisco Mission continue to wear an encouraging aspect, and also those of the missions in Liberia. An urgent application has been received for another Missionary at Monrovia.

India.—Our advices are dated at Lahor, March 4; Lodiana, March 5; Ambala, March 2; Futtehgurh, March 4; Agra, February 22; Allahabad, February 15. Mr. Williams had reached his station and entered on his duties at Agra. The East Indian schools contained sixty-seven boys and twenty-nine girls. The health of Mr. Munnis had become so much improved by his journey to Calcutta on his way homeward, that he had concluded to return to his station, hoping to be able to continue at his work. Mr. Nundy had left Futtehgurh for his new station at Futtehpore, carrying with him the kindest regards and best wishes of the brethren, with whom he was so long a fellow-labourer at Futtehgurh. The spirit of inquiry concerning the Christian religion had extended from the village of Yakutganj to two other villages. Several of the pandits, or teachers, had applied for baptism. A widow lady of considerable property had visited the missionaries for instruction, and mentioned her wish to devote her property to the advancement of the Christian faith. The missionaries express mingled joy and solicitude in view of the state of things at these villages, and earnestly desire the prayers of the churches. One of the compositors at the press in Allahabad was admitted to the church. Two other persons desired admission, but the session advised them to wait; one of these, the missionaries hope, "will yet prove the genuineness of her professed desire."

Siam.—A letter of Mr. Mattoon of January 29, mentions the continued prosecution of the missionary work. Concerning education, Mr. Mattoon says, "It is a day of small things with us, and it may be long before we have schools regularly organized as at most of our mission stations. But we cannot consent to do nothing in this work because we cannot do all we would desire. We are about to bring into the boarding-school four girls and three boys, who have been for some time in a class under Mrs. Mattoon's care, in a neighbourhood at some distance from the mission compound. Her strength will not warrant her to continue to go so far through the heat, and their parents consent to their coming with us altogether."

China.—We have received letters from Canton, February 23; and Ningpo, to February 14. The marriage of Dr. McCartee and Miss Knight is mentioned. The new chapel was partly built at Ningpo; its situation is one of the best in the city. And in general it is reported at this station that, "all the mission families are in good health, and the various branches of our work are apparently prospering." At Canton a house for a chapel had been obtained in a good situation and at a low rent, with the condition, however, that it should be opened as a Dispensary; and the brethren are anxious to be joined by a missionary physican, as well as by several ministers of the gospel. The rebellion in China continues to make progress. Kwangse, Hunan, and Hupih are said to be in the hands of the rebels. The result may be a revolution of the empire, and perhaps also the opening of the whole country to missionaries.

Chinese in California.—A letter of the Rev. W. Speer dated March 15, mentions that the immigration of Chinese is again in progress. About four hundred arrived in February, and vessels with more were expected soon. Religious worship had been regularly conducted, "with an attendance, not large, never over thirty," but with encouraging interest on the part of some. The school contained not many scholars, owing to various causes "several of them are bright and diligent students. School is always opened with prayer, and our conversation often turns from the spelling-book or the geography to Jesus and the hopes of the future world." Some measures are in hand for obtaining a suitable building for the use of the mission. A friend at San Francisco has generously offered five hundred dollars towards this object, and it is hoped that a warm interest will be taken in its success.

END OF THE MISSIONARY YEAR.

The accounts of the Board are made up from the 1st of May to the 1st of May in each year. The receipts, from all sources, for the year just ended, were over $153,000, being some $8000 more than in the year preceding. The expenditures were somewhat less than the receipts, leaving the treasury still out of debt. All this calls for our sincere thanks to the Head of the Church.

The Report to the General Assembly will in due time be sent forth among the churches; and we think it will be found to contain impressive evidence showing that the favour of Providence and the influences of the Holy Spirit have accompanied our missionary work, and showing also that we are called to a greatly enlarged prosecution of this work.

The Appendix to the Report will contain the usual acknowledgment of donations received during the year. We trust that these returns will be carefully looked into by our ministers and elders. They will disclose very serious deficiencies in the support rendered to this cause in many instances. They will also show examples of great liberality. Is it not practicable to obtain for this great work the general support of our churches? Cannot all the redeemed followers of our Lord be induced to offer their willing gifts for an object which, we must believe, is very dear to the Saviour himself, while it is of infinite moment to vast multitudes of our fellow men?

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

LETTER OF THE REV. LEVI JANVIER: LODIANA, JANUARY 17, 1853.

Another Missionary called for at Jalandar.

You will have observed in our Annual Report (in the part relating to Jalandar) a distinct and emphatic reference to the desirableness of having an American missionary located at that station. A few days since, when we had a station-meeting here for business, it was decided that a letter should be written, calling the attention of yourself and the Board to this subject, and the duty of writing it was assigned to me.

The subject has long been thought of, and talked of, and our native Christian brother, Golok, himself, has repeatedly brought it to our notice; and the more we have thought of it, the more our minds have been drawn toward the conclusion at which we have now arrived. The suitableness of the measure is perhaps so obvious, that you will not need to have the case argued at length; still the reasons that influence us in requesting it, may be briefly stated as follows: 1. That Jalandar is a most important place, on account of its size, the intelligence of the population, and the great populousness of the surrounding country. We ought, therefore, to have a large force there; at least two missionaries, whereas we have but one.

2. Our native brethren often need advice and direction on various matters, and of course resort to us for it; but in many cases the subject is one on which adequate advice cannot be given without being on the spot; and though we are over there from time to time, [the distance of Jalandar from Lodiana is thirty miles,] yet it is not always convenient to go, and often when we do go, we cannot remain long enough to attend to the matter properly. The consequence is, that many things are managed imperfectly, and the degree of good management that is secured is sometimes gained at the expense of loss of time to us, and interference with operations here.

3. Especially on account of the School is a higher order of management and superintendence necessary. With reference to the school, we have been rather disappointed. A great deal has been learned there, no doubt, and a great deal, especially of Scripture knowledge, acquired, and knowledge of various other things, through the medium of the native language; but they do not learn English, that is, they do not attain to a correct and easy use of it, and I suppose never will, under the present regimen. Their teachers of course naturally resort to the Hindustani at every turn in explaining any thing, while at the same time they cannot be supposed to aim at so high a standard, or to require so great a degree of accuracy of their pupils, in reading and translating, as one of us would. These are the principal reasons; and I believe that on account of all three the native brethren at Jalandar would heartily concur in the sentiment that the matter is an important one, and join us in requesting that it might be granted. I might add, that from time to time, European friends have made intimations to the same general purport; although they have continued to manifest a very pleasing degree of confidence in Golok, and our operations generally there, a circumstance that has been highly gratifying to us. The feeling has seemed to be, (and certainly it has been more and more our own,) that much good was being done, but that so much having been done, it would be a great pity not to proceed a step further. And perhaps there was no one of us that did not all along contemplate the probability that this step would eventually be taken, while, at the same time, we were willing that the present experiment should be tried. Now, if the question should arise, whether the supply of this want should take precedence of the furnishing a third man at Lahor or Ambála, I believe the mission would vote in the affirmative. You see we have reduced our force here again, in order to supplement Lahor, and I believe we are all prepared to remain thus until Jalandar shall have been supplied; but when I refer to this station, I should not lose sight of the fact, that the state of health in our little circle renders it highly desirable that our adjacent stations should be so manned as to render some one available for this place, on the occurrence of an emergency. Br. Porter is still so much troubled with the cough and affection of the throat, that he has sometimes had serious thoughts of trying what a change for a season to the valley of Kashmir would do for him, and my dear wife is so much of an invalid as to render my movements a good deal uncertain. However, I need not multiply words, the great matter I have to do is to bring to your notice the fact, that in addition to all the other wants of the Panjáb, and our stations in and near it, there is this also, of a man for Jalandar. If it please the Lord to fulfil our wishes, may he enable you soon to find one, or one that may take the place of some one already in the field, who may then be sent to that place.

With reference to Mrs. Janvier, I may observe, that the wasting disease from which she has so long been suffering, seems still to be going on its course. She is much reduced in strength, and very thin, and often thinks her stay amid earthly scenes may not be much longer continued. At the same time, she continues tolerably comfortable as to her general health, and is able to keep about the house. I have no idea that she will be able to spend the coming hot season on the plains, and accordingly expect (if, indeed, she is able to bear the journey) to take her again to the hills. The Lord, you see, is pleased to keep his afflicting hand long upon us; may he graciously sanctify the affliction to us, and prepare us for whatever he has in reserve for us.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. A. RUDOLPH: LODIANA, JANUARY 17, 1853.

Scholarships wanted in connection with the School—Effects of Christian Education on Hindu Youth—Notice of Missionary tour.

Hitherto we have been able to aid our poor youths in this school by the beneficiary fund, and a number of them have become efficient scholars; they are now in service, and obtain from twenty to forty rupees per month as salaries. These youths would not have been able to stay long enough in school to finish their education, if it had not been for the aid they received from this fund. But at present there seems to be but little prospect of continuing this fund, because Lodiana is given up as a military station; there is but one regiment of native cavalry, with four European officers here, none of whom is a subscriber to this fund. During the last three months I received but one rupee for this fund, while formerly I was able to collect a good deal of money for this object. It is plain, therefore, that unless we can obtain help from other quarters, we shall not be able to aid poor boys that show sufficient ability to learn, but that are too poor to be kept long enough in school by their friends.

If you could get us, in the United States, a number of scholarships for the support of poor boys, it would be a great help to us, and a powerful stimulant to all the boys in the school. Three rupees a month [a dollar and a half] would be quite sufficient to make a boy comfortable, and to keep him as long as we should think proper in school. In connection with this subject, I would like to ask whether it would be necessary for the boy that accepts of a scholarship to adopt the name of the donor. I do not know whether our boys would object to do it, during the time that they were in school, but I do not think that they would be willing to ignore their original name altogether. I fear also, that if the adoption of the name of the donor is made the condition under which a boy may obtain a scholarship, it will probably be looked upon by the people as a new plan to make Christians. They already hold the opinion that eating and dressing like the Sáhib log [Europeans] is the act by which one may become a Christian. Our boys in school, of course, are taught what it means to be a Christian, but even they might perhaps think, that this was at least one of the first steps towards becoming a Christian. I would prefer much that there should be no change of name in such cases.

In consequence of this city being abandoned as a military station, the city has become somewhat reduced, and some boys have consequently left the school. It numbers, however, two hundred still, and I trust it will not be reduced any further. The high salaries that some of our older pupils that have lately left the school can command, has shown to the other boys how important it is for them to continue steadily in school till they are fit to occupy a place of trust and importance, and most of them continue in their studies with diligence and zeal. It is pleasing to observe, that those that leave our school after having accomplished their education, do not only continue to entertain a warm friendly feeling towards their former teachers, but it appears that they do not lose those early religious impressions which they have received in school. I have heard from various quarters that they unhesitatingly confess that they have no faith whatever in Hinduism, that they regard it as an absurdity, and that they look upon the Christian religion as the only true one. There is but little doubt, that if ever the life-giving Spirit should convict these young men of their sins, and show them the need of a Saviour, that they would look to none but the Lord Jesus to take away their sins. And this is what we have to pray for.

Last month I made a short itinerating trip in the Jalandar Doab, by way of Philore, Núrmahal, Naukadar, Kartúrpore, and other smaller places. The gospel message was generally well received. The conviction that it is true, is gaining more and more ground everywhere. Few dare to stand up in defence of Hinduism, and such as do, generally abandon their position in a very short time; they are mostly those that had never tried the strength of their arguments with those of a missionary.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS OF THE REV. J. R. CAMPBELL.

Foreign Missions not injurious to Home prosperity.—Solemn inquiries.

Writing on the 5th of January, and pleading for more missionaries, Mr. Campbell thus proceeds:

But probably some man will say, in times past we entered on the foreign missionary enterprise on too extensive a scale, and beyond our ability as a church, and hence it is not possible to go on increasing our efforts in this cause in proportion to the increase of our ministers and members. In reply to such a statement, I would ask the objector—I would ask the whole church—Lacked ye any thing at home in consequence of the efforts made abroad for the salvation of the perishing heathen? Has God's blessing been withheld from the means of grace you have enjoyed, because you have to some extent furnished those means to others? Have ye found that the distribution of some of the talents God placed in your hands as his stewards, has, even in a worldly sense, tended to poverty? Have the ministers and members of the church [Reformed Presbyterian] been diminished, because two or three of the number were sent to distant India? If, on the other hand, because you have scattered to a small extent, God has greatly increased you, do you not think it would be wise policy to try the experiment again, and prove the Lord, if he will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a still greater blessing? If I were to sit down to devise means to promote, in the highest degree, the church's prosperity at home, I would, first of all, and above all, recommend the cultivation of a missionary spirit, and the carrying out, to the greatest possible extent, the Saviour's last command to his disciples. Just so long as the church overlooks this command, or looks upon it as a matter of secondary, or of small importance, will she find herself without that large blessing from on high which obedience secures. As far as my observation goes, I am almost afraid to say it, no Christian church on earth at present looks upon this subject in that important light which it deserves, or approaches her duty to Christ, and the heathen, as the case demands. Where could there be a command more plain or positive than is found in Mark xvi. 15? Can that command ever lose its force until all the world has heard the gospel? Are not eight-tenths of living men without the gospel? Are not thousands perishing daily who have never heard the gospel? Can Christians, who have embraced the gospel, and who believe that it is the wisdom of God, and the power of God, to the salvation of Jews and Gentiles, and that without it sinners must perish eternally, give any good reason why it has not been made known to the dying heathen? Will the reasons usually offered be satisfactory to the Saviour on the day of judgment? Could the wealth of Christians be better invested, or in any stock on earth bring in so large a revenue, as by lending it to the Lord? The security of a God that cannot lie is "an hundred-fold" in the present life, and in the next world, "life everlasting."

In a letter of later date, February 3, Mr. Campbell again speaks of the urgent need of more labourers. We trust his earnest appeals will be laid to heart by the members of our churches, and especially by our brethren in the ministry.

Brother Caldwell, in his long journey, found many willing to receive the Gospel, and to hear the word of God at his hands. He visited a number of large towns to the south-west of this place, where the gospel was never preached before, and found the people respectful, and eager to obtain our religious books. All he had were distributed in the Hindu language, and many more might have been given away if he had had them with him. We are very sorry that it is not in our power to travel about a great deal more in the cold season, so as to extend our circuits to the dying multitudes beyond our bounds, so as to give them an opportunity also to hear the glad tidings of salvation. But what can we do where we are so weak-handed, and when the Board limits us in means for this great work? During four months of the year we should be in tents, travelling all the country over for hundreds of miles distant, were it not that our schools and other duties here, make it necessary for one, at least, to remain at the station. The harvest is so great, and the labourers so few, that we see no other way of reaching the multitudes, but by these occasional visits from year to year; and still, how few, after all, in proportion to the millions sitting in darkness, can hope to hear the gospel? But now we have not only all Hindustan open to missionary labour, from Peshawer in the far north-west, to Cape Comorin in the south, but within a few days the greater part of Burmah, including Pegu, has been annexed to this immense eastern empire now under the British rule. It does seem, indeed, as if the Lord was trying the faith and sincerity of the Christian world, by opening up the heathen world, and beckoning to his professed followers to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Surely, if religion is to go hand in hand with civilization, no time is to be lost, and the friends of Christ should no longer delay to send the gospel to the millions that are thus annually brought within their reach. Many, many more missionaries must be sent to India and Burmah, or opportunities will be lost, which will never again be enjoyed. This is evidently a most propitious seed-time, and if the blessed gospel be widely disseminated, we may expect an abundant harvest. I think the account I sent to you some months ago, of the progress of the gospel in India, will convince the most skeptical that the labours of missionaries have not been in vain, but that considering the state of the people, and the mighty obstacles that have opposed the spread of Christianity, the success has been even beyond what might have been expected. —Banner of the Covenant, May 1853.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. A. H. SEELEY.

A Tour in the Districts of Furrukhabad and Mynpoorie.

Soon after the annual examination of the city school, I left Futtehgurh on a short itineration among the villages of the districts of Furrukhabad and Mynpoorie, and a little after sun-down on the evening of the 10th of November, encamped near a village of farmers. Some of them were still engaged in watering their fields; some were returning to their homes, driving their oxen muzzled before them, and carrying their ox-yoke, leather buckets, and well-rope on their heads. Others had already reached the village, and were squatting on the ground in groups, some smoking the hookah, others cutting corn stalks for their cattle, upon a block of wood sunk in the ground.

Women were returning to their homes driving goats and cows; others were drawing water from a well near by, with ropes and vessels, which each brought and carried away—the water on their heads, and the ropes in their hands. All were barefooted, and clad in very scanty, coarse, dirty, and tattered garments.

Innumerable crows were flying about a tope of mango-trees not far away, and their screamings preparatory to taking lodgings for the night, reminded me of the quarrelling of Hindus, particularly the women, who scream as loud, and pour out abuse as fast as they can, when they are really in a rage. Having set a man to watch for the night, I went into my tent somewhat depressed on account of the gross darkness which rests upon the people of India. After tea, spent the evening in reading Hindui.

November 11th.—Early in the morning, taking Dhoukal with me, I went to the village along a narrow path, on either side of which were wheat fields, looking beautifully green; as we drew near, we encountered filth and stench from dunghills, gutters, and a large hole half filled with putrid water. These holes are inseparable from every Hindu village. The size is in proportion to the size of the village, for the houses are all built of the mud taken from them. Going on to the centre of the village, we found seven or eight men, with some half naked children, squatting around a small fire. In the morning, in every village, during the cold weather, these little fires are lighted, and the men and children assemble around them to warm themselves, smoke, and gossip, before going to work. A small hole, about one foot in diameter, and a few inches deep, is dug in the ground, then a few pieces of dried cowdung are lighted and put into it; this forms the basis of the fire; upon this they throw at times dried weeds and rubbish, which blaze up, and afford a little momentary heat. We could hear in many houses the sound of the mills, which showed that the women were grinding the grain necessary for the food of the family during the day.

While I was talking to the men about their village, their crops, and the different castes among them, several persons more came to enjoy the luxury of the fire, and to get a few puffs of the indispensable hookka. One man came with his plough on his head, another with his ox-yoke and well-rope; these they quickly laid aside, that they might join their neighbours around the fire.

I now began to talk to them about God, of his holy character, of his hatred of sin, and the impossibility of sinful creatures ever going to heaven.

They all listened attentively, and one man, at the end of every sentence I uttered, and often before I had finished the sentence, said, "Yes, sir, what you say is all true;" "that is very good;" he said this in so careless and stupid a manner, that I ordered him to be still. He obeyed, but soon forgot himself, and commenced once more, "That is good:" "that is true." I spoke to them about their own incarnations of Rám and Krishnu, showed how vile and sinful they were, and what folly it was for them to trust in beings more wicked than themselves for salvation. I then directed them to Christ, the only true and holy incarnation, and the only one who could save them from sin.

There was no temple in this village, and they said there were no idols among them. I asked if they did not worship Mahadev. They said, "Some go over to that village," pointing to one, "where there is a temple and worship, but the most of us do not worship idols, nor God. We work all the time, day and night, to get our food, and how can we think about anything else? It is not our business to think about God; we are made to work for our food." I tried to show them that they were not like their oxen, but that they had souls that would live for ever. This they confessed, but again urged their ignorance, and the circumstances in life in which they were placed, as a justification for not attending to these things. Dhoukal now read to them from one of the gospels, and spoke to them for some time. Some of them appeared desirous to go to their work, so we gave them our salam, and came away. In this village there was no school, nor a single person who could read.

Religious movement at Yakútganj and two other villages.

The people at Yakútganj continue to hear the word with much apparent love, and we cannot but feel that the Spirit of God is working in our midst. Besides our two regular services at the village during the week, a number of the people have attended our Sabbath and Wednesday evening services in our church here. Nor is the interest in the work confined to this village, but in two others near it, there seems to be a manifestation of religious feeling. From each of these villages we have had an application for services to be held, and in one of them we hope to begin a regular service next week. During the past three weeks I have given away more than fifty Testaments in Hindi, and only to those who I feel assured will make a good use of them; and indeed we know that they do. In the village of Yakútganj we have also commenced a school for girls, which, though just formed, numbers nine girls, and will soon, we hope, number thirty or forty at least. In this state of things, we feel it very desirable to have more funds placed at our disposal, for the purpose of establishing Bazar schools, as it is through these schools that we can work to most advantage in the villages. You are aware that the movement in Yakútganj commenced in a Bazar school, established by native Christians of our Christian village. . . . To meet our present necessities, Dr. G. and his brother have taken the expenses of two schools, and Dr. L. has opened about six more, though we do not expect very much from these six schools, as they are not entirely under our control. We hope the Board will grant us the extra allowance we require.

There is a very wealthy lady in the village of Yakútganj who has expressed a desire to become a Christian. She has been reading the Bible for more than a month, and has so far broke through her prejudices as to call at our house for the purpose of religious conversation. She is a widow lady, and says she will make over to us, for religious uses, the whole of her property. It is impossible to say what will be the result, but we cannot but feel greatly interested in her, and pray that she may be directed to the Lamb of God.

Three of the Pandits at Yakútganj have applied for baptism, and we hope they may be found worthy to be admitted at our communion on the first Sabbath in April. Do pray for us, and call on the churches to pray for us. We feel that God is about to bless us as he has never before done; and oh! what a glorious thing it will be if all the villages about us come out and turn to the Lord! Even if they give up their idols, and become nominal Christians, what great things may we expect for the coming generation.

Accounts of Missionary labours.

I have been out in tents with brothers Seeley and Campbell for a few weeks. We visited villages near Mynpoorie and Futtehgurh. We averaged about ten villages daily, and ten miles of walking. One day Mrs. Freeman walked seven miles, and I walked seventeen. We met a kind reception from the people, and had many hearers. Our catechists with us were willing workmen with us; we had three with us. Since the cold weather set in my health has been better. I wish I could have been three months in tents, preaching in the villages; but our itinerating allowance is too small to allow even one month, if you have to repair tents. This part of our work receives but the smallest part of our time. While not in tents, and at home, we preach weekly, but only in villages near home. For the hot months, we cannot walk more than one mile, or a mile and a half out, and return the same after preaching. If I have health adequate, I propose to get a horse for our catechist, and then to ride it out when I go, and thus get farther from home. The expense will be some six rupees a month. Hulásí, William, and myself, are all engaged in teaching, and hence we are not fresh men for work when we sally out to preach in the villages. But the last year reminds me not to plan for the future, but do the work of to-day. Weitbrecht, Shurman, Leish, and Sinclair, have all fallen with their harness on, and in full strength, within less than a year. Be ye also ready, is echoed from Calcutta to Agra. O to be found faithful and at work when the Master cometh.

INDIA: ALLAHABAD MISSION.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. L. G. HAY: ALLAHABAD, FEBRUARY 15, 1853.

Accounts of the Mela—Conversation with a Pantheist.

The great mela has been in progress here for several weeks. Our tent was pitched under the levée, close to the Ganges, and just on the road to the sacred junction—some distance below. Mirza [native catechist] has been in constant attendance from the beginning; the other catechists and the missionaries have gone as they have had leisure from other duties. At all times there have been good audiences; many seem to hear the word with real interest, sometimes confessing the superiority of our spiritual system over the gross sensualism of their own. Doubtless these animated discussions have given birth to many a noble aspiration in the depths of an idolatrous soul: but the power of caste—the fear of ridicule—has silenced the clamours of conscience. On one day, a man was present in whom I became much interested. He belonged to the Vedántist class of Hindus—intellectually a Pantheist. He was shrewd, sarcastic, and a fluent speaker—quick in apprehending the truth, and more than usually honest in acknowledging it. With Mirza's assistance, I applied the Saviour's test, "By their fruit ye shall know them," to the Hindu and Christian religions, gave a sketch of the benevolent operations going on in Christian lands, including asylums of all kinds, which grew naturally out of Christian love: then referred to my late trip through the country, over a distance of several hundred miles, during which I had witnessed various kinds of suffering, but no provision for its relief. Just then a blind man came up, and began asking alms. "There," I continued, "there is one of thousands in this land, whom you suffer to wander about begging, his condition yearly growing worse, till death relieves him: but where is the home you have provided for such? There is none in this country, never has been, though your religion has been dominant here for many centuries." I then told them of our blind asylums. Many of them said, "good, very good, but the government is rich, it can make asylums," &c. I replied, "No, private men originate them, and tax themselves to support them." Here the Vedántist, whose whole countenance was radiant with delighted attention, took up the argument, explained and qualified it, and, what pleased me most, showed that these good results were a growth—fruit—of some good principle, not the result of a peremptory order of a Governor. This, to the Hindu mind, is almost incredible, since public opinion, as the fountain of any public charity, is utterly unknown among them. It was in vain that some two or three of the more devout idolaters said to the Vedántist, "Wáh, wáh, you become Christian, get ten rupees a month," &c. The sturdy fellow replied, "The Sahib speaks true; no good fruit on your tree." Sometimes the only cause of such defence of our religion by a Hindu is venality: but as I have not seen this man since, (he has probably gone home,) as he asked nothing from us, I am hoping he is a true searcher after truth, and pray that he may find it.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

STATISTICS OF MISSIONARIES IN CHINA, AND REFLECTIONS.

Ningpo, December 8th, 1852.

The few statistics which follow respecting China Missions will, I trust, not be uninteresting. Four years will have expired next February from the time when our company set foot upon Chinese soil. During that period eight American and English missionaries have been cut off by death, and twenty-four chiefly on account of ill health have returned home. Another has left direct missionary work to enter upon the duties of chaplain to his own countrymen. Five others at least expect to leave this winter with their families for their native lands. Thus, besides the eight removed by death, thirty missionaries will within these four years have been, in the providence of God, called from their chosen work, in most instances on account of declining health. Of this number however, some eight or ten should be excepted, who either have returned, or who, there is good reason to expect, will soon come back to this field of labour. Another has gone to labour among the Chinese in California. We may then fairly calculate that within these four years about twenty eight male missionaries will have been permanently arrested in their labours among the Chinese, either by the hand of death, or in most other cases by sickness. At the same time, only twenty-two new missionaries have arrived in China, one of whom was destined to labour in Siam. Another is daily expected at Canton. These facts relate solely to missionaries from Great Britain and the United States, as I have not been able to collect accurate statistics respecting our brethren from the continent of Europe, of whom there are representatives from Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, and Holland. Thus, in summing up, we perceive that the missionary force in China, instead of being increased in number, as the vast importance of the field demands, has actually been diminished about one eighth. The entire number of English and American missionaries labouring in China four years ago was sixty-eight. There are now only about sixty. Nor does this list include the wives of missionaries, four of whom have died within this period. It is also a noticeable fact, that at least eleven of the whole number referred to above, have either gone since September, or will leave before Spring—including a period of about six months, several of whom will not be able probably to return.

What is God teaching us and the churches at home by these things? Doubtless he would have us who are permitted to remain, to be more devoted to him and to his work here. It is no slight affliction to be deprived of the co-operation of a brother filled with faith and zeal, who is removed from his chosen field shortly after entering upon it. And the blow comes heavier still upon us when one is removed in the midst of direct useful labour. Every year adds to the experience of the missionary and his fitness for work, so that when he is called away, as is the case with many among the number referred to, in mature life and after large experience, we feel that God has indeed sorely chastised us. As we are thus solemnly reminded that what we have to do must be done quickly, may we have grace to profit by the lesson and to be faithful even unto death!

It also teaches us that the work is that of God, and not of man. It was he who first opened this vast empire for us to labour in, and who has raised up a band of men to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to this people. Does he love his own elect in China less, or is he less interested in the promotion of his kingdom here, when he removes faithful labourers? Certainly not. This is one step in the course of Divine providence towards bringing to pass that for which we ardently long—the coming of our Lord, and the full establishment of his kingdom. And I think we may correctly view it as preparatory to the display of his wonderful grace. There are here, and I think elsewhere, some signs, which we are disposed to regard as indicative of happier days; and God has already, even though our numbers have been diminishing, shown in several instances of his converting grace, how he smiles upon the labours of his servants. Gideon's army was reduced by his sovereign will to three hundred men, that the power of his interference might be the more conspicuous. We fondly hope that the reduction among us may be attended with similar spiritual results. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," and it is often upon occasions of the deepest sorrow to his people that light springs out of darkness, and good out of evil.

Perhaps the minds of missionaries are more directed at this time than ever before to the importance of raising up a native ministry, not only from our schools, but from the teachers and others of the people with whom we come in daily contact. This, of course, is always an important object with us, though it is a general opinion very naturally founded, that a long process of education and a long period of years are first requisite before such men can be raised up. This idea is correct to a great extent, and with this end in view, schools are established and carried on, with the hope that many youths among them will become converted, and proved to be thoroughly disciplined preachers. But besides these, there are many of good sense and good education, who, if they are brought to know and love the Saviour, will much earlier be fitted for usefulness as private Christians and as evangelists. We pray for these, and we implore Christians at home to pray, that there may soon be raised up in China as well in other heathen countries, native Christians in our schools and among our teachers and others, who shall be fearless and wise defenders of the truth and confessors for Christ—who shall be examples of what Christianity is "in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." When Christ directs us to pray to the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into his harvest, he does not confine our prayers to foreign missionaries, nor should we thus confine them. Native missionaries are especially needed, and should be particularly prayed for.

It would perhaps be profitable, to refer to some other thoughts than those which have been briefly alluded to, but I would simply, in conclusion, beg Christians at home to consider what bearing these facts have upon them. Because this building up of the kingdom in China is a hard work, and because it requires great sacrifices, is it, therefore, to be neglected? Because it is God's work, are our hands to hang down? Because we pray for a native ministry, and hope that God will hear us, are we therefore to withhold our sons and our brothers from this service—are our educated young men to neglect the broad land of Sinim and its hundreds of millions of souls, to the undue guardianship of the few men who are left? Let this ratio proceed, so that in the place of eight experienced men, who are removed in the providence of God every year, only seven as yet inexperienced men are sent out, and what may you expect to hear from China within a few short years? The field is every day widening. Scores of villages surround us, which we have only occasional opportunity to visit; large towns, near to the central five ports, might with all safety be entered, and chapels might then be built; and the inhabitants of the cities where we respectively dwell, might become much more thoroughly acquainted with the way of life, had we labourers to spare for this work. The suspiciousness of the people, in this city at least, is fast wearing away; we have no trouble in building houses and chapels anywhere within the walls. Schools are established readily, both male and female, and generally a goodly number of people are present at our chapel ministrations. The officers do nothing to hinder us, and the people treat us kindly—so that we come in and go out, teaching and preaching, with none to molest or make us afraid. We hope that it will not be long when some way will be opened into the interior of China, for the further promulging the glad tidings. But who is there to go? Do not the churches at home, do not ministers of the gospel, and those preparing for the ministry, have a responsibility in this matter? Christian love is expansive in its influence—and how can churches at home flourish, who withhold their interest from the wide spread of the gospel? We long to hear of more missionaries coming to China; men who are willing in season and out of season to serve their Master. God grant that this chastening which his servants are experiencing in the removal of their number, may call forth the sympathies of Christians everywhere. H. V. R.

AFRICA: CORISCO MISSION.

LETTER OF THE REV. J. L. MACKEY: EVANGASIMBA, FEBRUARY 15.

I have just now an opportunity of sending a letter to Fernando Po, to go in the steamer by way of England. It will perhaps reach you some time before the "Lowder" arrives at New York. The Lowder will sail from this part of the coast in a few weeks, and all our letters will be sent by it except this sheet, which I send in advance. I may as well mention here, that the line of mail steamers from England to Fernando Po, is fully established now, and you can write to us monthly by way of England, if you have anything important to communicate. Fernando Po is about two hundred miles from Corisco, and there are vessels continually passing from Gaboon and Corisco to Fernando Po, and back. The postage I suppose is high, but I have not been able to learn how much it is.

Brother McQueen arrived here January 29. I was down in Gaboon with our boat and brought him up. The Lowder arrived in Gaboon two days before, but Captain Brown wishes to continue his trade, and did not get our freight here for two weeks after his arrival in Gaboon. The flour, &c., which you sent us, packed in stout casks, is undoubtedly in fine order, but I have not opened any of it yet. All our freight arrived in as good order as we could expect.

Mr. McQueen has been quite well since his arrival. We have concluded that for the present, at least, he had better live with us here. You will hear from him particularly by the Lowder. He preaches on Sabbaths in King Mumba's house through an interpreter. As soon as the weather is suitable, we will build a chapel near Ugobi, where first we settled, in which he will have service on the Sabbath. He is in very good spirits and joins heartily in the work. I trust we may be long spared as fellow labourers here.

Mr. McQueen has taken charge of the boys' school; if his health is continued we hope it will go on uninterruptedly. He has one of the young men who has been living sometime in the mission for an assistant. This is but the third day of the school under Mr. McQueen's care, and the number of names entered is about seventy. There are a number of these, however, that will be irregular. We will take several more boys to board, but for the present, I think we will not make the whole number over eight or ten. I do not like the plan of having the boys and girls boarded at the same station. It will give us more care than if we had them at separate stations; and it is our design as soon as we are sufficiently reinforced, or as soon as we would think it prudent for Mr. McQueen to live at a separate station, to move the boarding-school for boys to Ugobi.

The girls' school is succeeding fully equal to our expectations. The day scholars in it are very irregular, as we expected, and they will, we fear, be but little benefitted; but those whom we board, are making very good progress. They are active, sprightly girls, and we have high hopes for most of them.

The church and Sunday-school here are still well attended. The average attendance in the Sunday-school is over fifty. The attention given to our instructions seems to be good. There are six of the young men who have been longest in connection with the mission, who have come to me on several occasions for special religious conversation. Though their minds are still dark, I cannot but think that they are under the influence of God's Spirit.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF REV. GEORGE M'QUEEN, JR.

We have been permitted to make some extracts from a letter of Mr. McQueen to his friends at home. They will be read with much interest. This letter was despatched from Cape Coast on the 12th of January. He reached Corisco on the 29th of that month.

We remained at Monrovia four or five days, including the Sabbath, which I spent on shore with brother Wilson, with whom I was acquainted at the Seminary. He was not very well, having had a slight attack of fever a few days previous, from which he was not entirely recovered, although able to go about with me, and attend to such matters as did not require the strength of a strong and healthy man. He appeared quite well, though a little pale. Mrs. Wilson, also, was just recovering from a like attack. Both appeared happy and hopeful. I think he has perhaps quite as much to attend to, as a proper regard for health will permit, if not rather more. Besides being principal of the Alexander High School, which has his attention five hours daily five days in the week, he has charge of the Presbyterian church. His people, however, sympathize with him, and show a readiness to have him relieve himself as much as he can. He enjoys the confidence of all, I believe. He has an important and responsible post, and should be remembered by us in our prayers for the success of missions in Africa. With the blessing of God, he will be able to accomplish much, as these are "the beginning," the "days of youth," of Liberia—valuable, precious, to a nation, as well as to an individual. Those who are now engaged in the education of her youth, giving instruction to her people in religion, and legislating in her halls, are laying the foundation, and cannot but have a great influence for her weal or woe, in her more advanced days. This consideration gives an importance to her present efforts, which they would not otherwise possess. Liberia is now forming her character, and though at present she promises well, yet she is young, and may be led away, being puffed up by rapid growth and prosperity.

I spent some happy hours with brother Wilson and his wife, at the residence of the Hon. B. V. R. James, (coloured,) who is also connected with our Board as a teacher. Brother Wilson is fortunate in having one so well acquainted with the climate, and so well qualified by experience and theory to give advice, daily, or hourly if necessary, for the care of his health; for here especially "prevention is better than cure."

I was present the day the Legislature of Liberia opened. They were in "joint session." All things were conducted quietly, and with dignity. Their flag is "a lone star, and stripes."

The next place we stopped at was Greenville, the chief town of Sinoe county. I spent one day on shore with the Rev. Mr. J. M. Priest, (coloured,) who is our missionary at that place. He received in the United States, his education, both literary and theological. I found him an unassuming and kind man, and one who seems to be a good man, anxious to benefit all around him. He began here with but one church member. His church now numbers about forty or forty-five. This is encouraging.

[At Cape Palmas, Mr. McQueen refers to the wife of a physician in language that will gratify many of our readers who remember her. After speaking in warm and respectful terms of the Dr., he says:] His wife was formerly connected with our mission as teacher at Settra Kroo, with whom I was highly pleased—quite pleasing in her address, intelligent, and one who appears to be a sincere Christian, zealous and consistent. We soon became acquainted. At the Seminary I was acquainted with Mr. Biggs, of Cincinnati. His father was to her as a father, having brought her up and educated her. This led to many pleasant remembrances.

[Proceeding down the coast from Cape Palmas, the vessel stopped occasionally at the native towns for trade. Referring to this, Mr. McQueen says:] The trading scenes I cannot enlarge on at present. We have large companies on board—kings, and governors, and common people. All talk, all are interested in every trade, all are ready to steal, all are beggars. After the trade they must have their dash (present). All are anxious for this world's goods. During the trading all is confusion. There is much that is annoying, and not a little that is amusing... At other places, canoes come off to us from the shore, and trade as we pass along. Some have more, some less, to sell. Among the latter class, you might see a giant-looking fellow, with a single potato, or one egg, or a fowl as large as a pidgeon. This kind of trade supplied us with pork, fowls, eggs, vegetables, and fish, and for amusement, monkeys and parrots.

We will not quote farther extracts from this interesting letter, which was not intended at all for publication, but will add a few lines, showing the spirit with which, by divine grace, our missionary brother goes to his work. After referring to his being now separated from former comforts and Christian society, but being able still to look unto God as an all-sufficient portion, and after speaking of the importance of the prayer, "Lead me in the perfect way. Sanctify and make me useful. Prepare me for all that thou hast prepared for me in this world, and for thy presence in the world to come!"—he then says, "You will see that I am neither rejoicing without fear, nor sorrowing without hope. I have great cause to be humble and grateful."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BEST EMPLOYMENT FOR CHURCH COURTS.

In the constitution of our Church, the Presbytery holds the same relative position as the Bishop does in the platform of Episcopal polity. Both are appointed to exercise power and authority in all matters ecclesiastical. Now, who bestowed this power, and promised his presence and blessing in the legitimate exercise of this authority? The Lord Jesus Christ, the Great Head of the Church. And he has done so under a royal ordinance which we find enrolled in the statute-book of heaven. Which is that, and where is it to be found? Ask the prelate, ask the Presbytery, for their warrant in discharging these high judicial and administrative spiritual functions which they assume, and see if they do not instantly, and with one accord, point to the grand commission embodied in these words:—"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Amen. Or, as it is in substance recorded elsewhere—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

Here, three things are set forth in terms the most unambiguous: first, the nature of the office, teaching and preaching the Gospel; second, the power and authority essential for the right discharge of its apropriate functions; third, the appointed sphere within which these functions, so fenced and guarded, are to be exercised. Now, if we appeal to this divine ordinance for the knowledge and enforcement of the two former, are we at liberty to exclude wholly from our view its authoritative decision in reference to the latter? Are we at liberty to cut, and carve, and mutilate a divine commission, and take what portion suits our taste, or prejudice, or inclination, or indolence; and altogether pretermit such parts as do not chime in with any one of these? Would it be fair or honest dealing to make the attempt? How could such procedure be tolerated, were it a commission delivered to any of the servants of an earthly monarch? How would it be dealt with in the case of an appeal before the judges of the land? And shall we take liberties with a commission from the Lord, our Creator and Redeemer, which we dare not take with one issued by an earthly potentate? If the nature of the office, and of the power and authority attached to it, be expressly defined; if the extent of the sphere be also expressly defined; and if we constantly appeal to the commission for the assertion and vindication of the former, are we not bound—solemnly astricted—both in justice and consistency, to appeal to it for the assertion and vindication of the latter? Now the sphere is peremptorily marked out under the determinate and all-comprehending designation of "all the world," "all nations," "every creature." And if the same divine authority, which has prescribed the office, and communicated the power, has in like manner specifically pointed out the field and province of administration—what authority less than divine has any right or title to alter, modify, or curtail the latitude or longitude of its bounds; which are none other than those of the habitable globe? To venture to do so, is, in reality, disguise it as we may, neither more nor less than presumptuously to fight against God.

Now if this command, in its essential spirit, be binding upon every professing disciple of the Lord Jesus, must it not, with an emphasis of peculiarity, be so upon those who are specially set apart for the office of the holy ministry—those whose sole business and profession it is to teach and preach the gospel to their perishing fellow-men? And if it be pre-eminently binding upon them as individuals, can it be less upon them in their united corporate capacity, when they convene, and constitute themselves, in the name of their Great Head and King, a Church Court, for the express purpose of exercising all that ecclesiastical power and authority which he hath been pleased to delegate unto them as ambassadors in his stead? Is it nothing that the commission, by which the power and authority have been conferred, specialized the grand design and chief end for which these were bestowed? What is that design and end? It is that the gospel should be preached to every creature, in all nations. In order to the effectual promotion of this great end, it is indispensable that there should be vigour of discipline, purity of doctrine, soundness of faith, and fervour of love. To maintain and perpetuate these in the bosom of the Church, a Presbytery, or Synod, or assembly of spiritual rulers, is privileged to exercise the necessary power and authority in the name, and by appointment, of the King of kings. But does the exercise of such endowments, for the exclusive benefit of professing Church members, constitute the sole end for which they were originally bestowed? Quite the contrary. Turn to the commission itself, and you must perceive at a glance, that the chief end for which they were communicated was the preaching of the gospel to all nations; so that the exercise of power and authority over the members of any Church can only be viewed chiefly as subsidiary to the furtherance of this great end—in the way of converting these into fitter instruments for its successful accomplishment. What, then, if, in any Church Courts in Christendom, it should be found that the means have actually been substituted for the end—or rather that, in the constant use of the means, the great end has been altogether forgotten for which these were originally instituted? What if it should be found that, in any land, Church Courts can really have met, month after month, and year after year, and can have entertained all manner of questions, except such as concern the chief object for the promotion of which all the power and authority which they possess were at first conveyed by the Divine Redeemer, and designed to be uninterruptedly transmitted from age to age, even to the end of the world.

What would be thought of such conduct in a parallel case in the affairs of earthly kingdoms and governments? It is well known that a Governor-General and Supreme Council are appointed by the British Crown for the maintenance of peace, and the administration of justice, through all the vast provinces of our Eastern dominions. What would be said of these functionaries, if, in the course of time, wearied with the fatigues of business, or regardless of the interests of Britain, or selfishly bent only on their own ease, and comfort, and enjoyment, they resolved to confine their superintendence to Calcutta and its neighbourhood; throwing an impassable barrier round this little territory; heaping up within it all the means of self-indulgence, and leaving the rest of the empire to assert its independence, and to continue, age after age, in open rebellion against their lawful sovereign? And yet this were but a feeble picture of the unparalleled anomaly—or treason, shall I call it?—of a Church of Christ, duly constituted and invested with power by its Royal Head, for the express purpose of teaching and preaching the gospel to all nations, yet resolving to abandon all concern with the world at large, to contract itself within one very little nation, and in all its deliberations to think of nothing, and care for nothing, but its own petty interests! If aught of this was once true of the Church of Scotland, how ought we to bless God for the commencement of a change which many of our fathers wished to see, but were not permitted? There is now scarcely a single Presbytery within the bounds of the Church, that has not, in its Presbyterial capacity, entertained the subject in some form or other. It has been my own privilege to address nearly seventy Presbyteries and Synods on the great subject of missions; and in almost every instance, much to the credit of the members, the meeting was convened for that specific purpose. This, itself, one would gladly suppose, is a pledge that the vessel which may have lain so long landlocked on a lee shore, idly reposing on its own dark shadow, has at last caught a portion of the breeze; and if so, with sails unfurled and banners streaming, let her resolve to enter no haven till she has circumnavigated the globe.

But though the good work has happily begun, let it never be forgotten that it has only begun. The subject of propagating the gospel at home and abroad, in obedience to the divine command, ought to occupy more and more of the time and attention of every Church Court, till, like the rod of Moses, it might swallow up and absorb, in its divine grandeur and surpassing interest, all minor themes. The express terms of the original commission, in virtue of which Church Courts are constituted at all, enforce the propriety, and duty, and necessity of such a course. The Supreme Judicature of this Church, setting itself the example, has strongly and earnestly recommended a similar procedure to all subordinate judicatories.

In compliance with this recommendation, there now stands, on the records of almost every Presbytery throughout the bounds of the Church, a resolution that it will hold one annual meeting expressly for missionary purposes, at which all within its bounds shall be invited to attend. In this new career of manifesting the recuperative energies of the Church, the Presbytery of Irvine enjoys the honour of having set the first successful example. And nobly and efficiently has it been followed by others in different parts of Scotland. And if, in not a few instances that could be named, the resolution so deliberately formed, has (from some temporary obstacles, we must presume,) been allowed hitherto to remain a dead letter in the statute-book, is the insinuation to be endured, that it is intended to remain so for ever? What! A Presbytery of the Church—a council of ordained ministers of the everlasting gospel—solemnly adopt and register an ecclesiastical canon towards the fulfilment of a long neglected duty, and yet as solemnly determine to hold it in eternal abeyance!—and thus violate anew the terms, conditions, and ends of their own commission, disappoint the expectations of the faithful, frustrate the hopes of a perishing world, and heap the most outrageous insults and mockeries on their Lord and Redeemer! It cannot be! The thing is impossible! The very hypothesis of its possibility must be denounced as an infamous libel!

It is confidently, therefore, to be anticipated, that the time is not far distant when every Presbytery shall be found vigorously implementing its own covenanted engagement to return to the discharge of a long neglected duty, and that the very few that have hitherto stood aloof, will ere long be seen marshalling side by side in the same noble cause. What a glorious spectacle in the sight of heaven and of earth. An entire National Church converted into a thoroughly evangelistic, or missionary, or apostolic Church! The heavenly impulse annually renewed in this venerable house, communicated through Synods into the provinces—through Presbyteries into smaller districts or dioceses, through ministers and Kirk-sessions into parishes, and through a localized eldership into every hamlet in the land! Is this a vision or chimera? It ought to be neither the one nor the other. Another Pentecostal effusion would, in less than a twelvemonth, convert it into a living reality. And why not implore the Lord unceasingly for the grace and strength, the will and the ability, to advance now with increasing velocity towards the realization of so glorious a result?

I know I am again treading on delicate ground. Some may set me down as a presumptuous intruder; but God is my witness, that it is in faithfulness and love, and under a deep sense of unworthiness, that I have entered on the present theme. Others may brand me as a dementate enthusiast; but how can the imputation of such a charge obliterate the facts of past history, or cancel the principles and laws of the divine economy? If there has been a dark age in the history of this Church, would he be its friend—rather, would he not be its bitterest foe—that would not bestir himself to chase away its blighting and bewildering shade? And who is not ready to confess that that must have been an age of worse than Cimmerian gloom, when Presbyteries and other Church Courts could meet, month after month, and year after year, constitute their meetings in the name of the Lord Jesus, read the minutes of a former sederunt, and, if there were no cases of petty discipline before them, no libels to prosecute, no ruinous church edifices or crazy manses to condemn, immediately dissolve, saying that there was no business before them. Oh! if one of the spirits of the just made perfect, or an angel from heaven, were present, how could he help exclaiming with unutterable surprise—What! no business! no business before a court of ordained teachers of the everlasting gospel, when there are still upwards of six hundred million human beings on the face of the earth, ignorant of the way of salvation, to all of whom ye are bound by your commission to employ the means of communicating the saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, and him crucified?

Was not such a state of things naturally calculated to alienate the affections of the spiritually-minded, and to excite the derision of the scoffer? Was it not calculated to diminish the reverence due to a Church Court, and to cover many of its enactments with contempt? How could a court, which seldom presented to a shrewd and discerning public any aspect but that of the grossest secularity, be patiently borne with in its spiritual decrees? Now, it is this bad, this consumptive state of things, we wish to see ameliorated. But a disease which penetrated so deep into the vitals, is not to be eradicated in a day. Let us thank God, however, for every incipient symptom of convalescence. To effect a perfect remedy will require time, as well as faith and patience. It is not from the established forms of Church Courts alone, or from the inveterate habits of some of the older members, that the difficulty of a return to an improved condition of things is to be encountered. So long have many of these been unaccustomed to the separate or corporate discharge of their grand evangelistic functions, that even the great body of the people may not, for some time, be made to understand how missionary proceedings of any kind can constitute any part of the proper business of a Church Court. For some time there may be misconception; there will be suspicion; there must be wonder. Of this many curious proofs might be given. Some time ago my eye happened to stumble, in a public journal, on a review of last year's Assembly. It concluded with a complaint as lugubrious as if it had been the winding up of a funeral dirge. And what think you was the burden of the complaint?—That the Assembly of 1838 had done nothing, and that its proceedings would create universal disappointment throughout the country. Why? Because it had not finally settled this little point about the form of process, and that other about the regulations anent calls; and so on through a well-strung bead-roll of petty littlenesses connected with home Church policy. All the while not the remotest allusion was made to the circumstance, that this Venerable House did occupy nearly a whole day in considering the great subject of extending the means of grace among the destitute outcasts of our native land; and devoted several hours of each of other three days to a consideration of the means of extending Christian education at home, and of diffusing the gospel abroad among the hundreds of thousands of expatriated countrymen, and the millions of heathens that never heard of a Saviour's love. And yet, may we not venture to affirm, that if any part of the proceedings more than another went up as a sweet memorial to the throne of the Highest, it would be that very part which related to the propagation of the gospel among the poor and the perishing, whether at home or abroad? Yea, more, may we not venture to add, that the surest way of ultimately arriving at an amicable adjustment of many of those questions on which parties differ, would be to multiply tenfold in assemblies, synods, presbyteries, and kirk-sessions, their friendly discussions on those great catholic questions on which all, without one exception, are agreed? The spirit of diffusive love, seizing and expanding all the kindlier elements of our nature, and drawing down the fire from heaven's altar, would gradually burn up and consume the dross of partizanship—and, fusing all hearts in the crucible of a holy zeal, would soon subdue all minds into the heavenly mould of forbearance, and peace, and unity. And thus, as in the case of the traveller in the fable, it would soon be found that those who will not be beat down by the stormiest tempest of controversy, may soon be melted into kindly acquiescence by the solar beams of charity.—Dr. Duff.

DEPOSITORY AT LOUISVILLE, AND THE PRESBYTERY OF MUHLENBERG.

Extract from the records of the Muhlenberg Presbytery, in session at Marion, Kentucky, April 16, 1853.

"A communication from Dr. Humphrey, relative to the establishment, in Louisville, of a Depository of the Books of our Board of Publication, was read, and the following resolutions adopted unanimously, viz:

1. Resolved, That this Presbytery desire the establishment in Louisville, of a Depository of the books of our Board of Publication, as proposed in the letter from Dr. Humphrey.

2. Resolved, That the churches under our care be recommended to contribute liberally for the accomplishment of this object.

3. Resolved, That we recommend to the Board of Publication the appointment of a suitable agent to raise the requisite funds, and that his salary be paid out of the collections he may make.

4. Resolved, That the Stated Clerk be instructed to transmit a copy of this minute to Rev. Dr. Musgrave, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication.

By order of Presbytery.

JAMES HAWTHORNE, Stated Clerk.

LETTER FROM THE REV. JOSEPH MAHON,

ONE OF THE AGENTS OF THE BOARD IN THE SOUTH.

Dear Brethren—In rendering to the Board an account of my labours during the past year, whilst I regret that I cannot report as large collections as in some former periods of my connection with you, still I am not without the hope that the results may be no less important to the general interests of the cause.

With the exception of a few weeks, when interrupted by indisposition or unfavourable weather, I have prosecuted my agency without intermission; preaching not only on the subject of my mission—explaining our plans and mode of operation, and "with all long-suffering and gentleness," entreating the brethren to come up to our help, but as opportunity offered, availing myself of the privilege of proclaiming the gospel of the blessed God to sinners.

I have presented our cause in portions of the several States of Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Alabama; and I am happy to be able to say, that everywhere I have been kindly received, and have met with more or less success.

Some of the Synods have engaged to do the work for themselves, believing that by establishing depositories within their own bounds, they will not only present facilities and motives to those in their immediate proximity for procuring the publications, but be better able to supply their whole field at seasons when transportation from the North might be difficult. In these circumstances, large contributions directly to the Board could not be expected. My object has been, whilst within the limits of these Synods, to co-operate with the brethren in their local arrangements; picking up the "crumbs" for you, for I occasionally find those who insist on their contributions being sent to the parent Board. And the fact is, I have rarely met a person to whom your plan of operations, when properly understood, did not commend itself above all local arrangements. This is the result towards which things are tending. And the opinion is becoming general that the system pursued by the Board is not only the most simple, but the most effective and economical.

Having travelled extensively, and mixed with all classes of society—religious and irreligious—those of my own and those of other denominations, I have found the testimony universal, as to the excellence and cheapness of our publications, and the importance, in this day of lax educational training, and of "trashy literature," of sending them to every community in our land.

Amongst the thousands to whom I have preached and applied for aid, I have found scarcely an objector, and the liberality as great as would have been shown to any other object of benevolence.

Occupying the sober position which our Church does, in reference to the ultraism of the times, we have advantages for doing a work of this kind, in the Southern States, which some others do not possess.

Although I feared that I might be embarrassed in my efforts, it has always been a sufficient passport that I was acting for our Institution under the control of the Old-school Presbyterian Church. Under the discouragements necessarily connected with the life of an agent, these considerations have sustained me.

And now, after expressing my acknowledgments to the brethren who have given me their sympathy and aid, I have only to say that the Board has every reason for thankfulness and hope. The seed you are sowing is too precious to be lost. Thrown out upon the field, the almighty Husbandman will guard it with his providence and nurture it with unseen showers, until it spring up, and bring forth fruit to the praise of the glory of his grace.

The history of the past encourages for the future. Cases are constantly coming to my notice in which applicants for admission to the Church attribute their religious impressions to the reading of some of our publications; and pastors have uniformly expressed the sentiment that they have found no more effective auxiliary in their work.

Whilst it is not consistent with the general policy of the Board to establish depositories in all the places where it might seem desirable, I believe an immense amount of good would be done, by depositing with those who would consent to become voluntary Colporteurs, especially where they have large missionary fields.

The longer I labour in this service, the more am I impressed with the importance of zealously prosecuting the good work. You can number the volumes and pages that have gone from your hands; but the influence of the truths communicated cannot be told. It will be learned only from the chronicles of eternity.

Go forward, then, and the blessings of many that are ready to perish will come upon you. Respectfully your fellow-labourer in the Lord.

Extract from a letter of the Rev. James I. Brownson. Washington, Pa. March 26th, 1853.

"I am confident the Board of Publication is growing in the affections of our people every year; and the same may be said of this region generally. I regard it as embracing no small part of the power and hope of the Presbyterian Church in these days of trial."

OUR NEW PUBLICATIONS

POPERY AGAINST COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION; in four Letters to Bishop O'Connor and Governor Bigler, by M. W. Jacobus, D. D. 88 pp. 18mo. Price 6 cts.

The following Introduction, written by the Editor of the Board of Publication, will explain the occasion and object of this small but important work.

"The following letters from the Rev. Melancthon W. Jacobus, D. D., Professor in the Western Theological Seminary, will speak for themselves. They were occasioned as will be perceived, by the bold assaults of the Roman Catholic (so called) "Bishop of Pittsburgh," on the popular system of common schools, recognized and sustained by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and by the insidious attempt to induce legislative action for the support of the very worst form of sectarianism. The Bishop in Pennsylvania has united in an evidently concerted measure, by which the Roman Catholic Bishops in the United States hope to accomplish one of two favourite objects, viz., to subvert the system of common school education, now so prevalent in the country, or at least to divert a part of the general fund, raised for this purpose, to their own contracted, illiberal, and anti-American schemes. The views expressed by Dr. Jacobus will meet with a hearty response from every enlightened American, and they are now presented in this form, in hope that they will meet the eye, and secure the attention of the people in general, and of our legislators in particular.

The best interests of society require that every new development of Popery in the United States should be vigilantly regarded, and promptly exposed. Its whole past history proves that it is inimical to free institutions; and it is rapidly losing all traces of those modifications, by which many unreflecting persons supposed it was adapting itself to the genius of our republican government. As it increases in power, it discloses its true character; and the perpetuity of our institutions will materially depend on our being awake to its true tendencies, and counteracting its obvious intentions. Obsta principiis is the just rule of action in reference to a system which, under a religious guise, is radically political, and at once grasping, ambitious and inimical to the most cherished, social, civil and religious liberties of the human race."

We transfer to our columns an extract from the first letter to Governor Bigler, which will not only furnish a specimen of the style of the Author, but may serve to interest our readers in the great question at issue between the friends and opponents of our present American System of Common School Education.

"Sir—Your worthy zeal for the perfecting of our public school system, as exhibited in your annual message, has drawn forth a notable manifesto from the Roman Catholic Bishop in this city. I make no apology for this counter address. The subject is momentous. It is not too much to say that the proverbial sophistry of the school of Loyola appears in this new device, and entitles it to public examination. And it is not to inform you, be assured, but to reach the community for whom "the letter" is especially framed, that I undertake this running review.

The letter is, in substance, a protest, a plea, and a plan. The protest is against our noble and universal school system. The plea is for Roman Catholics alone, who are alone aggrieved. The plan is, not to remove public burdens, and promote the general weal, but, as is frankly avowed in the concluding paragraph, to redress the grievances referred to in the protest. We look, then, in the protest, for the burdens complained of. Is it, that the Romanists, being the wealthiest and most numerous class, are paying the largest tax, and virtually providing for the education of Protestants in our land? No; for the very opposite is the well known fact. And on this score the heavy burden is upon Protestants to provide the means of education for Roman Catholic children. This, however the boon may be rejected, is the intent of our public school system—to offer to a class not over-wealthy nor over-numerous, except in children, the benefit from tax on Protestants. How is it, then, that what was meant for a favour, and works as a favour in every other case, proves, with these, a grievance; This question is a grave one, and affects the whole subject, and must throw light on all the sequel. Whence is it, that a system of free principles, which enfranchises all others, disfranchises, as the Bishop declares, every Roman Catholic? It is worthy the attention of our legislators, how far this difficulty must keep up a steady and incessant war upon all our free institutions. There is no disguise here. The Roman Catholic religion is here confessed to be that very unique, peculiar, implacable thing, which is not suited for our free institutions. But this admission absolves the State; nay, it warns against legislation on such grounds. For the moment you legislate for any one religion, to suit its interests and plans alone, that moment the most sacred principles of our Government are violated. That the plan of the Roman Catholic Bishop proposes this special legislation, under the guise of a most general system, will be shown.

But first observe, our public school system, which is the pride, not of Pennsylvania alone, but of our whole land, is truly an American system. It is framed for the masses. Its kind and wise object is to amalgamate from such various elements, all national interests, and to run into the new mould of our institutions the children of all others with our own. A vital condition of our liberties is, that all must be American—must be trained to the same sense of individual responsibility, and to the same freedom of conscience—as freemen fitted for free institutions.

This has been held an object worthy the highest care and most liberal expenditure of the State. To this same end all our institutions bear. And the fostering of national, sectional, or sectarian prejudices, is counted hostile to the public interest. But this plan is essentially anti-American. It stands in the way of this very working—opposes any such fusion of all varieties into this mould of our free principles, and aims to wall up and hedge around this Roman Catholic body in our bosom as an empire of its own. Can we pay a bonus for this? Can we legislate on such behalf and for such an end! It comes forward even in open protest, against the institutions which are our pride and boast. Our motto "of equal rights" is complained of as inequality to them. And where, as in this case, they have the same vote in the choice of the public school officers as any, the grievance is, that somehow, and how it is not said, our popular plan does not suit them. And we are gravely called upon to break up our whole system of popular education, and conform it to the demand of the Roman Catholic hierarchy among us.

But let us examine, 1st, the planning; 2d, the plan.

1st. We see in this an ingenious attempt to get indirectly what has been so often applied for directly in vain—sectarian legislation. This it is the just and peculiar policy of our American government to refuse, however covertly brought forward. And here, by a plausible device, worthy of Antonelli, we are called to break in upon this first principle of our religious liberties, "protection for all, provision for none." The aim is, to open a way for Roman Catholic recognition and discrimination on our statutes—to begin at the beginning, and where a plea of religion and conscience can be made, so as to have Roman Catholic employees, as such, in the pay of the State. It is an easy step from school teachers to other officials, till this very precedent be pleaded for Roman Catholic judges and justices, on the plea of properly guarantying Roman Catholic oaths! The principle being once conceded, we have it carried into all state and national affairs. And the plan is, in effect to open the way for a re-union of Church and State, however remotely connected with this beginning. This measure would give them their first finger in the public purse.

2d. The planning aims, as will be seen, to accomplish indirectly what cannot be done directly—the control of our public education. According to the present system, this is made impossible. Hence it must be demolished, as in the change they could not be losers, and in the new arrangements their tactics might work great gains. Jesuit education, with all its complicated apparatus, has been the curse of all other lands, politically and morally, and to open the door to it has been the ruin of governments. The Jesuit reasoning here is plainly in the face of their well known principles, and therefore is only a device. In all Papal countries, the position is, that the State is bound to control public education. Witness the demands to this effect now making in France, and in all Papal quarters. But what if the State be Protestant? Then indeed they can do better by having the field open for competition. And at once education is not a social thing, but an individual matter—not for the State, but for the parent! Mark the concerted movement to this end in these United States. To-day, Roman Catholic Bishops are reported as "log-rolling" in the Legislature of Michigan. The war has been raging in Ohio; and after many a battle and defeat, has broken out afresh in New York. And the Bishop of Pittsburgh, in his measure, works at the same wheel, taking his cue from the editor of the Freeman's Journal of January 3d. Something is hoped for from this loose-and-wide-open plan, echoed by the Bishop from his head-quarters.

Let us see—"every one setting up a school" would draw per capita from the State fund. At once, from the over-running foreign supply, these Jesuit solitaires would swarm among us. There would soon be a dozen schools where there should be one, and all located so as best to serve the plans of the Roman Catholic Church.

"The working" is, that easily our American children are drawn in, and obtain a Roman Catholic education. The plea of economy or convenience of location will avail with many. Indifference will rule with more. And the competition, which in commercial things is equal, becomes here, in ecclesiastical things, vastly unequal, by their better tactics, more numerous ecclesiastics, and more determined sectarian aims.

This measure, which could not be at all reached without State funds, would thus be fostered by our own Protestant taxation, and by our own government patronage. And whilst there is the faintest remembrance of our freedom from Popish rule, as our choicest birthright, the State will sooner be dissolved in anarchy, than this will be conceded.

But the planning is, thirdly, to increase the forces of Popery among us, and the power and agencies of the hierarchy. We can see "the working," in other lands. Where the State sustains, in any way, this Jesuit system, they defy competition—make headway against all resistance, and soon become the organized police of the Pope—the spies in every district—the gens d'armerie of this church despotism. We have reason to know that it is not the Roman Catholic PEOPLE, but the PRIESTS, who are at work against our school system. They refuse to the parents the privilege of sending their children to any other than their own schools, and to this end they control them by the terrors of excommunication and perdition. This is, therefore, a movement of the hierarchy, and we should first ask, are not these, the functionaries of the Pope, under oath to him as a temporal sovereign?

But yet further, the planning is—to do indirectly what has been attempted directly in vain—to drive the Bible from our Common Schools. The scheme hints boldly at this. It can be in this only, that their religion is interfered with, except it is negatively opposed by preventing its positive inculcation. The Bible, which all other denominations tolerate, because each claims to find its own religion there, and which only Romanists and infidels so attack—this is to be driven out by the scheme! Or, rather, the scheme is secretly to head off what cannot openly be proscribed among us. Yet the State is no less to be the patron or supporter of the schools. It is to be drawn into a measure so decidedly infidel—à la Girard—while the Bishop is crying out against infidel indifferentism! Let us see the working. The Roman Catholic schools we know would set aside even their own Bible, for it is against their system to have it vulgarly read. The other schools would be on the footing of our select and private schools, with no guaranty for the use of the Bible, and under no regulation to that effect. It would be left, except in mere denominational schools to the taste or policy of the teacher, and at least the State would abandon the great principle! And this is a leading object that is aimed at by all the new schemes of the Papacy for regulating our public education. Here observe, the attack is not directly upon the Bible. This has been tried in New York, and has signally failed. And now, under a guise of facilitating the legislation, simplifying the machinery, economizing the offices, &c., a blow is struck at the root of our free institutions, by disowing and discarding the word of God!

LETTERS TO A RECENT CONVERT. By a Pastor. 91 pp. 12mo. Price 16 and 22 cents.

These Letters were written during a season of religious interest among the people of his charge, and were addressed to persons who had recently been hopefully converted. They were printed at first for private and local circulation, and they are now presented to the public, with large additions. The author says, the suggestions contained in them are the result of experience, and are thought to have been found useful; and we add, that we have no doubt they will be found so by all who will give them an attentive and prayerful perusal.

THE RIGHT AND LEFT HAND BLESSINGS OF GOD. Designed as a cure for Covetousness. By the Rev. Nathaniel West, Sr., D. D. 78 pp. 18mo. Price 5 cts.

The author has discussed his subject with ability and presented his views in a manner that will interest his readers.

DEATHS.

On the 24th April, at Auburn, Alabama, the Rev. William K. Patton, aged 54.

On the 15th May, at Stillwater, Saratoga county, New York, the Rev. David King, aged 27.

On the 17th May, at Philadelphia, the Rev. Luther S. Gibson, a Commissioner to the General Assembly, from Brazos Presbytery, Texas.

MEETING OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The Assembly commenced its Annual Session on Thursday, May 19th, at 11 o'clock, at the Central Church, at the corner of Eighth and Cherry streets, Philadelphia.

After prayer and reading of the Scriptures by the Rev. Dr. Spring, of New York, the opening sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. John C. Lord, of Buffalo, Moderator of the last General Assembly, from Colossians i. 16—18, which has since been printed in the "Presbyterian Banner," and "Presbyterian Reporter." The exercises were closed with the benediction by the Rev. Henry Steele Clark, Pastor of the church.

The Assembly was then called to order for business, by the Rev. Dr. J. C. Lord. The Standing Committee on Commissions reported the names of about two hundred Commissioners who had been duly appointed.

The Rev. Dr. Leyburn, Stated Clerk, stated that he had received official information of the organization of the Presbytery of Passaic, by the Presbytery of New York; of the dissolution of the Presbytery of West Africa by the Synod of Alabama; and also of the organization of the Synod of Arkansas, consisting of the Presbyteries of Arkansas, Ouachita, Creek, and Indian. It was resolved that the names of these Synods and Presbyteries be enrolled, and that Commissioners for the new Presbyteries be admitted to their seats.

The Moderator appointed a Committee to examine the credentials of delegates whose commissions were defective.

The Moderator announced the death of the Rev. Luther S. Gibson, of Houston, Texas, a delegate to the Assembly from the Brazos Presbytery, who died in this city on the 17th instant.

On motion, the Rev. Shepherd K. Kollock, D. D., Nicholas Murray, D. D., and Joseph H. Jones, D. D., were appointed a Committee to take charge of the funeral services. It was also ordered that the body of the deceased be brought to this church, from whence the funeral should proceed to Woodlands Cemetery, accompanied by the members of the Assembly. Adjourned.

The Assembly convened again at 4 P. M. The coffin, containing the remains of the Rev. L. S. Gibson was placed in the middle aisle near the pulpit. The appearance of death in the midst of so large a body of strangers—away from home, and at their first meeting, cast a gloom over the Assembly, and sorrow was depicted in every countenance. The Rev. Dr. John McDowell opened the funeral services with a hymn, and reading a portion of 1 Cor. xv. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. David Magie. The Rev. Dr. S. K. Kollock spoke in an eloquent and feeling manner of the deceased. He had known him before he entered the ministry; had known his worth, his talents, and his struggles. He graduated at the Theological Seminary at Princeton, with the highest honours, and, acting on the advice of the late Rev. Dr. Alexander, he went to the wilds of Texas, where he commenced the labours of his high calling. The Rev. Dr. Spring also addressed the Assembly on the mournful occasion. He spoke of his deceased young brother, who had gone from the scene of his labours on earth, and joined the general assembly of the saints in heaven. As a Christian he lived, and as a Christian he died—death to such has no terrors. Prayer by the Rev. Dr. Robert J. Breckinridge, after which, at about a quarter after 5 o'clock, the funeral proceeded to Woodlands Cemetery.

Friday, May 20th.—The Assembly was called to order, pursuant to adjournment, at 9 o'clock, by the Rev. Dr. J. C. Lord, who opened the session with prayer.

The minutes of yesterday's proceedings were read by Dr. Alex. McGill, and approved. The first business in order was the report of the Committee on the election of Delegates.

The Moderator then stated that the roll was complete, and that the next business was the election of a Moderator.

The nomination for Moderator was opened, when the following were put in nomination:—Rev. Dr. John C. Young, of the Presbytery of Transylvania; Rev. Dr. David Magie, of Passaic; Rev. Dr. Thomas Smyth, of Charleston; Rev. Dr. Charles C. Beatty, of Steubenville, and Rev. Dr. Robert Baird, of New Brunswick. The roll was then called, and the Clerk announced that 251 votes had been polled, of which Dr. Young had received 126. The Rev. Dr. Young was declared elected, and Dr. Lord resigned his place to the new incumbent, with a few appropriate remarks.

Dr. Young, on taking the chair, thanked the Assembly for the honour conferred upon him. Although he felt a diffidence in assuming the duties of this responsible station, yet, if there is a body of men over which it was a pleasure to preside, it was an an assembly like this, where all were Christians, and each desirous of promoting harmony of action. He felt it a privilege that he should be supported in the discharge of his duties by the kind co-operation of the Assembly.

The Moderator announced that the next business was the election of a Temporary Clerk. Six members having been nominated, the roll was called, and the Rev. Dr. B. M. Palmer, having received 130 votes, was declared elected.

The Hon. Walter Lowrie submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That hereafter four additional Standing Committees shall be appointed by the Moderator, (the number of members to be left to the discretion of the Moderator,) one Committee for each Board of the Church, to which the reports of the Boards respectively shall be referred, as well as such other matter relating to them respectively, as the Assembly shall direct.

Dr. R. J. Breckinridge said, that without any knowledge of what the excellent brother had prepared, he had himself drawn up a resolution which differed from the one just offered only in one particular. He proposed that the business of the four Boards be referred to one Committee, instead of four. He would entitle it the Standing Committee on Boards and Agencies.

Considerable debate took place on the amendment, which was lost by a vote of 83 to 105.

On motion of Dr. McDowell, a Standing Committee on Theological Seminaries was added to the above.

Dr. Spring moved that the Report of the Princeton Seminary be made the special order of business for to-morrow. Dr. McDowell moved as an amendment, that the Report be received at once, both of which were lost.

Dr. R. J. Breckinridge said the most important business before the Assembly would be this subject of the Theological Seminaries. He desired that all the Reports go to one Committee and be considered together.

A desultory conversation ensued, when Dr. Henry moved that the subject be indefinitely postponed, which was carried.

With a view to give the Moderator time to appoint the Standing Committees, the Assembly adjourned at 12 o'clock.

Afternoon Session, 4 P. M.—The session was opened with prayer by the Moderator. The minutes of the morning session were read and adopted. The session was chiefly devoted to the appointment of the Standing Committees, and the place of holding the next annual meeting. The City of Buffalo, the City of New York, Nashville, and New Orleans were designated. On calling the roll, 131 voted for the City of Buffalo, 17 for New York, 65 for Nashville, and 9 for New Orleans. Buffalo was then declared to be the place where the next General Assembly shall convene.

Saturday, May 21.—The Assembly was occupied with preliminary business, and heard addresses from the Rev. Dr. Adamson from the Cape of Good Hope, and Dr. Kalley from Madeira.

GREEN LEAVES FOR WINTER HOURS.

THE RIVER SONG.—A CAROL.

I stood by a river, when spring-leaves were green—
I saw the bud blossom and fall on the stream;
The bright wave was glancing around the gray stone,
Where foam-bells were dancing and singing this song—
"O ever! for ever! I am passing away!
And never! O never! my waters decay."

I stood by the river, in summer's rose-bloom,
When sunshine was smiling on temple and tomb;
The noon-beam was blushing in floweret and tree,
And o'er the green valley the song of the bee
Still sung with the river its soft syren song—
"O ever! for ever! my waters flow on."

I stood by the river, where flowerets had been;
The sere leaf was floating like weed on the stream;
The chill breeze around it was sighing "decay;"
The wave, dark and troubled, ran swiftly away;
But still this "for ever" was heard in its moan,
Though summer was ended, and tearful its song.

When winter had lighted her bright evening fire,
And beauty delighted with picture and lyre—
When golden thought opened her sibylline leaves,
And friendship with roses her holly-branch weaves,
When the heart to the loved one is singing this song—
"O ever! for ever! my music flows on."

I stood by the river—how silent its breath—
The ice-chain had bound it in cerements of death;
I said, "O! still river, I read on thy wave
A lesson of wisdom for life and the grave:
Now where, O! dark river, thy sunshine and song?
Thy joyous for ever? thy jewel-like foam?
The wind from the mountain has broken thy harp—
The sleep of the fountain has frozen thy heart—
Now so cold as yon statue of marble so pale,
Which moonlight has mantled with gossamer veil."
The sound of the river—ah! still was its tone,
As the voice of the sleeper beneath the grave-stone.

TIME flows like a river, through bloom and decay,
And ever! still ever! it passeth away,
But to the life-dreamer it singeth this song—
"No, never! no, never! my waters are gone."

I stood by a river—O! bright was its flow,
As the crown of the mountain of new fallen snow;
Or the glory that purples the Caspian Sea,
When sun-down is falling resplendently.
And Time on that river—a dream of the night,
A streak on a moonbeam—was lost in its light;
The music of ocean, a note in its song—
For ever! for ever! its waters flow on.—M. P. Aird.

LIGHT READING.

There is a species of literature that is everywhere to be met with under the well-known name of light reading. Scott was its Coryphæus, and his success has tempted a thousand imitations,

"In one weak, washy, everlasting flood."

You meet it in various shapes and disguises, the two-volume novel, the two-shilling romance, the fashionable monthly, and the trashy tale in the newspaper.

Far be it from me, in the spirit of fanatical bigotry, indiscriminately to proscribe all fiction, when Christ employed it for purposes of instruction, or to refuse to the overtasked mind an innocent or rational recreation. But I must be allowed to say, that, like some of the medicines of the pharmacopœia, this sort of reading requires a great deal of caution. It is best to err on the safe side, and to take too little rather than too much. I knew a lady who completely used up her stock of sensibility by devouring novels at the rate of fifty or a hundred a year; and when she came to a dying-bed (and it was an awful one,) her complaint was that she could not feel.

There are some things, as Sue's Wandering Jew and Mysteries of Paris, which I am not ashamed to confess I know only by reputation; and that reputation is sufficient. If for "every idle word" we speak, we are to give an account in the day of judgment, what is to be done with the idle words we read—much more with what is really reprehensible? Miss Edgeworth's tales are probably among the best; yet so good a man as Robert Hall confessed that it was some time before he could get rid of the benumbing effect they had on his personal piety. The reason is obvious. There is no religion in them.

Novel-reading, loose poetry, and theatrical entertainments should be shunned by all who desire to cultivate that spiritual mindedness "which is life and peace," life to the soul, and peace to the conscience. Nor let any one denounce the sentiment as narrow-minded or puritanical. The heaviest censures upon recreations of this sort come from their authors themselves.

Goldsmith, himself a popular novelist and play writer, gave this advice about the education of his nephew: "Above all things, never let your son touch a novel or a romance. How delusive, how destructive, are those pictures of consummate bliss! They teach the youthful to sigh after beauty and happiness that never existed; to despise the little good that fortune has mixed in our cup, by expecting more than she ever gave; and in general—take the word of a man who has seen the world, and studied it more by experience than by precept—take my word for it, I say, that such books teach us very little of the world."

Add to this testimony the pregnant facts, that Moore kept his voluptuous lines from the sight of his own daughter; and that the tragedian Macready has never allowed his children to frequent, and even, if I am not mistaken, to see the inside of a theatre. Are not these men good authority?

But we are not left to theory and inference alone. Schiller's Robbers tempted so many youths to the highway, that the government had to forbid the representation. Courvoisier, who murdered his master, was an admirer of Paul Clifford. Lovet, who was executed at Louisville, was an imitator of Jack Shepherd. Poor Spencer, who was strung up to the yard-arm, learned his lessons out of the Pirate's Own Book. The errors of the unhappy woman who figured in the Richmond tragedy, which terminated in her own disgrace and the death of her lover, were traced by her father to her passion for French novels.—Watchman and Observer.

BAD BOOKS.

The following, from the National Magazine, is suggestive of a train of reflections:—Bad books are as old as literature itself; but our age is a bibliographical epoch in this respect. It teems with literary maisma, and the desolating plague ranges about us, as do sometimes outbreaks of contagion in the physical world. Ejaculatory lamentations enough are uttered over it by individual good men, but sometimes more is requisite to arrest the evil—some moral sanity project, more comprehensive, more potent, if any indeed is possible. What it can be, we attempt not now to say; we but refer to the prevalence of the evil, and submit some general suggestions respecting it. * * The extent of this nefarious literature cannot only be inferred from the great variety of its publications, but it is seen staring us in the face, wherever we travel through the land. Agencies and depots are organized for it everywhere—it is the most omnipresent product of the press, except the newspaper. Though many otherwise respectable houses are engaged in it, partially at least, it is nevertheless acquiring such importance as to assume a distinct business position. There are firms of no inconsiderable pretensions almost exclusively devoted to it. * * We have said that we have no comprehensive remedy to propose for this evil. We know not that there is any; one remedial suggestion, however, we may make. It is, the moral sentiment of the community should be more powerfully, more scathingly directed against it, and against the men who uphold it. The meanness and enormity of the business in its details, is felt by every considerate man; but are the presses and the merchants engaged in it, branded as they should be? Do they not shelter themselves with comparative respectability, under that false and most dangerous corruption of business morality, which has, within some years, become too prevalent among us, and which teaches that whatsoever comes within the "line" of a man's business is right, and not to be embarrassed with questions of casuistry; that the general morality of his calling is to cover its secondary immoralities? It is this flimsy and demoralizing logic that still mainly sustains, in respectable trade and respectable hotels, the abominations of the liquor traffic, and innumerable downright iniquities that find shelter under it. Alas for the self-respect of men who can thus wilfully blindfold themselves to the great moral disasters they are inflicting on the world!—Genessee Evangelist.

Many flowers unfold their petals to the sun, but only one follows it constantly. My heart! be thou the sun-flower; not only revealed to thy God, but obedient to his influences.—Jean Paul.

ACTION ON REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

MEETING OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Mission Rooms, June 13, 1853.

The impression is decided that the meeting of the General Assembly the past month in this city, has been in an unusual degree harmonious and pleasant. We refer our readers to the very full reports of the proceedings in the newspapers of our Church. The discussion on the Domestic Missionary operations of the General Assembly, conducted through its Board of Missions, gave ample evidence of the deep interest felt in this all-important work, and produced the happiest results. The Assembly adhered, with renewed convictions of their justice and necessity and beneficial effects, to the principles and mode of conducting its Domestic Missions, which have been in existence for so many years—we may say from the beginning. The Report of the Board of Missions is now in press and will be ready for distribution in a short time. Brethren who desire additional copies for circulation will please give us timely notice. Although we have ordered a large edition, we are apprehensive we shall not be able to meet the demand.

We call the attention of our readers to the abstract of the Report in this number of the Record, and to the action of the General Assembly on the Report itself.

Dr. W. L. Breckinridge, from the Standing Committee on the Annual Report of the Board of Domestic Missions, made a report, which was adopted, and is as follows:

1. Resolved, That the General Assembly acknowledges, with gratitude to the great Head of the Church, the manifold mercies which have rested upon its Domestic Missionaries, and the general success which has attended their labours.

2. Resolved, That the General Assembly enjoins upon the Missionaries, the duty of forwarding their special reports at the close of the ecclesiastical year to the Board, in order that the Assembly may receive for its own information, and that of the churches, a full and accurate account of the condition of its missions.

3. Resolved, That the General Assembly expresses its gratification at the number of churches which have become self-sustaining during the year, and also at the increased efforts on the part of Presbyteries to impress upon the Missionary churches the duty of liberal contributions for the support of their pastors. And in order to secure a fuller development of the pecuniary resources of the Church, would recommend to the Presbyteries a careful consideration of the subject at their next stated meeting, with the view of recommending some system of contributions to the churches under their care.

4. Resolved, That the General Assembly approves the efforts of the Board to multiply self-sustaining churches, and in their efforts so to do, the Assembly expresses its confidence in the wisdom and prudence of the Board.

5. Resolved, That the Rev. Dr. Spring preach the annual sermon on Domestic Missions before the next General Assembly, and that the Rev. A. B. Van Zandt be the alternate.

We add in conclusion, our sincere gratification at the appointment of the Standing Committees on the different Boards, by the Assembly; a most excellent order. May it be observed in all time to come. The Standing Committee on the Board of Missions met in the Mission-Rooms, and spent an entire evening in examining the books and arrangements of the office, and in informing themselves in respect to the mode of conducting the business, and in discussing various subjects connected with the operations of the Board, and in making valuable suggestions. It was one of the most profitable and agreeable and encouraging seasons which we have been permitted to enjoy since our connection with the office, having been present by the order of the Committee.

ABSTRACT OF THE REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS,

Presented to the General Assembly in Philadelphia, May 25, 1853.

Fifty-one years ago, May, 1803, "the Standing Committee of Missions," of which the Board of Missions is a continuation under another name, and with enlarged membership and powers, presented its first annual report to the General Assembly. Consequently the present is the Fifty-first Annual Report of the Board of Missions.

The Board has been successfully prosecuting the work committed to it by the Assembly during the year; which work may be divided into Expansion and Retention, or Possession and Preservation. We go up and take possession of the land, and then endeavour to preserve our possessions.

The Board carries on its operations through two Executive Committees; one located in Philadelphia, and the other in Louisville, Kentucky, between which Committees, the territory of the United States, and also the Church itself, are unequally divided; the larger portion, both of the Church and country being connected with the office in Philadelphia. Both Committees sustain the same relation to the Board, and all the missionaries in the wide field are alike under the care and support of the Board. In addition to these Committees, the Board conducts its Church Extension operations through a Church Extension Committee in the office in Philadelphia.

There were 515 missionaries in commission, 23 less than the year previous; 838 churches and missionary stations supplied; 32 newly organized churches: 1643 persons admitted on examination, and 1287 on certificate; making a total of 2930. The number of members in connection with missionary churches, 19,966; Sabbath-schools, 432; Sabbath-school scholars, 19,123, and teachers, 3121; baptisms 1876; houses of worship erected and finished, 45. These returns are more than one-third short of the real returns, as of our 515 missionaries, 180 have failed to send in their special reports for the Assembly.

The progress of self-sustentation has been most gratifying. 74 churches and missionary fields, served by 56 ministers, have gone off the Board, by their own reports, self-sustaining; a saving for general missionary purposes, of some $6000 or more. Our Presbyteries have come up to the work of self-sustentation, and are carrying out the views and principles of the Assembly. The Board has done its work during the year promptly and happily, and with a very few exceptions, every application for aid has been met to the full amount asked for.

From reliable information touching the salaries received by our missionaries, it appears that the average amount received by them from the Board is $132, and from both the Board and the people whom they serve, $372. Three-fourths of our missionaries receive salaries from $300 and upwards. While generally they are carried through the year, yet many are pressed for supplies, and undergo privations frequently of a severe nature, to avoid debt, and after all their efforts cannot escape it. The raising of their salaries would be an act of wisdom and justice; this lies primarily with the Presbyteries; it is their duty to look after their salaries; secondarily, with the Board; that the Board may be able to do more, let the Presbyteries take off their aid-receiving churches, that ought to be off the Board, and let all the churches send up more general and abundant contributions. The Board cannot give what it has not got.

Our Church is found in more or less strength in every State and Territory, with a very few exceptions; and the labours of our missionaries have been faithful and arduous. They are a noble band of ministers, and are accomplishing a great work, both for our Church and our country. Our missionaries literally have been the fathers and founders of our Church in all our past history. What would we have been without our missions?

While we have had some pleasing revivals, it has been a year of general spiritual dearth: a fact calling for humiliation and earnest return to God on the part of ministers and people.

Two new Synods have been organized by order of the Assembly, chiefly the fruit of domestic missions—the Synods of Iowa and Arkansas; and we have on the floor of the Assembly this year our first Commissioner from the Synod of the Pacific. Welcome the Pacific! We shake hands across the continent! Texas has been receiving accessions of missionaries and ministers, needed greatly in view of her own destitutions, and in view of future operations in Mexico, whenever that country shall be thrown open to our missionaries. Two missionaries have been sent to the Pacific; more would have been sent, but they were not to be had; nor have we been able to obtain the missionaries needed for the South, South-West, and West. Some re-enforcements will go out this spring.

The Church Extension Fund is free of debt. Receipts, $6,498.34. Appropriations have been made to 48 churches, and 17 have been finished, and their appropriations paid them. Fund far too small. Larger contributions are needed.

The Western Executive Committee presents its Eighth Annual Report this year, and has conducted the operations of the Board in the West with vigour and success.

State of the Treasury. Receipts, from all sources, $81,455.33. Add balances in Treasury, April 1, 1852, and borrowed money, $4,199.96. Total available resources, $85,655.29. Paid out, (including borrowed money,) $67,902.07. Balance in favour of Board, in all its treasuries, $17,753.22.

Debt reported last year, of about $5000, paid off, and the General Assembly's Fund for Domestic Missions is free of debt, a matter of devout gratitude to God. This balance in favour of the Board has been created, by increased contributions from all sources; by healthful operation of our system, (56 ministers having gone off self-sustaining, saving for general missionary purposes, some $6000;) and by want of missionaries. Had we obtained them, the balance would have been less. But it is a working balance only; a surplus is always needed in the Treasury in the spring, to meet the payments due missionaries during the summer and fall, when the income of the Board is very limited. We shall need every dollar of it for our missionaries, and much more. Had we $30,000 we could make use of it to great advantage; and churches need not relax in efforts to raise money for missionary purposes.

In missionary appointments we are 23 short of the previous year, owing to the removal of some of our missionaries to self-sustaining churches, and to schools and academies, which has been no loss to the Church. Some, also, have left their fields, from various causes, and some have died. Besides, we have had 56 who have gone off self-sustaining, so that the diminution is more apparent than real. We had, the year previous, 538, subtract 54 gone off self-sustaining, and it leaves 482; the actual addition, therefore, has been 33 during the year, besides making up losses from other causes. More ministers are needed. Let the churches not only pray for, but make proper efforts to bring labourers into the field.

In conclusion, the Board would urge the necessity of a full development of the pecuniary resources of our Church, in the Domestic Missionary work. The condition both of the Church and of the Country demands it. We have 609 vacant churches, besides missionary fields within the bounds of perhaps every Presbytery in our connection; and our country was never more prosperous, and our spiritual wants on the whole increasing.

To carry on our missions as they should be, we should always have a full Treasury; this we ought to have, for the Old-school Presbyterian Church is a rich Church.

Our funds come from three sources; from churches, individuals, and legacies. The two last precarious and fluctuating, and cannot be relied on, but to a limited extent. Our main income must be derived from the contributions of our churches; and upon the principle that what we attempt to do as a Church, we should support as a Church. But our churches have not met the responsibility. The evidence is satisfactory; for from reliable calculations we ascertain that over one half our churches, and one third of our members, do not contribute to the funds of the Board of Missions! It is the calculation of some that not one half our members contribute! But upon closer investigation, we learn that members are set down as contributing members, because they belong to con- tributing churches; whereas a large number in all contributing churches do not contribute at all—so that we may safely consider the main bulk of our contributors as coming from 60,000 or 70,000, out of 210,000.

We can go a step further. The whole available funds of the Board, as already stated, have been $85,655.29. Deduct individual contributions and legacies, $24,200, and we have $61,455.29, the contributions from the churches. The expenses of the year have been $67,902.07, leaving a deficit of $6,446.78. In other words, our churches have fallen short in their support, during the past year, of their Domestic Missionary work $6,446.78! An astounding fact! These facts all prove that our pecuniary resources are by no means developed. The causes are, that our Church has no general and efficient system of collections for domestic missionary purposes; the duty of contributing is not earnestly enforced and generally felt. Information is not diffused, and collections are improperly taken up. We therefore need a thorough system of collections—pervading every church—extending to every individual—constant, and recurring at regular times. Three plans of collections are in more or less use, and the one promising most advantage is that commonly known as the Scottish plan, or congregational subscription plan. Presbyteries and churches must decide for themselves. But if a thorough system of collection were adopted, it would be attended with the greatest advantages, and should be made to embrace all our Boards. A necessity is laid upon us to take up this matter in serious earnest.

The Board would urge also, a more thorough exploration and occupation of the field opened before us. The organization of the Presbyterian Church is perfect for carrying on Domestic Missions. There is much feeling and effort in our demomination now on the subject; and both city and country, Presbyteries, and even Synods, have much to do to fill up the measure of their responsibilities. In order to do it more successfully, we must resort again, and to a greater extent than for many years past, to our ancient ITINERANT SYSTEM. So also, we should not use the Board of Missions too much, but foster a spirit of independence in churches and Presbyteries, and every effort be made to supply our own wants in all things as far as possible; and when we fail, then avail ourselves of the aid of the Assembly's Boards.

Our country, our Church, our work, are all in their infancy. Our population will go up from 25,000,000 to 100,000,000, and then to 600,000,000! Our Church will also, by God's blessing, advance. Her 150 Presbyteries become 500; her 2700 churches 8,000, and her 210,000 members 600,000 or 1,000,000. A vast association! In our present work we are but laying foundations for generations to come. Its greatness is progressive and glorious. Eternity alone can reveal the importance of our efforts. Courage then! Be strong in the Lord, and faint not, neither be weary in filling our goodly land with the knowledge of His great salvation.

IMPORTANT LETTER AND APPEAL IN BEHALF OF CALIFORNIA.

The following letter was placed in our hands by a distinguished minister of our Church during the meeting of the Assembly, and we now embrace the first opportunity of laying it before our ministers and candidates. It is very remarkable that so few turn their attention to California. It is indeed one of the most inviting and important fields which we are called upon to occupy. The statements of this letter, written by a Christian gentleman of high character and standing, correspond to those given us by Mr. W. W. CALDWELL, the only Commissioner from the Synod of the Pacific, and from the Presbytery of California, on the floor of the Assembly; and we commend them, with assurance of their fidelity, to the confidence of our readers. The brethren in California are frequent and earnest in their appeals, and we have time and again brought them forward in the Record and in our papers, but up to this hour, the Board of Missions has not been able to secure such ministers for that State as are required. Brethren, read and ponder this renewed appeal.

San Francisco, California,
March 10th, 1853.

My Dear Sir—After a residence in this city of nearly two years, I have almost, if not quite, concluded that it seems an indication of Providence that I shall spend my days here, and lay my dust upon these shores, that once seemed so far away from home. Often, very often, I ask myself, Why am I here? How did I come? So truly impossible does it seem to realize the fact. And, indeed, when I do ask the question, I can only answer it, by admitting, as the only reply, that He knows who brought me, how I came, and for what purpose; and may he grant that I may faithfully answer his ends.

Nearly two years I have been here, and although I have not brought my family, I expect to do so in the course of a few months, and consequently the future of this State has an interest more than general to me, whilst the experience I have attained, enables me to judge of its wants, its capabilities, and its destinies. On these and kindred subjects I now propose to address you, in the hope of communicating a more than general interest to one so able to judge, so competent to advise, and so efficient to assist.

Not to weary you with a long letter, I wish to draw your attention to the condition of this population in relation to the Presbyterian Church, and shall be so concise as to confine myself mainly to this city.

There is supposed to be here a population of between 40 and 50,000 people. Within the last year a very large emigration of families has occurred, and there are now some twenty-five hundred children in the Public Schools, where, when I came, not a child was to be seen in the street, or if met, was a sight so rare as to startle one. These schools are well supplied with teachers, and liberally supported by the City Councils. There are two Episcopal churches, one of which pays its minister $6,000 per annum; two Baptist, both full to overflowing; two Methodist North, and one South; one Congregational (erecting a brick edifice at an expense of $30,000), and another about to be organized; one new School; two Catholic; one Unitarian; one very feeble Welsh Presbyterian, and one Old School Presbyterian, with about 120 communicants; one Mormon church, and one Infidel Association. Our population, though far more mixed than you could find even in Paris, is mainly American. Society has, too, settled itself down, and is very fast assuming a right shape. The Sabbath is pretty well observed, better than in New Orleans. Gaming is decreasing, the laws are observed, the police is good, and public opinion has a strong, healthful tone.

A most remarkable feature of the emigration is, that numbers of converted men are here, and coming here; and what is truly a blessing, the churches are sending not only their converted young men, but their converted young women also, as daughters, sisters, and wives; and a very marked feature is, that a very large number of these are Presbyterians! You will at once ask, "How is this? If so many are Presbyterians, why have you but 120 church members?" It is even so; hundreds roam the streets, or go to other churches, forgetting that which forgets them.

Who have we in this State? Three ministers, and the Chinese missionary! One here, where three could at once find congregations and ample support. One at Benicia, heretofore a very unimportant point, but now made the capital; and one at Stockton; whilst there is none at Sacramento, the second city of the State, with a population anxious for a church. The Methodist Church, North and South, are making this a battle-field, and each have some twenty-five men on the ground "preaching Christ of contention," and doing a vast deal of injury, by whetting up angry passions upon the slave question, now assuming more and more bitterness among them, as the question of a State convention is now under discussion. This alone indicates how much we need a conservative body like our own Church upon the scene now, whilst, alas, but few come, and they not of the right sort. Recently, the Congregational and New-school bodies have received a large accession of able men, who are crowding in, and occupying ground that should be ours, and is really settled by our people.

Are there not then men of the right sort to be found in your extensive circle of acquaintance, who could be induced to come here? It is no fourth-of-July figure to say that in twenty years this will be the largest city, and the most important, upon this continent. Her tonnage is now, at four years of age, the fourth on the list of our ports. She is the only port on our continent to which a clipper ship, those huge leviathans, can sail; and in less than one year more, a Mail Steam line will be opened to China and Japan, as is now opened to Australia. No city, any where, in Europe, in Asia, or in Africa, or America, has half the importance as missionary ground, that this town possesses; and at no point could the ablest man in our whole Church place himself, so commanding in influence, so powerful for good, so efficient for usefulness.

But, perhaps you would ask me, "What kind of men do you need?" Let me state a case, and you will see.

Suppose that to-day, even while you read my letter, in Kentucky, that all the old men, all, or nearly all the women, and the children, were suddenly abstracted from your State, and none left but the young and the ardent, the energetic and the enterprising: suppose that an influence should suddenly fall on these to wake their energies, and tax them with a power to will, that had never before been seen; and each man with his hands full of money, and accustomed to have every thing his heart desired, regardless of cost, and willing and ready to pay for it at five times the accustomed rate; and withal, suppose seven-tenths of that population educated, and you have a picture of California! What kind of ministers would you send them? What kind would they listen to? None, but the very best! None, but such as could make them think—or as one wished the other day, "who could drive him up in the corner of his pew." Such men, who do not put preaching a sermon upon the same level as the reading of a newspaper, who feel what they say, and act as they speak, could now, if here this day, three to ten of them, receive from three hundred to five hundred dollars per month promptly paid to them.

It is a gross mistake to suppose that one must suffer privations here. In no country or city in the world can you find a more intelligent or more hospitable society. In no place can you find so many highly educated men, such scientific or artistic skill—the whole world has contributed of its best young mind to make us up—I say "young," for be it known to you, that you shall be at my door one hour, and during which ten times as many persons shall pass you as you would see on a busy day at any point in Baltimore street of the city of Baltimore, and you will not see three old men! Nor ten as old as I am myself. And as to living, there is really no place where you can procure the same luxuries or the same necessaries that you can have here. In fact you cannot have them, for neither your soil nor your climate will yield them. The turnips, beets, cabbage, cauliflowers, potatoes, meats, game, butter, pears, grapes, in fine every thing but apples, (and we shall soon have them,) are greatly superior to the products of the old States. And in ten years a rail-road will carry us home again; what reason can there then be, why the best men in the Church will not come while the door is open, rather than wait until every point of vantage ground is laid hold of by others. Why then cannot you, or Dr. ——— or President ———, or a dozen that I know you could name, come here, and pitch your tents, and give our Church a position that she ought at once to take, and could maintain. If you will, any one or more of you, I can assure you of a hearty welcome and a satisfactory support. I remain, dear sir, ve truly yours,

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

PRESBYTERIAN EDUCATION ROOMS,
No. 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Business Officers of the Board.

C. Van Rensselaer, D. D., Corresponding Secretary.
Wm. Chester, D. D., Asso. Sec'y. and General Agent.
J. B. Mitchell, Esq., Treasurer.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies and Colleges, may be addressed to the Rev. C. Van Rensselaer, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of money may be made to Joseph B. Mitchell, Esq., Treasurer, Mechanics Bank, Philadelphia.

ABSTRACT OF THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR 1853.

Part I. Ministerial Education.—The Church should aim at bringing into the ministry all classes of her sons, acknowledging in all cases the necessity of the call by the Spirit. The Report alludes to the dearth of candidates, 1. As affecting the character of the Church. 2. It involves many responsibilities. 3. It impedes our aggressive work in the world. 4. It places our Church in a certain sense, in opposition to Providence. 5. It entails disadvantages on this and on succeeding generations. 6. It is remarkable in view of all the offers of assistance held out to the deserving. 7. It is in striking contrast to the general outward prosperity of the Church. 8. And with infidel and Roman increase. 9. The dearth of candidates should lead to prayer.

Part II. Operations of the Year.—The number of candidates in all stages of education, 370, (2 less than last year.) The number of schools is about 100; of Classical Academies 46; of Colleges 13, besides three or four others projected during the year. Funds received for Ministerial Education, $32,519.52; for Schools, Academies, and Colleges, $9883.64; other purposes, $220. In all, $42,623.16. Payments, $37,899.53.

Part III. contains remarks on Church Schools and State Schools; or, A plea for religious education, charity, and peace. The first proposition is, that the religious training of children is ordained of God as the means of building up the Church. This is proved by the commands, and the special promises of God, and by the experience of the Church, in both dispensations, and in every part of the world. The second proposition is, that religious training must be given in schools, as well as in families. 1. Because the family is insufficient for the entire work of religious, as well as of secular education. 2. Because even competent parents have not the requisite time. 3. Because most households give no religious instruction whatever. 4. Because history proves the value of the agency under consideration. The third proposition is, that adequate religious instruction can only be provided in schools under the care of the Church. 1. Because in no others can Christians choose the teachers, or determine the course of training. 2. The prevalent diversity of religious opinion, and sectarian jealousy, must prevent the adoption of any efficient system of religious instruction. 3. The argument from the history of our common schools is decisive on this subject.

The fourth proposition is, that the two systems of Church and State schools may readily co-exist. The one supplements the other. The friends of parochial schools desire, as a general thing, that efficiency should be given to the State system. 1. Because thousands of children might otherwise remain uneducated. 2. Because secular education, even with the minimum of moral and religious instruction, and with other facilities for receiving it, is a blessing. 3. In the present condition of public opinion, the common schools are the only ones for which State patronage can be secured; and without the aid of the State, the general education of the people cannot be accomplished. 4. The State schools constitute a great public system, which ought not to be set aside until a better and more efficient one can be devised.

On the other hand, the friends of the State system have no reason to oppose denominational schools. 1. Because these schools do not owe their origin to hostility to the State system, but to views of Christian duty. 2. The utmost extent to which the denominational system can be now carried will leave much ground that can only be occupied by the State. 3. Denominational schools are not exclusive, and need not be offensively sectarian. 4. Healthful competition is of great advantage in the work of education. 5. Let the patriot remember that the advantages of religious education to the State are incalculably precious. 6. The rights of conscience are guarantied to all; and every church is at perfect liberty to establish schools in which religion shall be taught after its own doctrines and usages.

Conclusion.—The true educational policy of the Presbyterian Church is:—1. To sustain common schools, where it can be consistently done, with the Bible in them. 2. To resist the Papal invasion of the State system for the propagation of Romanism. 3. To encourage religious schools and academies under private teachers, where circumstances favour it. 4. To sustain cordially and efficiently institutions of learning under the Church's own care.

ACTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The following is the action of the General Assembly on the last Report of the Board of Education.

The cause of education is a great and growing interest in our Church. The extension of this scheme beyond its original designation, so as to embrace the subjects of parochial, academical, and collegiate education, makes it of vast importance. The repeated sanction of the General Assembly to this enlargement of the object, and the growing conviction in our Church and country that religious education is mainly to be secured by denominational institutions, devolves much responsibility upon this Board. So far as the Committee can discover, the Board and its officers seem not only aware of this responsibility, but determined to act up to it. The Executive Committee, and especially the Corresponding and Associate Secretary, seem assiduous in their duties, and deserve the approval and gratitude of the Church. Their affairs seem to be managed not only in the most systematic manner, but with discretion, energy, and economy; and most happy results are proceeding from their labours.

As the sphere of operations is enlarged, so it is doubtless the duty of our people to enlarge their benefactions, as the Lord blesses them, and afford all the pecuniary means necessary for carrying out these plans which are proposed. While it is more difficult to commend this branch of benevolence to the minds of the people generally than of some other branches of benevolence, yet to persons of enlarged and enlightened views, who have been favoured, in God's bounty, with the means to do it, there seems nothing more appropriate and useful than to bestow large sums in donations and endowments for the purpose of providing the means of education upon a religious basis, for this generation, and those which are to follow after. Let those who pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more labourers into his harvest, accompany their prayer with corresponding exertions—acts of faith and of beneficence.

The Committee, after considering attentively the Report of the Board, and examining its details, would respectfully recommend to the Assembly the adoption of the following resolutions, viz:

1*st. Resolved*, That the lamentable dearth of candidates for the ministry in the Church, while the call both from the Home and Foreign fields is becoming more frequent and pressing, is the subject of serious alarm; involving great responsibilities on all concerned, and demanding in the most urgent manner the immediate and particular attention of ministers, elders, parents, and pious young men; and the Assembly express the opinion that constant and earnest prayer should be made to the "Lord of the harvest," both in public and private, until a gracious answer is given in his holy providence; and that the last Thursday of February next, be recommended as a day of special prayer and public instruction on this subject in all our churches.

2*d. Resolved*, That this Assembly sanction the alteration of the rule of the Board of Education on the subject of appropriations, so as to allow, under particular circumstances, an increase of the sum above the maximum now granted according to the discretion of the Board.

3*d. Resolved*, That the Assembly gratefully record the goodness of God in giving so large a measure of prosperity to our schools, academies, and colleges during the year, and especially in pouring out His Spirit on some of these institutions, to the conversion, edification, and salvation of numbers of these youth.

4*th. Resolved*, That the establishment of a High School for the use and benefit of the free coloured population of this country, meets the cordial approbation and recommendation of this Assembly; with the understanding that it shall be wholly under the supervision and control of the Presbytery or Synod within whose bounds it may be located, thus securing such an education as shall promote the usefulness and happiness of this class of our people.

5*th. Resolved*, That the effort of the Synod of Arkansas to establish "Makemie College," within its wide and destitute bounds upon the frontier of population, is entitled to the special support of the friends of Christian education; and it is recommended not only to the attention of the Board, but to the efficient and liberal co-operation of all who have it in their power to render it aid.

6*th. Resolved*, That the Presbyterian Church has always been, and is now, in favour of the general education of the people; yet whilst the General Assembly cordially welcome and rejoice in all public or private efforts, not anti-Christian, which have this end in view, and which recognize the use of the Holy Scriptures; they still deem it important and necessary to adhere to and extend their own system of schools, academies, and colleges, as Christian institutions, whose purpose is to bring up their youth in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

7*th. Resolved*, That this Assembly renewedly recommend the object of the Board of Education, in its various departments, to the patronage of the churches, in such form as each may deem best.

STATE OF THE TREASURY.

The whole amount of funds collected by the Board this year is larger than in any former year. It will be gratifying to the Assembly to learn that the sum received for schools, academies, and colleges amounted to nearly $10,000; whilst the fund for candidates has received no diminution. Fifty-five institutions of education have been assisted during the year. The funds are all kept distinct. The balances are larger in both funds than those of last year. Two facts must be borne in mind in relation to these balances. 1st. That a considerable sum is necessary for the May quarter; and secondly, that, as comparatively little money commonly comes into the treasury in the summer months, the balances are required to supply the deficiency in the August quarter, also.—The African fund, moreover, is a permanent fund.

In addition to the sum raised by the Board for educational purposes, and paid directly into their treasury, the Board have been instrumental in collecting large sums for the endowment of various institutions of learning. Dr. Chester has raised for these institutions at least as much money as has been received into the treasury for all purposes.

The following is the state of the treasury for the last ecclesiastical year.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

POLICY OF OUR CHURCH.

It is the policy of the Church to aim at securing supplies for the ministry from all classes of her sons. In encouraging her indigent young men to prepare for the work, by assisting them in temporal things, no intimation is applied that she can dispense with the services of those who are outwardly in more prosperous circumstances. On the contrary, her cordiality in assisting the indigent is only the expression of her earnest desire to increase the number of the heralds of the cross in every way which Providence sanctions. It is unwise to restrict the ministerial call by anything but fitness for the work, in its most enlarged acceptation. The Presbyterian Church aims at bringing all her sons, who may be called and qualified by the Spirit of grace, into the sacred calling.

The great majority of our ministers must probably ever be looked for from the middle and humbler classes of life. The history of the Church, from the days of the Apostles, confirms this expectation. The Galilean fishermen stand at the head of the apostolic succession. Never may the day dawn which shall witness the Presbyterian Church otherwise than zealous for the ministerial training of her indigent and worthy sons. Almost all of these have the advantages of sound religious nurture from early life, and possess those habits of self-denial and of hardy endurance so necessary in the ambassador of Christ. Of many a one of these children of Providence, may it be said:

'Tis not my boast that I deduce my birth
From loins enthroned, or rulers of the earth.
But higher far my proud pretensions rise,
The son of parents passed into the skies.

It is to be feared, however, that whilst many enter the ministry from the class just referred to, there is a disproportionate deficiency in the supply from those whose means are adequate to their own support. There is no reason why the large class in our Church, represented by the more prosperous farmers, merchants, and the men of liberal income, should not assist in preaching the gospel. At the Reformation in Scotland, a large portion of the ministers, beginning with Patrick Hamilton, of noble birth, were descended from the highest parentage in the land. This gave them a peculiar influence with all classes at that crisis, and assisted in securing the due maintenance of the reformed worship throughout the country. The status of the ministry is never an unimportant element of its power. Fortunately for the Church, however, true character is more dependent upon education than upon mere birth. Nevertheless, whilst the Church, on the one hand, should exercise a most tender sympathy with those of her sons, who, like the fishermen, have been trained to labour, she must not neglect, on the other hand, to avail herself of all other resources, which, at least in their place, have important relations to her general prosperity.

These remarks, of course, imply that the Holy Spirit alone designates to the work of the ministry, those who have any right to enter it. No condition of outward circumstance, or of inward grace, can supercede the necessity of a distinct personal call from God to this special service.

The importance of rallying the whole power of the Church in the use of means for the increase of the ministry is seen, at the present time, in the continued dearth of candidates. There has been a slight decrease during the year, confirming the downward tendency of the three or four past years. Our statistics are indeed humiliating. It has been ascertained that the number of theological students in the Presbyterian church is no greater than it was ten years ago, and that the number for the present year is less than in any year of the whole ten. The following table presents a gloomy aspect:

Total number of Theological Students for ten years.

The Board of Education conceive it to be their duty distinctly to recall the attention of the Assembly to this condition of things. The remedy for the evil must begin with a knowledge of its extent. It is high time for the alarm to be sounded throughout Zion. To dwell in fancied security is a dreadful doom. There should be no concealment of our danger. Let it be contemplated in its full reality. Our hearts may well "tremble for the ark of God" in this day of indifference to its service.

MODIFICATION OF THE RULE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

[From the Annual Report.]

The Board desire to call the attention of the General Assembly to one of the rules relating to appropriations. The policy of the Church has always been to administer the funds for the education of her sons on liberal and equitable principles. The aid offered under the name of scholarships, implies the obligation of the Church to render it, and merit on the part of those who receive it. The amount of aid from the Board has never been more than sufficient to encourage students, in connection with aid from their friends, and their own personal efforts. The Church has aimed at avoiding the two extremes of prodigality and of parsimony; and the principle of her operations is, in a word, to help those who help themselves.

It has been thought by some of the friends of education in our Church, that the amount of the appropriations to candidates ought to be increased. Although the Board are not prepared, at the present time, to recommend to the Assembly any fundamental alteration in their rules on this subject, it is believed that a modification, not affecting the general policy, would be expedient. If the words "in ordinary circumstances" were added to Article 5th of the Section headed "Scholarships and Appropriations," advantage would result from the change. The Article would then read as follows:

"The maximum of scholarships shall not, in ordinary circumstances, exceed one hundred dollars a year to theological students, and seventy-five dollars to all others."

As a general rule, the present scale of appropriations is, perhaps, as good a one as can be made. There are two reasons in favour of the proposed modification. First, there are to be found in many of our institutions cases of peculiar hardship, which require more assistance than the rules now allow. Young men sometimes become discouraged altogether; sometimes they abandon their studies at different intervals in their course in pursuit of the means of maintenance; sometimes their health becomes impaired, and even ruined, by being obliged to stint themselves in the necessaries of life. A slight range may be allowed to Christian discretion in appropriating funds to students. The general rule is undoubtedly a good one; but the perfection of a rule sometimes consists in its exceptions. The lives of some of our young men might have been spared to the Church, under Providence, if a little additional aid could have been afforded at the right time. The Presbyteries and the instructors of candidates are in a position to serve the Church in this particular, to great advantage, whilst the Board would claim the right of final decision, according to the state of their funds.

In the second place, this modification is required by the necessities of some of the Presbyteries. The prices of subsistence vary in different sections of the country. It is impossible for some of the Presbyteries in the South-west and South, to co-operate with the Church at large, as the rule now stands. One of the Presbyteries has memorialized the Board on this very subject. The delegate of another Presbytery has informed the Board that, so imperiously is the change demanded, and so encouraging would it be to the churches in his section of country, that a larger sum could be obtained on its adoption, for the general purposes of ministerial education. It is highly desirable to secure the general co-operation of the Presbyteries on the principle of equity and ecclesiastical equality.

For these reasons the Board request the Assembly to sanction the modification of the rule in the manner proposed.

[It will be seen that the Assembly authorized the modification of the rule.—Cor. Sec'y.]

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

AN AFRICAN SCHOOL.

[From the Annual Report.]

The Board call the attention of the Assembly to a Presbyterial institution for our free coloured population.

The Presbyterian Church has always sympathized with every practicable mode of doing good to the African race; and her conservative principles have secured, to a great extent, the confidence of the community.

The present circumstances of the free coloured people in our country seem to demand some action on the subject of education; and this in three aspects:

1st. Education in reference to preparing young men to serve in the ministry at home. We have a number of African churches which find great difficulty in obtaining ministers of the right qualifications, and the number of these churches might be considerably increased, with a supply of suitable men.

2d. Education in reference to African colonization and the missionary work abroad. Educated men are greatly needed in Liberia. Colonization on the coast of Africa is one of the greatest enterprises of the day, and has always received the commendation of the General Assembly. This promising republic needs educated men in every department of its government, and in its ecclesiastical and religious affairs. A part of the supply should be furnished with the emigration from this country.

3d. Education in reference to the general elevation of African character. A large amount of ignorance and degradation prevails among our free coloured population; and Christian education is, under God, one of the efficacious means of working a reformation and of sending forth persons of good moral character, whose influence shall be a blessing. The want of a good school of a high order is sensibly felt in various sections of country. Our Baltimore brethren were obliged, during the year, to send two of the promising youth, connected with an African congregation in that city, all the way to New Hampshire to obtain a suitable education.

The proposed undertaking will doubtless commend itself to all who have the interests of this race at heart. And the Church will, it is believed, have abundant reason to rejoice in the efforts it may cost to carry it into successful execution.

The following are conceived to be the characteristics of a good plan for the school.

1. The school should be upon a religious foundation.

2. Under the control of our own ministers and laymen.

3. Thorough in its literary aims.

4. Chiefly gratuitous in the offer of its advantages.

5. Located in a friendly neighbourhood, that will protect it from fanaticism of all kinds.

6. In a climate congenial to the race.

7. Convenient, but plain, in all its external arrangements of buildings, furniture, food, dress, and every thing.

A location and a climate suitable to such an institution, with the men able and willing to carry it on, may be found within the limits of the Newcastle Presbytery. A distinguished minister of our Church, whose ministry has been chiefly in Virginia, remarked that no Presbytery was more competent than that of Newcastle to engage in the undertaking. Some of the brethren are much interested on the subject, and have been considering, for some time past, the practicability of a beginning. An excellent site, contiguous to the boundaries of three of the oldest and largest congregations, may be secured; and competent men be engaged as teachers and superintendents of the Institution. It is understood that the Presbytery of Newcastle is willing to supervise the work, with the prospective enlargement of the ecclesiastical superintendence, if desired, to the Synod of Philadelphia.

The object of the Board in bringing the subject before the Assembly, is not to have any action taken to secure the management of the Institution by the General Assembly or by the Board; but, 1st, simply to obtain an expression of opinion favourable to the general object. 2d, to bring the subject at once prominently before the whole Church; and 3d, to encourage the brethren engaged in the work to go forward at once.

The undertaking must undoubtedly encounter difficulties, common to all such enterprises, and special to those aiming at the education of this race. Failures are to be expected among the youth, and discouragements which would dishearten fanatics or worldly men. But a good cause is worth its cost—its cost of time, and prayer, and self-denial, and patience, and funds, yea, even life itself, if need be. If the God of Ethiopia be for us, "who can be against us?"

[By a reference to the action of the General Assembly, it will be seen that the plan of an African school, under ecclesiastical supervision, has been sanctioned by that body.—Corresponding Secretary.]

THE SURE HARVEST.

Long time unheeded in the ground
The fruitful seed may lie;
And many a season in its round
May seem to pass it by.

And when at length the plant puts forth
Its first small tender leaves,
It still may seem of little worth
No eye its growth perceives.

Yet, fed by sun, and rain, and dew,
Its branch shall surely spread,
Till all with praise and wonder view
Its fair and stately head.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

MEETING OF THE BOARD—RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The Annual Meeting of the Board was held in this city on the 2d of May, and in Philadelphia, by adjournment, on the 30th of May. At these meetings, the Report of the Executive Committee was approved, and directed to be laid before the General Assembly. The officers of the Board were re-elected, with the Rev. H. N. Brinsmade, D. D., and Mr. L. B. Ward, to supply vacancies in the Executive Committee. The Rev. J. Leighton Wilson was also elected a Corresponding Secretary of the Board, co-ordinate with the others. The Executive Committee consists now of the Rev. Messrs. W. W. Phillips, D.D., J. J. Janeway, D. D., G. Potts, D. D., H. N. Brinsmade, D. D., J. M. Macdonald, Messrs. J. Lenox, R. Carter, R. L. Stuart, and L. B. Ward, with the Secretaries and Treasurer, ex-officio, and as many members of the Board as may be present.

In the General Assembly, the Report of the Board was considered, and after addresses by several members, the following Preamble and Resolutions were adopted, viz:

The Committee to whom was referred the Report of the Board of Foreign Missions, have earnestly and prayerfully considered the same. This they have done, under a deep sense of responsibility to this body, and to Him who is the head of His body, the Church, "over all, God blessed for ever." The business which this Report brings up they regard as one of the most solemn and imperative that can come before us, and this Report as one of the most interesting and important documents to which our attention can be directed. "The field," of which God is the husbandman, Christ the purchaser, and His Church the cultivator, is "THE WORLD," "ALL THE WORLD," and "EVERY CREATURE IN ALL THE WORLD." To preach the Gospel—to all within this field—to disciple, instruct and supply them with the means of grace—is the end and object for which the Church was organized, commissioned, and made perpetual. And while it is necessary, for convenience and efficiency, to give separate attention to the Home and Foreign Departments of this field, and to further every good work, yet we should never forget that all that is aimed at by our various Boards, Institutions, and Churches, is the glory of Christ, in the salvation of souls, the edification of believers, and the extension of His kingdom.

Your Committee would therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That this General Assembly approve the zealous, self-denying, and economical manner in which the Board, and especially the Executive Committee and Officers, have conducted the Foreign Missionary operations of our Church during the last year; and pray to God that life, health, and every spiritual help, may be imparted to them in their continued labours.

2. Resolved, That the Report be commended to the prayerful examination of our Ministers, Elders, and churches, that they may be more perfectly acquainted with all that our Church is doing, and still further desirous of doing, for the propagation of the gospel among the unevangelized nations of the earth; and that their own hearts may be zealously affected towards this good work, and come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

3. Resolved, That the Assembly rejoice, and give God thanks, that as a Church we are now united in the recognition of our first great and primary duty—to be a Missionary Church; that the blessing promised to the Church, while faithful in this duty, has been so manifestly poured out upon us in the efficiency of our ministry, the multiplication and enlargement of our churches, the success of all our enterprises, the increase of pecuniary gifts to Foreign Missions, tenfold since 1831, and in the gradual increase among us of a missionary spirit.

4. Resolved, That while there is much for which, as a Church, we are glad, and ought to bless God, in the prosperity of our Missions abroad, and the increasing spirit of Missions at home, nevertheless there is much to humble and admonish us in the apathy of many of our churches, and the total neglect of their duty towards this cause by a large number of others, and by a multitude of church members; that while many connected with our body, who are not members, make liberal contributions, and many communicants give large sums—nevertheless, the whole amount given during the past year would scarcely average one cent each week, to each communicant; and that more than one-half of all the churches, under the care of more than one-fourth of the ministers, with nearly one-third of the church members, have given nothing through this Board in aid of Foreign Missions for the last year—this, surely, is cause for deep humiliation and dread of the Divine displeasure, since the presence of our Divine Head is promised only in connection with fidelity to this duty.

5. Resolved, That, as a General Assembly and representative of our churches, we would now solemnly, earnestly, and affectionately call the attention of our Synods, Presbyteries, churches, and individual members to this delinquency, and invoke them to take such measures as may rectify the evil. And as this neglect of plain and paramount duty must arise from defective views of obligation, or from want of information, and proper efforts on the part of pastors and elders, we would earnestly recommend Pastors to indoctrinate their people, both by special discourses, and by frequent incidental observations, on the subject of Missions—to interest and secure the efforts of the children and youth in this cause—to maintain the regular observance of the monthly concert of prayer and contribution, either on the Sabbath morning, or some suitable time, and to promote among their members the circulation and reading of the Foreign Missionary, and the Home and Foreign Record.

6. Resolved, That as very much depends upon the course pursued on this subject by Presbyteries, it be specially recommended to them to inquire of every pastor and elder what measures are adopted for interesting their churches in this cause, and to endeavour, by Presbyterial visitation, or the exchange of pulpits, to have the duty, the privilege, and the advantages of a faithful co-operation in the work of Foreign Missions brought before all their churches, until all are led to contribute to this great and growing cause. They would further suggest to our several Synods the expediency of adopting as a rule, what has been found very profitable in some, namely, the delivery of a missionary discourse during their sessions by some member of the body previously appointed.

7. Resolved, That in rejoicing over the fact, that during the past year important fields have been opened up and occupied—that the favour of Providence and the grace of the Holy Spirit have everywhere accompanied the labours of our missionary brethren; and that converts have been admitted to the communion of the Church at most or all of our stations, we cannot but recognize in all this the loud call for enlarged efforts, greater liberality, and more earnest and persevering prayer, that the Lord of the harvest may raise up, qualify, and send forth many more labourers into the harvest, and that thus our Committee may be enabled to prosecute, with increasing efficiency, all our Missions, and especially among our Indian tribes, in India, Africa, among Romanists at home and abroad, and among the Chinese, including the branch mission in California.

8. Resolved, That the General Assembly approves of the efforts of the Board to bring the ancient people of God to the knowledge of the gospel, and recommends that the Board avail themselves of all the openings of Divine Providence to labour in that field.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, June 13, 1853.

India Missions.—Letters have been received from Lahor, Lodiana, and Futtehgurh, April 4; Agra, to April 7; Allahabad, to April 1. Mr. Morrison reports a tour of six weeks in the country north of the latitude of Lahor, during which he daily preached the gospel. He visited numerous villages, and some large towns or cities, in which the name of Christ had never before been preached, and was painfully impressed with the need of more labourers.—Mr. Walsh mentions the baptism by the English Chaplain at Futtehgurh, of the Sikh prince, Dhuleep Singh. This young man would have been the reigning king of the Panjab, if the Sikh dynasty had not ceased. He receives from the British government a pension of about $200,000 a year, and if he is a sincere disciple of Christ his influence for good will probably be very great. His profession of Christianity can hardly fail to make a strong impression on the Hindu mind.—The East Indian schools at Agra continued to prosper, having 75 boys and about 35 girls in attendance.—Mr. Owen mentions the admission to the church at Allahabad of a young man, who was formerly in the mission school, and who will probably be useful as a teacher. Mr. Nundy has entered on his duties at Futtehpore, with encouraging prospects.

Siam Mission.—A letter has been received from the Rev. S. Mattoon, of February 8. No marked event is reported, but gratification is expressed at the consistent deportment of the two Chinese members of the church. In the midst of many temptations, especially during the Chinese new year's festivities, they had received grace to maintain their Christian profession without reproach, and they appeared very grateful for the grace of God and for the instructions of their missionary teachers.

China Missions.—We have received letters from Ningpo, to March 15; Shanghai, March 19; Canton, March 26. The admission to the church of a young married woman is reported. She had been a pupil in Miss Aldersey's school, and on her marriage was subjected to persecution for not conforming to the usual idolatrous rites. She had received grace to abide faithfully by her convictions of duty. The continued seriousness of several persons is reported. At Canton, the new chapel, in premises leased for five years, has been opened for worship, and a day-school of thirty-six scholars has been collected at the same place, both under the charge of Mr. French. Twelve boys out of thirty applicants had been received, in forming a new class in the boarding-school under Mr. Happer's charge. A strong desire continues to be expressed by the brethren for more labourers at Canton. Every reader of the Annual Report (see Canton Mission) will be convinced that more men ought to be sent to that station.

Mission to the Chinese in California.—The Rev. W. Speer writes on the 29th of April, that the attendance at worship is increasing. A Chinese prayer meeting had been commenced, and at one of the meetings two Presbyterian Chinese brethren from the mines were present. They had been admitted to the church at a mission station in China, and appeared to be consistent Christians. They faithfully observe the Sabbath, which is sadly profaned by most others. They say that from ten to twenty of their countrymen at the mines keep the Sabbath with them. Their prayers are spoken of by Mr. Speer as "humble, sincere, fervent, copious, and full of the Spirit of Christ." A site had been selected for a chapel and mission dwelling-house, in a Chinese part of San Francisco.

Liberia Missions.—Letters have been received from Monrovia, April 14, and Greenville, April 13. Mr. Priest mentions that the number of church members at his station is 42, some having removed to other places and others having been called away by death. When he first settled at Greenville, he found but one communicant, a woman, who afterwards connected herself with another denomination. He has not therefore built upon another man's foundation.—Mrs. Wilson's health having suffered severely at Monrovia, it has been considered expedient for her to return to this country, on a visit of some months to her friends. Mr. Wilson consents to this separation in view of duty, and will continue at his post.

Notices of Arrivals.—We have received advices of the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Nourse at Spencer Academy; Miss Turner and Miss Wilson, at their stations among the Chickasaws; Mr. McEwen, at Tallahassee, Creek Mission; Mr. and Mrs. Dillett, and Mr. and Mrs. Jones, at the Omahaw and Otoe Mission. Mrs. Way, of the Ningpo Mission, with her children, arrived at this port on the 19th of May, on a visit to her friends.

THE ANNUAL REPORT.

By issuing an extra sheet, struck off from the same types on which the octavo edition of the Report is printed, we are enabled to place the greater part of this document in the hands of the readers of the newspaper Record, at comparatively little expense. This extra sheet accompanies the present number of the newspaper Record.

An octavo edition of the Report is published as usual, of which copies on paper of light weight will be sent to ministers, members, and directors for life. Those who may wish to receive copies on heavier paper, for binding or preservation, will be supplied, on remitting in stamps six cents on each copy, to prepay the postage. If not prepaid, the postage would be twelve cents.

The Committee desire to obtain for the Report the careful perusal of many readers, and would suggest that persons receiving copies of it might promote the interests of the missionary cause by lending them to their friends.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. W. P. MARTIN.

November 27th, 1852.—A man came to me desiring to profess Christianity. He has served several missionaries in the capacity of teacher; has long known the gospel; and in the memoir of Mr. Lowrie is spoken of as almost a Christian. Two years ago he was in my employ; and at that time professed to believe the doctrines and secretly practised the duties of Christianity. When urged, however, to make a public profession, he said "he would when his mother should be dead, and his nephews able to care for themselves." When he broached the subject to-day, I immediately inquired "Is your mother dead?" to which he replied, "No, but I am getting old, and the world is losing its hold upon me;" adding that he was at a loss how to excuse himself for having delayed a profession of religion so long.

I assured him that he had no need to excuse himself to me; that his delay was an offence against God, and that he must go to God for pardon.

I then showed him, from the Scriptures, the danger of those who know the truth, and defer obedience to it. He left me, promising to come again; evidently disappointed to find that he had more to do than merely make a nominal profession of Christianity.

He is poor, growing old, and has no sons, so that I suspect him of coming from unworthy motives.

Dr. McCartee's teacher, who is a literary graduate, well acquainted with the Scriptures, and evidently convinced of their truth, to-day invited me to attend the marriage of his son.

I inquired if he designed to dispense with the idolatrous rites customary on such occasions; to which he replied, by asking, "Whether it was better to be a Christian in name and a heathen at heart; or to be a heathen in name and a Christian at heart?" intimating that he stood in the latter position, while all who have professed Christianity occupy the former.

December 5th.—A young man was baptized this morning by one of the English Episcopal missionaries; on which occasion I was invited to address the congregation. A few months ago, I took part, by invitation, in the exercises connected with the immersion of two native converts by the American Baptist missionaries. Though we neither relinquish our opinions, nor hold them with less firmness, we feel it important to merge minor differences, and present a united front to the hosts of pagans by whom we are surrounded.

The youth baptized to-day is a member of a day school, being the fourth pupil of that school, who has professed Christianity during the past year; a fact in favour of day-schools. His grandfather formerly taught in that school, and died about a year ago, lamenting that he had not secured the Christian's hope; showing that neither the philosophy of Confucius, nor the delusions of Budhism were sufficient to sustain him in a dying hour.

Afternoon.—Read and conversed in my study with a young man from the neighbouring province of Ganhwuy, who is studying law in one of the Mandarin's offices. He is a frequent visitor at my study: possesses a good mind, a candid disposition, often asks for books, and receives instruction with docility. I am gratified to discover by this and other cases, that though difficult, it is still possible to communicate with people of adjacent provinces whose dialect varies considerably from ours.

Dec. 14th.—Cast down in spirit by the bereavement, which our mission has lately suffered; (the death of brother Coulter,) and the sickness of a child, which may terminate in a personal bereavement. Cheered however by good news. My teacher, whom I know, by an acquaintance of two years, to be honest and sincere, has for several months been evincing a constantly deepening interest in the things that concern his salvation. It was not, however, till a few days ago, that he expressed his desire to make a public profession, stating at the same time that he anticipated opposition from his wife and mother. To-day he tells me, that his wife on observing him retire last evening for prayer, inquired the cause. He then disclosed his feelings to her, (which he had hitherto lacked courage to do;) when, to his surprise and joy, she, instead of opposing, encouraged him to make a public profession, at the same time expressing her desire to do the same. He remarked that by doing so, they would lose the respect of their friends; to which she replied, that it mattered little how they were esteemed by men, if they but stood right with God.

Dec. 20th.—Visited Miss A——'s school to converse with several of the elder girls, who are anxious for their souls. One of the pupils who was recently married; and who patiently bore cruel persecution rather than bow before graven images, or eat things offered to idols, is now permitted to return to the school on small wages, as a monitor. She has not only proved her faith by suffering, but gives evidence of piety in her conduct, and especially in the anxiety she manifests for the salvation of others.

Dec. 26th.—Tu Seen-sang, (my teacher,) to-day declined attending a public examination for literary honours, because of it being held on the Sabbath; and has spent the day in hearing and reading the Scriptures. A few days ago he agreed to negotiate for a friend the purchase of a place on the examination list, for which he was to receive a sum of money. This would have been practising a fraud on the officers, but is so common, that it is not even esteemed disreputable. But Tu Seen-sang reconsidered it in the light of Christian morals, and his conscience gave him no rest till he went and retracted his consent.

Dec. 29th.—Visited the boys' school, under the care of Mr. Quarterman, for the purpose of conversing with several boys who are concerned for their souls. Two of them desired baptism several months ago, and were delayed only to test their sincerity. Their conduct is irreproachable, and their religious anxiety rather increased than abated; so that I hope we shall soon be permitted to welcome them, and perhaps several others to the communion of the Church.

January 1st, 1853.—Several Chinese visitors, among whom was the young Ganhwuy, law student. He professes to believe the Gospel, and expresses a desire to connect himself with the church; but though inquisitive for truth, and candid in embracing it, I fear he does not yet feel his need of a Saviour.

In the evening, after preaching to an attentive audience, invited several, who are acquainted with the outlines of the Gospel, into my study for more particular instruction. One of these, a respectable looking man, of melancholy temperament, when he had heard how we, with all our defects, may be made complete in Christ, replied, "Alas! my defects are too great to be supplied." He also said, "the religion of Jesus is too high and mysterious," and requested me to talk to him on subjects of human morality. When, however, I told him that the beginning of morality is the knowledge of him to whom our duties are rendered, he readily admitted it. The others present were better informed. One of them, by name Choo, has been for several years in the habit of visiting various missionaries. He is a man of brilliant intellect, but so disordered, as to be unable to prosecute any business. When I first saw him, near two years ago, a missionary was talking to him on the subject of prayer, which he regarded as an absurd and useless rite. He afterwards read the Gospel of Matthew with great delight, and a remarkably clear apprehension of its meaning; began the practice of prayer, exchanged the uncouth antique dress which he formerly wore, for becoming apparel, and since that time has appeared so much more rational as to give us ground to regard him as one of the trophies of the Gospel. We cannot, however, admit him to church membership, unless he gives evidence of being restored to entire sanity, lest reproach should thus be brought upon the gospel.

Jan. 2d, Sabbath.—Mr. Goddard of the Baptist Mission, whose experience, sound judgment, and piety, make his counsels much valued by us, preached to the missionary body on a subject suited to the commencement of a new year.

Afternoon, read part of the 1st Epistle of John with Tu Seen-sang and a printer, who has also been for several months in an awakened state of mind. They read with so much interest the evidences therein given of those who have passed from death unto life, as to encourage me to hope that they themselves have experienced that change.

Evening. In addition to some of the inquirers, before mentioned, a young man came in, who has been a hearer of Mr. Rankin, and who comes to me, as being nearer to his place of residence.

Jan. 3d.—Observed unitedly by all the missionaries at this station as a day of humiliation and prayer. It was delightful to hear on this occasion, special thanksgiving for the unity of sentiment, and concert of action, which have long existed among us, the representatives of different countries, and different churches; together with fervent prayers that this unity may ever remain unbroken.

Crossing the river to-day, I had nearly reached the shore without saying any thing to my fellow-passengers. This struck me as wrong, and I addressed them a few words, telling them where I preached, and inviting them to come. In the evening, one of them, a respectable silversmith, was in my audience; listened attentively, and promised to come again. I hope he will not prove a Demetrius.

Jan. 4th.—A meeting for inquirers, conducted by several brethren and attended by a goodly number from the boys' school, and several others. Among these seekers may we not hope that there are some who shall find.

Jan. 7th.—Tu Seen-sang just returned from attending the funeral of his uncle. It was celebrated with idolatrous rites, in which, however, he says he took no part. The firmness of his resolution to be a Christian seems thus to be subjected to frequent tests.

Evening. The melancholy man, by name Zung, before mentioned, came with one or two others, as they are accustomed to do on alternate days, for instruction. Mr. Zung readily comprehends what he hears, and seems thoroughly in earnest. I asked him if he still doubted the possibility of his defects being supplied, to which he replied—No! not since you assured me that there is mercy even for the chief of sinners.

Jan. 8th.—Heard of the extraordinary liberality of a poor Chinese convert. He is a tailor in connection with the English Church Mission, was baptized but little more than a year ago, and has appeared to grow rapidly in knowledge and grace. His wages are but five dollars a month, and yet he has just made a contribution of about $13, almost a fourth of his income, for the spread of the gospel. In this his deep poverty has abounded to the riches of his liberality. Perhaps our Lord, beholding at the same time the offerings of the rich in Christian lands, has already pronounced, Verily, this poor Chinaman hath cast in more than they all.

Jan. 15th.—Mr. Choo has come more than ten miles to attend the services of the Sabbath, and has done so frequently before. He still seems perfectly sane, and converses on the subject of religion with so much clearness and force that he is generally listened to with pleasure.

In sending these extracts from my journal, I would add, that other brethren have met with encouragement in their labours, perhaps more than has fallen to my lot; and all seem to be of opinion that we have reason to look for a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Will not Christians at home help us in prayer for this blessing? If the entire population of this city were converted, though a great thing, it would be but a small beginning toward the conversion of the Chinese Empire. The city contains not less than 250,000 people; but this is less than 1000th part of the population of the Empire.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. H. V. RANKIN.

Jan. 1st, 1853.—A bright New Year's day has dawned upon us, and every one seems to be well and happy. Yet in calling upon the different members of our little missionary circle to-day, a peculiar seriousness was evident in the conversation of all, for we all remembered that only a few days since we committed the remains of one of our number to the silent tomb, and we have also been just now called to part for a season with a beloved family, who, on account of the serious ill-health of some of the children, will soon be on their way across the deep towards their native land.

Our dear brother Coulter had been suffering during the summer from chronic dysentery, and derived no benefit from a trip which in October he took to Shanghai. Indeed, he rather grew worse, so that, upon his return, strong medicines were necessarily resorted to. Under the influence of these he began slowly to improve, until the 20th of November, when he experienced a relapse, which proved fatal. In order to give him the most perfect quiet, as well as to relieve Mrs. Coulter from all other care than that of watching with her husband, he was, nine days later, moved to my house. For a few days he seemed to be a little better, but it was not long before his life was evidently in great danger. We met together in prayer to God, in which we were joined by the members of other missions, and every day petitions for his recovery went up from every family altar and every heart. Within the past three years we had thrice been permitted to witness the effect of prayer in raising up from the very gates of death others of our little band, and all seemed confident that God would again interpose. The week before his death our hopes brightened, and for two or three days there seemed to be better ground of hope. He himself, however, for several weeks had evidently given up all expectation of recovery, and awaited the issue with Christian composure and with remarkable patience. His mind throughout seemed to be stayed upon God, and he always expressed himself heartily resigned to the divine will. Hence, the sudden change for the worse which took place two days before he died, seemed less unexpected to him than to his friends, and he made his final requests and partings with great composure. His faith was clear, resting only upon his Saviour. On Saturday, December 11th, it was evident that his end was near, and we all gathered around his bedside, and joined in prayer that he might be saved from all bodily pain, and that all needful grace might be imparted for the dying hour. God mercifully heard us, and our beloved brother passed peacefully through the portals of death.

"Life so sweetly ceased to be,
It lapsed in immortality."

The funeral services were conducted in English by Mr. Way, in the chapel, where the body was borne by the six remaining members of the mission, and remarks were made at the grave to the Chinese present, by Mr. Russell, of the Church Missionary Society. Our mission has thus, for the second time since its establishment, been called to mourn the death of one of its members. Yet we mourn not as those who have no hope respecting him, and for ourselves, we are assured that there is mercy mingled with the bitter draught. May it not be that God intends to answer our prayers, not, indeed, in the way we had hoped for, but with even richer blessings, in the outpouring of his Spirit? May he also prove to be the widow's stay and the Father of the fatherless!

On the 16th of December we were startled, about eight o'clock at night, by an earthquake, so violent as to stop the pendulums of nearly all the clocks. The children in the school were greatly frightened, and several were apprehensive that the day of judgment was at hand. In the midst of the panic I was pleased to notice the composure of one of the Christian girls, who assured her companions that if they would trust in Jesus they would have no cause of fear.

Disappointed Hope.

Jan. 25.—To-day I had experience of one of those peculiar trials of the missionary which often tend to depress his mind. Early in the month I was gratified to hear a young man, who I had noticed was very attentive during the Chinese service in the chapel, express himself fully determined to become a Christian, and request me to give him further instruction. I had considerable conversation with him then, and at other times, when, upon invitation, he came to my house. Two other brethren of the mission, who became acquainted with him, also laboured for his spiritual welfare, and he attended quite regularly the evening services conducted by one of them in the city church. This morning I was pleased to see him again visit me, and we spent a long time together, going over very fully the doctrines of the Bible. He seemed generally to have clear views of the truth, and to have learned much since I had seen him last. I was just upon the point of dismissing him, when, to my surprise, he fell upon his knees, and begged me to lend him a few dollars. His motives thus at once were revealed, and as I afterwards found, he had taken all the pains of attending religious services, day by day, and of studying divine truth, with the hope that he would derive thereby some pecuniary assistance. I soon learned from brother W. Martin, who had been instructing him, that yesterday he had been endeavouring to impose upon him, by fabricating an ingenious story, and he had thus come early to me, hoping to gain my ear before I should have learned his deceit. He seemed quite distressed at the unsuccessful issue of his plans, and I fear will not visit us again. I refer to this as one of many similar cases in which our faith is brought to trial. The love of money seems especially, among this people, the root of all evil, as it is the ruling motive of their lives. A Chinaman will do and suffer much, if he may hope to get this perishable gain. A large share of the conversation you may overhear from all classes of passers-by, is of money; and it is also the fruitful source of nearly all their domestic quarrels.

Yet it is interesting to notice, by way of contrast, a fact of a different nature. One of the Church Missionary converts, a tailor by trade, who supported his family only by his daily labours, recently brought nearly fourteen dollars, and gave them up to Mr. Russell for the benefit of the mission. This is a large sum for a poor man, whose wages have been generally less than four dollars a month, and as a free-will offering, is worthy of especial notice.

The audiences just now in our chapel seem to be on the increase, and the attention of the people more fixed. I have noticed of late, that dwelling at greater length than previously upon the doctrine of justification by faith, has been listened to with marked attention; and enlarged illustration of the office of Christ as Mediator, has excited much interest. There are some things in which we may have a fair hold upon the Chinese mind, when the divine economy has some marked resemblance to their own customs and ideas. The relationship of God to man as our Father, and the Governor of all things, and this office of Christ, are instances of this; the relationship of the former being well understood, and the office of middle-man being one which is employed in many of their social arrangements. The truth seems to gain ground, and many have been led to feel its importance, though their hearts are yet under the dominion of sin. I was interested in hearing of the different kinds of remarks made by the people as they left one of the chapels the other day. Some said, It is all nonsense; others, That it must be true, but that the doctrines were too hard to follow; others, however, That the doctrine was not only true but important, and ought to be attended to.

We were cheered yesterday with the arrival of our old fellow-labourer, Mr. Cabbold, of the Church Mission. Mrs. Cabbold accompanied him, and the two daughters of the late lamented missionary, Rev. Samuel Dyer, who have come out to assist Miss Aldersey in her school.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. W. SPEER.

We have lately received the following part of Mr. Speer's journal. It is the part referred to on page 75, Record of May, as then not having come to hand.

October 22.—Yesterday we passed the island gem Taboga, a beautiful mound standing in the sea, whose sandy shore, deep waters around which allow the vessel to lie almost amidst the twinkling shadows of the palms, and pearl white houses sleeping in the velvetty masses of ever-living green, make it a fairy habitation. But this paradise, like Eden, has its serpent; death hovers in its soft air; and cases sometimes occur like the following: A gentleman retired to rest with the windows of his chamber open; he has since remembered lying in a delicious doze, being gently fanned, and enjoying a tickling sensation in the feet. In the morning, at a late hour, his door was broken open, and he was found senseless and bathed in blood, which had flowed from wounds left by a vampire. Is not this a just illustration of the results of sin? The young taste at first a strange pleasure. But the unseen wings that fan it will gloat in their blood! Better to share the "present" chastening of the righteous, to whom "joy cometh in the morning."

October 25*th—Monday.*—Preached on board yesterday; in the morning to the cabin, in the afternoon to the steerage passengers. Some seemed very thoughtful and the tears stood in the eyes of one old gentleman, perhaps from the recollection of Sabbath scenes now bygone, perhaps for ever. May God seal his truth to many hearts.

October 26.—Off the headlands of Tehuantepec; a region that may become an important thoroughfare for the commerce seeking the Pacific; but whose people yet lie in heathenish degradation of mind and man. This shore is covered with lines of brown volcanic heaps, without vegetation, simmering in the hot sun, that resemble the mountains along the China Sea. Within the country, travellers describe interesting ruins, which evince a high degree of ancient civilization. At Mitla, there are remains of royal tombs, of great antiquity and extent. Almost all other relics have decayed; and so these remind us of the Egyptians and of those nations who "erect sumptuous monuments for the dead, because looking on this life as short and passing, they think it unworthy the trouble of constructing them for the living."

October 28—Thursday.—At noon our steamers entered the splendid harbour of Acapulco. It lies like a bowl among the mountains, with a winding outlet to the sea like the tail of a comma. The first objects that attracted our attention when the steamer came to anchor was a shoal of black piccanninnies, ebony youths, who were swimming like lizards around the vessel, waiting for the passengers to cast a half dime into the water; when they showed their white teeth, kicked their heels in the air, and soon returned to the surface, some one of them triumphantly holding up the piece after which they had dived.

While the steamer was taking in coal from hulks stationed here, which are replenished with Liverpool coal, by vessels which carry it in ballast round the Horn many of the passengers called native boats and were rowed ashore. The town is rather attractive to the eye, viewed from the harbour, as it lies in a nook at the foot of a rugged mountain, huddled around a tall church, and commanded by a well-constructed fort. But you find on entering it that, like Rome, its inhabitants are "soldiers, priests, and beggars." The houses are either adobe, or sun-dried brick, that is, heavy mud walls one story high, or thatched palm-leaf huts. Acapulco will not compare with ordinary Chinese villages of its size. Everything is filthy and everything ruinous; both church and fort are split with the seams of earthquakes, as if abhorred of nature. The population is frequently almost decimated by pestilence. Their dark figures are discerned grovelling in the dirt of their huts, or moving barefoot about the coral walks, the women half clad, the men in the tattered raiment cast off by sailors. The tinkling of the guitar, and the note of the violin, attract your notice; it is to the lascivious dance, or to a table, where half a dozen villainous men sit behind piles of silver and gold, tempting the foolish novice to try his luck. Along the walk leading up to the fort, groups of semi-denuded females invite you to purchase some drink, or some fancy work of gay coloured shells, or small pearls, which are obtained all along this coast in considerable numbers and often of exceeding beauty. Four small ones may be obtained for a dollar.

Yet this harbour is next to that of San Francisco, the finest on the Pacific coast; and this "city" has had a commerce which, in the hands of other races, would have made it one of the most wealthy and extensive in the New World. It was three centuries ago a point whence the Spanish fleets traded to all the shores of the great Pacific Ocean, even to Manila, Mindoro, Borneo, and China. It is worthy of remark that some of its inhabitants are said to be tinged with Chinese blood, then introduced; and that once more, since the Chinese emigration to California, these enterprising and industrious people have found their way hither, and there are now several shops and restaurants established by them. There are large numbers of them also now carried to Callao, in South America. They will in time, doubtless, be scattered over every portion of this New Continent.

It seemed not out of keeping, that among several passengers who joined us here was a company of black-gowns. We learned that the principal was the Bishop of California, and the remainder were teachers, male and female, whom he was importing from the enlightened city of Mexico, which is only about a hundred leagues distant, for the sake of establishing a seminary for the benefit of the Californians, at Monterey. The whole were exceedingly dirty and odorous; so much so that a good Scotch lady, who occupied a room aboard with one of the females, was forced to abandon it, and sleep in preference on a settee in the cabin. A brisk current of Anglo-Saxonism through the heart of Mexico will purify that stagnant pool in more than one respect.

Friday, 29th.—Some white rocks were seen glittering like icebergs upon the surface of the sea, at a distance, which we were informed obtained their colour from the deposit of quantities of guano.

Saturday.—Saw the saddle-like peak of the fine volcano of Colima, at about seventy miles distant, so huge that it appeared as if not near half that distance. It is not in action at present.

Monday, Nov. 1.—Yesterday morning preached in the cabin from the 11th of Luke, ninth verse; "Ask, and it shall be given unto you," &c.; on the reasons why God has appointed prayer as a mode of worship and communion with him. The subject has afforded me unusual spiritual instruction and comfort in its examination. The word has not been without fruit. This morning several individuals have shown an interest in the lessons of divine truth; and one young man has been brought to repentance for sin. The departure from home, the profligacy of some of his fellow-passengers, the perusal of the Scriptures, and the preaching of the word on board, have awakened him to a sense of his condition as a helpless and needy sinner, and brought him to take refuge in Christ. This morning I had, for the first time, a long conversation with him, which encourages me to hope that he is "born again." He manifests a delightfully repentant, humble, prayerful, inquiring state of mind, which leads me to hope that a good work has been wrought, and that the blessing of God will more and more enrich his heart.

With the first glimmer of morning dawn, Cape St. Lucas became prominent, the extremity of Lower California. We feel as if drawing near our future home.

Thursday.—Table Mountain was in sight early this morning, so named from its plane top and steep sides. Near it is a white monument, or mark, established at the boundary line of Upper California, between the United States and Mexico. Not many leagues northward of it, is the town of San Diego, whose harbour we entered to exchange mails. It is an old Spanish settlement. It seemed scarce like home, though in "the land of the free." A sandy plain stretched away off into the interior, between ranges of hills. The town is several miles distant from the anchorage. We could see it with the glass; but the only hint of its American character was the national flag flying above the low dwellings and barracks of mud. Near the anchorage there were scattered on the shore, sixteen tenements, of nearly as many kinds, sizes, and materials. Six of them had sign-boards, indicating that they were shops, as much probably for drinking as any other object. Equally conspicuous were eighteen symbols, in the shape of palings enclosing stones marking the places where some of the dwellers had lain them down in their last home. In two hours we were relieved by the sound of the parting salute; and again were dashing aside the blue waves, startling the flocks of sea fowl, watching the flight of the pelican, and the graceful sweeps of birds that looked not unlike the gigantic albatross of the Cape of Good Hope, and marking the steamy puff of the whales, of which, along this coast, you may observe several at once.

Friday, 5th.—A most delicious morning. The passengers all on deck, inhaling the fresh, sweet air. The high sloping shore along which we are running is covered with pasture, which, with the glass, we see specked with countless herds of half-wild cattle, like little dots of white, brown, and black. A ranch, or farming establishment, may here and there be discerned. One of our company is marking the bearings and local character of a very bold cape that stretches out into the sea, known as Point Conception, upon which he is about to erect a lighthouse for the Government. This is a novelty in a Spanish country. It is not many years since there was not one in Spain herself. Not far distant is the mission of La Purissima, one of the twenty-one founded by the Roman Catholics in California. They are nearly all near the coast, but not sufficiently so to be seen.

Saturday, 6th.—Last night we went into Monterey with the mails, but darkness hid the landscape from sight. Eighty miles further brings us to the long-desired haven. We have heard here news which tell some of our passengers that they are beggared. At the beginning of the week the city of Sacramento was almost entirely consumed by fire.

Evening.—At noon to-day the Tennessee entered the Golden Gate. How much in the circumstances of the voyage do we see to thank God for. We are told that a violent storm has been raging here for several days, which has rendered many anxious for our safety. But we had been wholly preserved from it. How remarkable that we should have just avoided a storm at the termination of our voyage on the Atlantic side, in the same manner! Here we learn that several vessels have been much injured, and one or two perhaps lost. The only death on board our vessels on either side, was that of a German, who came on board at Panama, from a New Orleans steamer, then very ill, and who lived but a day or two. The few that have been sick have recovered. Some of our fellow-passengers were robbed on the Isthmus; the baggage of some was burnt at Cruces. But "goodness and mercy have followed us." The officers of the vessel have done their utmost to make us comfortable. We have enjoyed the society, sympathy, and assistance of Christian friends along the journey. And now we are placed in the scene of our future labours, laden with all that "loving kindness and tender mercy" can bestow.

Monday, Nov. 8th.—Paid a visit this afternoon to Lí Akan, at his house, where he received me very kindly. Thank God that already are seen the blest fruits of our mission-schools in China, in the presence of some here who are prepared to lead their newly-arrived countrymen in the acquisition of the knowledge of science and religious truth. He tells me he is acquainted with eight mission scholars of the Morrison school, now in California.

The presence of the pupils of our several mission schools at Canton, Macao, Hong-Kong, and Singapore, is the first feature that strikes me in commencing the labours of a missionary among the Chinese here, as a pledge of success. Often our dear brethren there have desponded on account of their slow progress in educating and converting to God the boys under their care. "They laboured, and we are entered into their labours." These are men that, by their acquaintance with the English language and customs, their superior knowledge and mental discipline, must wield a powerful influence over their own countrymen. Two at least of them are pious, and may give much assistance in missionary duties.

It is a striking providence, too, that there is a large supply of Scriptures and tracts on hand. Boxes of them have been forwarded from different stations to the several clergymen of this city; and a considerable number have been already distributed among the Chinese. Indeed, during the administration of Colonel Geary as mayor, there was a public presentation meeting, at which, through an interpreter, addresses were made to the Chinese by some of the clergymen, and copies of the Scriptures formally bestowed. Thus they will see that Christianity is our national religion. Alas, thatt hey cannot yet comprehend that "they are not all Israel that are of Israel," and make allowance for some of the scenes they witness in this "Christian land."

To-day I have been under the necessity of providing some clothing, as the "Winfield Scott," the steamer which was expected to bring all my own and a portion of my wife's apparel, which was detained at the Isthmus, has not yet arrived. Almost everything one needs, seems to be here four times what it would cost in "the States." Clothing is more reasonable in price than many other articles. It affords me pleasure here to notice the liberality of Christian friends, and, indeed, of the community generally, towards the ministerial profession, especially in abating the prices of necessary articles.

Nov. 10th.—The opinion of brethren in the ministry here, and, they inform me, in the country also, in relation to the location of the mission, is, that it should be in San Francisco. The reasons suggested are these:—In all other places the Chinese population is either limited, as at Sacramento and Stockton, or transient, as at the different mines. All the emigrants must pass through this city, which is the only port of entry for foreign vessels, and here may receive tracts and the Scriptures. From this the different sections of the country are easily and cheaply accessible to personal visitation. The people of this city are disposed to support liberally the work, if performed in their midst, by their contributions in money; and thus the greater expensiveness of living may be counterbalanced. From this point I can have most direct and cheap intercourse with the press at Ningpo and the brethren in China. And this climate is probably that which will prove most bracing and healthful, on account of its proximity to the sea, whose breezes sweep over and refresh it, but die away thirty miles up the rivers and leave the swampy shores subject to fevers and to a high degree of heat. These reasons appear conclusive as to the choice of this as the site of the mission. However the question will remain open till I can further consult, personally or by letter, with the brethren in the interior, previous to laying it before the Executive Committee of the Board.

A very interesting field of usefulness is opened before me in the visitation of the sick at the State Hospital. There is always a number of Chinese there, sometimes as many as one hundred, under the care of American physicians and nurses. It seems a most fit place for impressing them favourably with the doctrines of Him who "healed as many as were brought unto Him."

November 11th.—It was announced in one of the city papers, that on last Wednesday a temple had been consecrated to idolatrous worship by the Chinese. So Satan, I thought, has anticipated me. To-day I visited the building, and ascertained to my joy that it is only a hwui-kwan or "company's hall." The Chinese band together in large companies for their mutual advantage. By this means information is circulated, heavy expenses are avoided, and personal effects better cared for. Four or five such companies are said to have been formed here. At their respective head-quarters officers are appointed to attend to their affairs, and a hall is erected as a rendezvous, and lodging-place for strangers. As usual at home, they have performed certain ceremonies at the opening of these halls. And it was the celebration of such an occasion which was mistaken for the consecration of an idol temple. No temple yet exists in California.

When surveying this hwui-kwan I conversed with the Chinese, of whom there were many collected there. They were surprised to find me speaking their language, and expressed great satisfaction in meeting me. But already I anticipate the trials of the work. One from Canton regarded me contemptuously, and said, "Keang Yesu," "he's a preacher of Jesus," and then walked away.

Nov. 12th.—This morning walked to the sea-shore westward of the city, and saw Chinese fishermen hauling a seine, that seemed well filled with the inhabitants of the deep. This field of enterprise will enrich them, and be of great benefit to our own population. They spread the small fish on mats in the sun, cutting them transversely when of the larger varieties, that they may dry readily. They will then pack them in salt for their own use. In a hut where a dozen were seated smoking, they complained bitterly of the hostility of the miners, who will not allow them to dig the gold, while they find it, as yet, difficult to get into employment as mechanics and servants; so that many say, "Wu fan yih fan hu kwoh;" "We have no rice to eat, and must return to our country."

Monday, Nov. 14th.—Yesterday preached on Isaiah xlix. 12, "Lo, these from the land of Sinim," in the Rev. Mr. Williams' church; and in the afternoon on Acts xiii. 47, at that of the Rev. Mr. Hunt, Congregationalist. Much desire is expressed to receive information in regard to my plans, on the part of all denominations; and I am led to hope that my labours will be cordially sustained by all. The latter gentleman once shared in the missionary work in the Sandwich Islands, and has done good here among the people of that nation, of whom many are scattered through the mines. Some of these are shining examples of Christian character, and observe the Sabbath where all others forget its obligations.

Nov. 21st.—Preached yesterday at the Baptist church, on John viii. 28. Few out, on account of the storm which has been raging during the past several days, and continues unabated.

Nov. 26th, Friday.—Thus far I have been able to hear of fifteen young Chinese in California, who have attended the various mission schools in their own land. They give promise of honour and usefulness, although few are yet Christians.

To-day, called on Mr. Frontin, Danish consul, and was by him accompanied to the hwui-kwan, or hall, on the hill, and introduced to Song Achick. This young man is the most influential of the Chinese in the city; and he owes it to his education at a missionary school at Hong Kong. He was eight years under the instruction of the Rev. S. R. Brown, an American. At the expiration of that time, in 1847, he spent some time at Shanghai, as a linguist, or Chinese clerk in an English mercantile house. Afterwards he was appointed interpreter to the Police Court at Hong Kong. He is the individual who rendered the most efficient assistance to his countrymen soon after his arrival last spring, in their difficulties with Gov. Bigler, and with the miners; and indeed assisted to write the famous letter to that functionary, which attracted so much attention throughout our country. He is an enterprising man. Within a few weeks, he purchased, in company with two or three of his countrymen, a cargo of rice, just arrived, from which they realized a very handsome profit. Song Achick appears well disposed towards the instruction of his countrymen. It seems a remarkable providence, that within a few days, as missionary efforts are about being commenced among the Chinese, the late chief of the company, a low, bad man, who only obtained his eminence from his having learned to speak English, while once in the employment of cook upon a Charleston packet, has been laid aside by an attack of hemorrhage from the lungs, and has in consequence resigned his post, with the intention of returning to his own country. Song Achick is regarded by the American community here as a man of more than common ability. He received us in an office attached to the hall of the company whose chief he is. His dress is the native silk gown, close pants, and embroidered shoes. His address impresses strangers as both dignified and courteous. His education is probably defective in the Chinese classics, but he may reach power under his own government, on the basis of wealth, and hereafter wield an important influence over the undisclosed but portentous destinies of the vast empire of whose subjects he is begotten.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. A. H. SEELEY.

A Tour in the districts of Furrukhabad and Mynpoorie.

November 12th.—Encamped to-day in a fine mango grove, with the ruins of an old fort in view, the outside walls of which were all broken down, although several arches of the inner buildings are still standing. It was built about three hundred years ago, by the Nawab of Furrukhabad, and destroyed when he determined to make that city his residence. The village here is a large one, and contains a school under the direction of Government, with about fifty boys, some of them studying philosophy, astronomy, arithmetic, &c., in their own languages. The Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Provinces commenced an educational scheme for the improvement of the vernacular schools in February, 1850. This scheme extended over the districts of Agra, Aligarh, Bareli, Etawah, Furrukhabad, Mynpoorie, Muthuru, and Shahjahanpur. In these districts there are now more than 3000 schools, in which instruction is imparted to more than 25,000 children. The object has not been to introduce a totally new system of instruction into these native schools, but to raise the tone and character of them. And although religion is carefully kept out of every part of the instruction, still we cannot but believe that much good will come out of them.

In passing a small Hindu temple, I saw a woman make an offering to the idol, consisting of flowers and other things, and then bow down before the idol. I stopped, and began talking to a man who was near, making twine for fish-nets, of what I had just seen, Yes, he said, many women come and worship here. He seemed to wish to convey to my mind that he thought none but women were silly enough to worship the image. Very soon others began to assemble from different parts. I spoke to them for some time, trying to point out to them the extreme folly of worshipping that which we have made with our own hands. I asked them if they did not, from the same stone, take a piece and make a mill to grind their wheat in, another to pound their spices on, and of the rest of it if they did not frequently make a god, and bow down before it, and worship it. "Yes, sir, what you say is all true, Hindus do just so," said many at once. Well is not this very foolish as well as wicked? "Indeed it is foolishness. We know very well that the idol is nothing," said one, "but this has been the custom of our fathers, and this is Hindu religion; so what can we do?"

I now told them that God was very angry with idolaters, and that he will turn them all into hell, with all nations who forget him, if they did not believe upon Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of sinners. They listened with much respect, and said "Yes," "yes;" "that is good;" "that is true;" to every thing I said: but I think without the least sincerity, and with the full determination to make idols and worship them, as all their fathers have done before them.

November 13th.—To-day marched nine miles, and visited three villages around Mudanpore; found all the people sunk in the greatest ignorance and superstition; there were no pandits, no schools, and none could read. At one of these villages, around the trunk of the sacred pipal tree, upon a mound of dirt, were placed ten idols, most rudely carved from the common sand-stone; most of them but a short time before had had water thrown over them; flowers, and a little rice were lying before them. Stepping upon the mound, I inquired if these were their gods. One man said, "No, they are not gods." Another reproved him very sharply, and affirmed that "they were gods." I asked, if they are not gods, why are offerings made to them? "Oh," he said, "the women bring them. But I know that there is but one God, who is in heaven, and I worship him." There was a boldness and a manliness in this man's manner, and in the avowal of his opinion, which I have seldom seen. I told him that he was right; that there is but one God, and could be but one, and hoped he would continue to preach this doctrine until his countrymen forsook the worshipping of idols. He was greatly pleased with this, and commenced with great fluency to show the absurdity of calling a stone a god. I entirely agreed with him, but at the same time told him that a renouncing of idols, and the belief in one God, could never secure the favour of God or the forgiveness of our sins. I then explained to all of them the necessity of an atonement for sin, and directed them to Christ as the only one through whom we can be saved.

In the afternoon read the sixth chapter of the Gospel of Matthew to the servants and others, and tried to show them the necessity of laying up a treasure in heaven. In the evening visited Mudanpore. Dhoukal spoke to about fifty prisoners who were working on the roads. Some of them could read; so we distributed some books among them. Several persons came to my tent for books. Near this village is a banyan tree, forty-nine feet in circumference.

We next day encamped about one mile from Bewar, broke the cross piece of one of the tents, and gave a cooley two annas, about six cents, to carry it fifteen miles to Mynpoorie to be mended; this sum was more than he could have earned if he had remained at home, so he was very glad to go. I gave him, indeed, all he asked. In walking this morning to our encamping ground, I met a cooley, who begged me to employ him; he said he had no work, and could get none, that no one cared for him, and he should certainly starve if I did not have pity on him. I offered to employ him to cut grass for my horse; this he refused, saying, "How can I do such work?" Now this poor fellow was really in a starving condition, yet rather than do any work which does not strictly belong to his caste, he would beg, and almost starve. The penalty of refusing to conform to the rules of caste is so severe that none are found indifferent to it, although many are ready to acknowledge the evils of it. Visited a village in the way, and reached our tent about nine o'clock; it had just arrived, and nothing was done towards pitching it, nor any preparation for breakfast, but in a little while the tent was ready, and at twelve o'clock our breakfast, too.

In the evening went to a village near by. Found several men sitting before a groggery, some of whom gave evidence of having come there too often for their good. The proprietor of this held the monopoly in a certain district, in which he had nine grog-shops, and pays annually 1151 rupees, more than $500, to government. The shop was a low thatched mud hovel, about thirty feet long, and ten wide, without light, except what came from a small door on one side, from which were issuing volumes of smoke, the only way of its escape. I asked the man if he sold a great deal; he said his business was rather dull, and he feared he would not be able to do more than to realize the money which he had promised to pay to government. I asked him why he did not give it up, if it was a losing business. Others said it was not true, for he got a great many rupees. I then told him that it was very wicked, and he ought to be ashamed to make and sell that which he knew did so much evil. "If it be so great a sin," said he, "why do the Company take so many rupees from those who sell it? If I sin, the Company sin too." I told him that the Company professed to levy a tax upon the business in order to prevent its increase; that they knew it to be an evil, and wished to check it; still I felt there was much truth in what this poor heathen said: "If I sin, the Company sin too." Drunkenness, no doubt, is on a fearful increase in India. The almost universal practice of drinking which prevails among the European residents in this country, and the respectability which a license throws over the native dealer, no doubt are among the causes leading to this result. Many villages would drive the dealer in disgrace from their midst, if he were not protected by his license.

I asked him who purchased his liquors. He said all castes except Brahmans and Tarkoors. Dhoukal read to them a part of Christ's sermon on the mount, and explained to them the way of salvation through a Redeemer.

ABSTRACT OF THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

Presented to the General Assembly, May, 1853.

PUBLICATIONS.—During the year ending March 31, 1853, the Board have published 24 new books, (two of which are in the German language,) of which have been printed 60,500 volumes. They have also added to their catalogue 21 new tracts, of which have been published 80,250 copies. Whole number of new publications, 140,750. During the same period, they have published new editions from stereotype plates, of books and tracts, to the amount of 604,800 copies. Total number of books and tracts published during the year, 745,550 copies.

Of the Presbyterian Sabbath-school Visitor, 41,000 copies are now published semi-monthly. Of the Home and Foreign Record, 11,000 copies of the newspaper and 400 of the pamphlet edition are now printed monthly.

The aggregate number of volumes published by the Board, from their organization in 1840, to March 31, 1853, has amounted to 2,020,450.

The aggregate number of tracts published during the same period, has amounted to 2,131,450 copies. The total number of volumes and tracts published by the Board, from 1840, to March 31, 1853, has amounted to 4,151,900.

RECEIPTS FOR THE YEAR.—The receipts for the year are highly encouraging. The sales have amounted to seventy-two thousand seven hundred and forty-six dollars and thirty-five cents, ($72,746.-35) which is six thousand two hundred and thirty-two dollars and sixty-three cents more than the amount reported last year. The donations received for colportage and distribution, from April 1, 1852, to April 1, 1853, have amounted to thirteen thousand nine hundred and eleven dollars and one cent, ($13,911.01). Total receipts, $86,657.36. Total excess of receipts of sales and donations over last year, $2146.75.

AGENTS.—The Rev. Joseph Mahon has continued his labours in a portion of the South. The Rev. J. Y. Alexander has continued to act as Superintendent of Colportage in Georgia, Florida, and South Carolina.

COLPORTEURS AND COLPORTEUR LABOUR.—One hundred and forty-five colporteurs have been employed during the year—one hundred and forty of them in twenty-six different States of the Union—four in Nova Scotia, and one in Northern India, viz:—In Massachussets, five; Connecticut, one; New Hampshire, one; Maine, five; New York, twenty; New Jersey, four; Pennsylvania, ten; Maryland, two; Ohio, ten; North Carolina, seventeen; South Carolina, four; Georgia, ten: Florida, three; Michigan, two; Indiana, ten; Illinois, five; Wisconsin, three; Iowa, four; Missouri, three; Kentucky, five; Tennessee, five; Alabama, one; Mississippi, two; Arkansas, one; Louisiana, one; Texas, six; Nova Scotia, four; Northern India, one. Of these, one has been employed jointly in Tennessee and Alabama.

The Synods of Virginia and Pittsburgh are still conducting their operations as independent auxiliaries of the Board, with efficiency and success.

AGGREGATE OF COLPORTEUR LABOUR.—The following are the aggregate amounts of labour performed during the past year, so far as returns have been made to the Board, by the one hundred and forty-five colporteurs, viz:—time spent, thirty-four years and nine months; volumes sold, 87,938; volumes distributed gratuitously, 9386; number of pages of tracts given away, 925,172; families visited, 63,262; families conversed, or prayed with, 21,802; families having no religious book but the Bible, 2262; Presbyterian families without the Confession of Faith, 2924.

From April 1, 1850, to April 1, 1853, a period of three years, one hundred years and three months of colporteur labour have been performed; 178,678 families have been visited, of which 66,791 have been conversed, or prayed with; 217,580 volumes have been sold; 20,417 volumes, and 2,035,282 pages of tracts have been distributed gratuitously; 6371 families have been found destitute of all religious books except the Bible, and 2000 without the Bible; 7933 Presbyterian families have been found without the Confession of Faith. These aggregates refer to the labours of the colporteurs who have been employed, during the period mentioned, directly by the Board, and are exclusive of the results obtained by the Synods of Virginia and Pittsburgh.

DONATIONS.—Donations to a considerable extent have been made during the year, in addition to those made through the colporteurs. These donations of books and tracts have been, in many cases, most gratefully acknowledged by those who have received them, and we have reason to believe that they have accomplished, by the Divine blessing, a vast amount of good. The Board regret that their limited means have so restricted their grants; and they would express the earnest desire, that the churches would be more liberal in their contributions, so as to enable them to increase them.

The grants of the year, independent of the donations of books made by colporteurs, have been as follows:—Sabbath-schools, 1367 volumes; ships of war, naval and military posts, 89 volumes; humane institutions, 161 volumes; Literary and Theological Institutions, 578 volumes; indigent ministers, 966 volumes; feeble churches, 1103 volumes; individuals for gratuitous distribution, 626 volumes; and also 246,337 pages of tracts, independent of the donations of tracts made by colporteurs.

The aggregate number of volumes given away to ministers, congregations, Sabbath-schools, public institutions, &c., independent of the donations made by colporteurs, from 1847, when we commenced making donations, to 1853, is twenty-five thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight, (25,768.) The aggregate number of pages of tracts given away during the same period is one million, sixty thousand and five hundred, (1,060,500.) Total number of volumes and pages of tracts given away up to March 31, 1853, independent of donations made by colporteurs, one million, eighty-six thousand, two hundred and sixty-eight, (1,086,268.)

The following persons were elected by the General Assembly, on the 28th May, members of the Board of Publication.

Ministers.—Nicholas Murray, D.D., Joshua Moore, Geo. W. Musgrave, D.D., T. L. Cuyler, Wm. C. Matthews, D.D., J. W. McKennan, James Morrison, James W. Alexander, D.D., H. A. Boardman, D.D., John C. Backus, D.D., John Hall, D.D., Alexander T. McGill, D.D., John Miller.

Laymen.—W. Sargent, J. B. Martin, D. Hadden, Robert L. Stuart, Matthew Newkirk, P. Boyd, Wm. B. Spence, George Douglass, James Russell, Stacy G. Potts, Jas. N. Dickson, C. Macalester, Henry C. Blair.

To supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Rev. John A. Gretter, the Rev. Henry Steele Clarke, for two years.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1853.

The Rev. Dr. Murray, from the Standing Committee to whom had been referred the Report of the Board of Publication, presented the following resolutions, which were adopted, viz:

1. Resolved, That in the judgment of this Assembly, the evangelical press is, next to the pulpit, the most efficient means for the propagation of divine truth, and the conversion and salvation of men, and ought therefore to be employed by the Church to the utmost extent of her ability.

2. Resolved, That in the opinion of this Assembly, the publication and circulation of books and tracts, in which are exhibited the distinctive doctrines and order of our beloved Church, are not only highly important, but indispensably necessary, to her prosperity and extension, and ought therefore to receive the approbation and active co-operation of every Presbyterian.

3. Resolved, That the Assembly approve of the wisdom and zeal with which the Board of Publication have carried forward the important work committed to their management during the past year, and are highly gratified with the result of their labours.

4. Resolved, That inasmuch as the pecuniary means of the Board would not justify them in attempting to establish local depositories, and as the necessary funds could probably be raised in the places where they are needed; it is hereby recommended that such local efforts be made wherever they are desired, and can be properly sustained.

5. Resolved, That while the Assembly would urge the Board to continue to press onward, and extend their operations over their whole field of labour, they would also urge them to continue to have a due regard to prudence and safety in the employment of the funds committed to their trust.

6. Resolved, That as the continued and extended usefulness of the Board of Publication, like every other benevolent Institution, must depend, under God, upon the liberality of the benevolent; it is hereby earnestly recommended to all our pastors and churches to give particular attention to the claims of this Board, and render such aid, by the contribution of funds, as shall enable the Board greatly to enlarge their operations.

7. Resolved, That it be recommended to all our pastors to endeavour to increase the circulation of the Home and Foreign Record, the organ of the Boards of the Church, in order that our churches may be better acquainted with their respective plans and operations, and be induced to contribute more liberally towards their support.

8. Resolved, That in view of the destitution of many Presbyterian families of our Confession of Faith, it is hereby earnestly recommended to all our pastors and elders to endeavour to induce every family in our connection to supply themselves with a copy of the standards of our Church; and the Board of Publication is requested to furnish, through their colporteurs, every practicable facility for this purpose.

9. Resolved, That Art. III. of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Board of Publication be so amended as to read as follows, viz: Art. III. The Board of Managers shall hold their first meeting at such time and place as may be directed by the present General Assembly, and shall hold a meeting annually, on the second Tuesday in June, at which time it shall appoint a President, Vice-President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Treasurer, a Recording Secretary, and an Executive Committee, to serve for the ensuing year.

EXTRACTS FROM THE NARRATIVE OF THE STATE OF RELIGION,

ADOPTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, MAY, 1853.

The Assembly has received a gratifying account of the continual success which has attended the labours of the Board of Publication. It has found favour with the churches in an eminent degree. Its excellent publications have been widely circulated—and the general disposition to procure and read them, indicate a desire to become acquainted with the doctrinal truths of our standards. Great care has been taken, that none but books of sterling value should be published. Such books are kept constantly on hand at their Depository in this city; and the treasures of truth and piety which they contain, should find their way into every congregation and family in our connection. The colporteur system, of which the Board has availed itself in circulating their issues, has been instrumental in doing much good. It is an agency that promises to accomplish great things for the cause of truth and righteousness. What blessed results could be brought about in this way, by distributing these publications at the lowest prices, in every destitute neighbourhood, if the requisite funds were put at the disposal of the Board for the purpose. Impressed with the great importance of the object contemplated by this Board, in the organization and support of the colporteur agency, the Assembly would take pleasure in commending it to all their churches for an annual collection.

The Assembly advert with pleasure to the uniformity with which the Presbyteries speak of the increased and growing attention to Biblical and Catechetical instruction. The doctrines and the spirit of that form of Christianity which is drawn from the Bible and embodied in our Catechisms, are the glory and the life of the Church. In the living power of these precious and holy doctrines, our youth and children must be trained up, if we would hope for a generation of Christians suited to the day in which we live, and more especially those eventful times which seem to be approaching, when will come the great conflict between truth and error, which is to shake the nations. In the training of the youth of our congregations in the sound knowledge of the truth of God, is our best hope of success. What else is to lead this nation in safety through the volcanic heavings and agitations of the various forms of a demoralizing and infidel philosophy, which threaten the destruction of our institutions, civil and religious? What shall effectually withstand the papacy, in its last efforts to lay its iron sceptre upon this land of freedom and of Protestantism, but the most wakeful attention to this duty, on the part of parents and pastors. Though the instructions of the Sabbath-school are to be prized, and to be prized highly, and though the advantages accruing to the Church from this mode of instruction are so manifest and abundant, that it would be superfluous to add anything to the testimony of preceding Assemblies in their favour, yet we ought not to lose sight of what is the more important and excellent way, viz., parental, domestic, religious instruction. Nothing is to supercede and take precedence of the systematic religious training of children around the family altar, and by those upon whom God has made it obligatory, to whom he has principally intrusted this work, and of whom he will chiefly demand an account. Under the impression that this duty is committed, to a very great extent, from mistaken views to other hands, we would exhort parents and guardians to remember that Sunday and parochial schools are but secondary and auxiliary in this important matter; while parents are to be regarded as the principals, appointed and commanded of God himself, most solemnly and imperatively, to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. If, then, they should prove delinquent in the discharge of their solemn trust, it is greatly to be feared the divine blessing will not, in ordinary cases, follow those means by which their care and efforts have been supplanted.

From the Presbyterian Herald.

RESOLUTION OF THE PRESBYTERY OF LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

It was resolved that Presbytery cordially approves of the proposition of the Board of Publication to raise a fund for the establishment, in Louisville, of a depository of the issues of the Board. The Presbytery also recommends to the churches under its care to contribute liberally to this object, and requests the Board to appoint such an agency as may be needful to raise funds for the establishment of the depository, and the general circulation of the publications of the Board.

ENCOURAGING FROM THE PRESBTERY OF MEMPHIS.

Mr. Flinn, the colporteur of the Board of Publication, gave an encouraging account of his labours, and of the increasing desire on the part of our people to obtain his books. He was affectionately commended to the churches. Our churches, with very few exceptions, have contributed with increased liberality to each of our ecclesiastical Boards. The Board of Publication, with our system of colportage, is working admirable results. We rejoice to see the growing interest, and feel that it augurs well.

TESTIMONY OF CONGREGATIONALISTS IN BEHALF OF PRESBYTERIANISM.

In an article setting forth the conformity of the Presbyterian form of government to the scriptural model, a few weeks since, we stated that most churches which had nothing to correspond to the bench of ruling elders, were often compelled to resort to expedients, which, in effect, amounted to the same thing. The celebrated Cotton Mather, of New England, as quoted by the Christian Observer, says:

"All our churches will acknowledge to me, that it is an usual thing with a prudent and faithful pastor, himself to single out some of the more grave, solid, aged brethren, in his congregation, to assist him in many parts of his work, on many occasions, in a year; nor will such a pastor ordinarily do any important thing in his government, without having first heard the counsels of such brethren. In short, there are few discreet pastors, but what make many occasional ruling elders every year. I say then, suppose the church, by a vote, recommend some such brethren, the fittest they have, unto the stated assistance of their pastor in the church rule, wherein they may be helps unto him. I do not propose that they should be biennial or triennial only, though I know very famous churches throughout Europe have them so. Yea, and what if they should by solemn fasting and prayer be commended unto the benediction of God, in what service they have to do—what objection can be made against the lawfulness? I think none can be made against the usefulness of such a thing. Truly, for my part, if the fifth chapter of 1st Timothy would not bear me out, when conscience both of my duty and my weakness made me desire such assistance, I would see whether the 1st chapter of Deuteronomy would not."

President Edwards, the great light of New England says, in his letters to Erskine:

"I have long been out of conceit of our unsettled, independent, confused way of church government, and the Presbyterian way has ever appeared to me most agreeable to the word of God, and the reason and nature of things." P. 412.

President Dwight, without any other inducement to declare in favour of Ruling Elders, than that which the force of truth presented, declared:

"Ruling Elders are, in my apprehension, scriptural officers of the Christian church, and I cannot but think our defection, with respect to these, from the practice of the first settlers in New England, an error in ecclesiastical government, &c.," (iv. p. 399.)

The little crew of the Mayflower had an Elder Brewster; and his pastor, John Robinson, writing to Sir John Wolstenholme, in 1616, says:

"Touching the ecclesiastical ministry, viz., of pastors for teaching, Elders for ruling, and deacons for distributing the church's contributions, as also for the two sacraments, baptism, and the Lord's Supper, we do wholly and in all points agree with the French Reformed churches, according to their published Confession of Faith. There Elders and deacons are annual, or at the most for two or three years; ours perpetual."—Presbyterian of the West.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

The Rev. Robert L. Dabney has accepted a professorship in the Union Theological Seminary, Prince Edward, Virginia.

MEETING OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Monday, May 23.—Rev. Dr. Wood presented a memorial from the Theological Seminary at New Albany, which stated that the assent of the Synods of Indiana, Cincinnati, Missouri, Illinois, Northern Indiana, Tennessee and Kentucky, had been given to the transfer of that Seminary from them to the care of the General Assembly; that the Professors had tendered their resignations; and a conditional transfer of the funds had been made. A similar memorial was presented from the Directors of the Cincinnati Theological Seminary. Rev. Dr. Matthews then presented the Minutes of a conference of delegates from eleven Western Synods, containing resolutions expressive of their conviction that it is the duty of the Assembly to establish a new Theological Seminary at the West, and leaving the location absolutely to the Assembly. All which papers were referred to the Standing Committee on Theological Seminaries.

Rev. Dr. Van Rensselaer presented the Annual Report of the Board of Education, an abstract of which is given on p. 101.

An Overture was presented from the Presbytery of Baltimore, in regard to the erection of a new church at Washington, D. C., on which a discussion ensued, which lasted till adjournment.

At the opening of the afternoon session, Rev. Mr. Pinney was heard on behalf of the Colonization Society; and the various delegates from corresponding bodies addressed the Assembly.

Rev. Dr. Baird, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence, asked the advice of the Assembly in respect to resuming correspondence with various foreign churches, which had recently ceased; which gave rise to a debate which occupied the remainder of the session.

Tuesday, May 24.—Debate continued, which resulted in a resolution to renew correspondence with the Free Church of France, the Free Synod of Geneva, that of the Canton de Vaud, the Waldensian Synod, the churches in Belgium, but with none of the churches in Great Britain and Ireland.

Walter Lowrie, Esq., presented the Report of the Board of Foreign Missions, which is substantially printed as an extra to the newspaper edition of the Home and Foreign Record.

Wednesday, May 25.—Rev. Dr. C. C. Jones presented the Report of the Board of Domestic Missions, an abstract of which is given, p. 98.

Dr. W. L. Breckinridge presented the Report of the Committee on the church at Washington, after which the House passed to the consideration of the Report of the Standing Committee on Foreign Missions till adjournment. For Report and resolutions, see p. 104.

The afternoon session was chiefly devoted to the consideration of the Report of the Standing Committee on Theological Seminaries.

Thursday, May 26.—The Report of the Committee on the Board of Education was received and placed on the docket.

Rev. Dr. Revel, Moderator of the Waldensian Synod, was introduced, and addressed the Assembly.

Rev. Dr. Musgrave presented the Report of the Board of Publication, an abstract of which is given on page 110.

The House then proceeded to fill the blank in the resolution fixing the location of the new Seminary at the West.

New Albany, Peoria, St. Louis, Nashville, Danville, and Cincinnati were named, and their various claims discussed till adjournment.

Saturday, May 28.—Discussion concluded, by the selection of Danville, Ky., as the location of the new Theological Seminary.

Monday, May 30.—A supplemental report from the Committee on Seminaries was received, consisting of a series of resolutions for constituting and regulating the Danville Seminary, which chiefly engaged the attention of the House till five o'clock, when they proceeded to ballot for the election of a Professor for the vacant chair in Princeton Seminary, in which Rev. Dr. Henry A. Boardman received 96 votes; Rev. Dr. Plumer 46; Rev. Dr. Spring 25; Rev. Dr. Magill 46; and Rev. Dr. Magie 2. No majority.

Tuesday, May 31.—The Report of the Committee on the Board of Publication was received, the resolutions appended to which will be found on p. 110.

The House again proceeded to ballot for the election of a Professor for Princeton College, which resulted in the election of Dr. Boardman by a majority of 21 votes.

The election of two Professors for Alleghany College was next taken up, and Rev. Dr. A. T. Magill and Rev. Dr. John Hall, of Trenton, N. J., were appointed.

The election of four Professors for Danville was next in order, and resulted in the election of Rev. Dr. R. J. Breckinridge for the chair of Didactic Theology; Dr. Palmer for Biblical and Oriental Literature; Rev. Dr. Gurley, of Dayton, Ohio, for Pastoral Theology, and Rev. Dr. Humphrey for Biblical and Ecclesiastical History.

Wednesday, June 1.—The Assembly was occupied in hearing the Appeal of James Russell from the sentence of the Synod of Georgia, which appeal was not sustained.

The Report of the Standing Committee on the Board of Education was considered and adopted. The Report and resolutions appended are given on p. 101.

The Standing Committee on the Board of Domestic Missions made their Report, the resolutions appended to which are to be found on page 98. These gave rise to an animated discussion which continued till adjournment.

Thursday, June 2.—Further discussion on the policy of the Board of Missions. In the afternoon, Dr. Jones was heard in explanation; and an evening session was held, chiefly devoted to the consideration of a plan for raising a new church in Washington.

Friday, June 3.—The Report of a Committee appointed by last General Assembly in regard to the rights of American citizens in foreign countries was read and adopted; and after the appointment of Directors to the Alleghany and Princeton Seminaries, the Assembly dissolved, having passed a resolution for another Assembly, elected in like manner, to meet at Buffalo, N. Y., on the third Thursday of May, 1854, at 10 o'clock, A. M.

The various discussions in this Assembly were reported in extenso, for "The Daily Presbyterian," and comprised 112 pp. 8vo., printed in size suitable for binding with the Minutes.

☞The undersigned hereby acknowledges the receipt of $150 from Mrs. Mary Davies of Hopewell church, South Carolina, for Church Extension within the bounds of Bethel Presbytery. J. LeRoy Davies.

THE

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME IV. No. 8. | PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1853. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

THE MINISTER'S QUARTER PAY-DAY.

The following scene, taken from the landscape of New England, with some slight shades and varieties of colouring, we believe may be witnessed throughout a great portion of our country. We leave our readers to adapt it, as they fancy, to their own localities. The article originally appeared in The Puritan Recorder.

As the parson sat at his books one day,
A rap at his door heard he;
The Parish Collector had called to pay
The Society's Quarter fee.
A hundred dollars, and fifty more,
Were counted the parson's due,
Though small sum this, for half a score
To victual and clothe and shoe.

But the day had come, and for youthful sport
The parsonage ne'er displayed
A day like that, when his scant support
Was about to be promptly paid.
The children danced, and giggled, and grinned,
And wriggled like eels in oil;
And smiles broke forth on the visage thinned
By fasting, and tears, and toil.

The Parish Collector sat him down,
And out of his pocket took
The tithes he'd gathered about the town,
Crammed into his pocket book:—
It was not much of a cram, at that,
Though honey and milk indeed,
Not milk enough for a starving cat,
Nor honey enough for need.

But such as it was, without much risk,
The Collector poured it out;
He spread it round on the parson's desk,
And scattered it all about:—
But little of shining gold was there,
And less from the silver mine,
And bank bills,—they were exceeding rare!
Alas! for the poor divine.

First came a note for a little sum,
Which the poor man late had given
To a rich parishioner, near his home,
Whom he hoped to meet in heaven:—
Ten dollars was all,—not much, I know,
But an order followed the note,
With butcher's bill, and a bill or so
For butter and bread, to boot.

The doctor had drawn for his small amount,
The grocer had filed his claim,
And all intended their bills should count,
Whenever his pay-day came.
The good Collector reckoned them up;
The minister stood aghast!
'Twas a bitter drug in his brimming cup,
To think he had lived so fast.

Who knows what pain the parson endures,
As the good man hands them o'er,
And says with a hem, "Sir, these are yours,
And they should have been paid before:
For a scandal it is to religion, Sir,
Which the world can never forget,
When a man of ease like a minister
Is unable to pay a debt.

"And here, besides, is a lot of cash,
Three fives and a lusty ten;
Your daughters in satins now may dash;
And your boys dress up like men,
But allow me to say, good Parson Gay,
You'd better just lay aside
A little of this for a rainy day,
By a walk instead of a ride.

"For money is scarce, and the times are hard,
And you, sir, are getting gray,
And you may not fare as you here have fared,
Should the people turn you away.
We've given you here a large support,
And the farmers all complain
That the crops this year will be dreadful short
If we don't soon have some rain.

"We can't long pay such enormous sums
As we have to pay you now,
For you know that the pay-day often comes,
And the Squire has lost a cow;—
And one of old Goodwin's sheep is dead,
And he feels poor this year."—
The tender shepherd here turned his head,
To drop—for the sheep—a tear!

Of this the Collector no note took,
He gabbled his story through,
Then slowly folded his pocket-book,
And looked as if he knew.
He took his hat with a cheerful smile,
Rejoiced in a duty done;
Then rode away to his home, a mile,
At set of December's sun.

The parson rose, as he left the room,
And bowed with a smile of grace,
But his heart resembled a ruined tomb,
In spite of his smiling face.
He closed the door, and resumed his chair,
Till, amid his griefs and fears,
He seemed half-choked for a breath of air,
Then burst in a flood of tears.

He thought of his children's needy feet,
His barrel of meal was gone;
And the question arose, "What shall we eat?
What raiment shall we put on?"
He thought of the ravens, how they're fed,
How the lilies' garments grow;
But when was a raven's rent unpaid?
Or a lily arrayed for snow?

With tender emotions all astir,
In the parson's heaving breast,
His children's mother—he thought of her—
How she, who had done her best,
Still needed a hood, and cloth, and thread,
A dress, and a thicker shawl—
Till, pressed in spirit, he knelt and prayed
To the glorious Lord of all.

The evening came, and he met his wife,
And his blooming children nine;
Yet nought they saw of the inward strife
That harassed the sad divine:—
He sat serene in the central seat,
And his wife sewed near his side,
His children hovered about his feet,
And he to be cheerful tried.

But when he went to his nightly bed,
To sleep till the waking morn,
He felt, as he pillowed his aching head,
That he wished he had ne'er been born.
And all that night was his pillow drowned
With the tears no eye could see,
But His, who once for the thankless groaned,
And bled upon Calvary's tree.

A CANDID MIND.

There is nothing sheds so fine a light upon the human character as candour. It was called whiteness by the ancients, for its purity and beauty; and it has always won the esteem due to the most admirable of the virtues. However little sought for or practised, all do it the homage of their praise, and all feel the power and charm of its influence. The man whose opinions make the deepest mark upon his fellows; whose influence is the most lasting and efficient; whose friendship is instinctively sought, where all others have proved faithless, is not the man of brilliant parts, or flattering tongue, or splendid genius, or commanding power; but he whose lucid candour and ingenuous truth transmit the heart's real feelings pure and without refraction. There are other qualities which are more showy, and other traits that have a higher place in the world's code of honour; but none wear better, or gather less tarnish by use, or claim a deeper homage in that silent reverence which the mind must pay to virtue.

As it is the most beautiful, so it is the safest of moral qualities. None fall into so few mistakes—none darken and deform themselves with so little falsehood and wrong—none so free from the pain of doing wrong, as those who walk amidst the pitfalls and miasmas, passions and errors, of our tainted life, clothed habitually with candour. The rare and comely union of prudence and of principle, of firmness and forbearance, of truth and zeal, of earnestness of feeling and discrimination of views, is to be found only in minds pervaded and enlarged by candour. To love and to seek, in all things, the truth—to choose and adhere to, before all the solicitations of passion, or the power of prejudice, or the force of public opinion, or the claims of interest or power, whatever is right and true—to believe, at every juncture of experience or thought, that nothing is so good, or desirable, or trustworthy, as truth—to scent the truth amidst all the unpopular disguises which too often disfigure it in this world—this must be safest and best, whatever we may think of it, if God really reigns, and there be an eternal distinction between truth and falsehood, right and wrong. In nothing have men so vital an interest as in truth. Nothing should we so earnestly strive to get at, or hold fast when obtained. "Buy the truth, and sell it not."—Green Leaves.

The churches of the Sandwich Islands give from $20,000 to $30,000 annually, for the support of the gospel among themselves and elsewhere—one of the results of missions.

ANNUAL REPORT.

We are now mailing the Annual Report of the Board of Missions. All our ministers, licentiates, and honorary members will receive a copy, as well as many others, whose address we know. If the names of any of our ministers are not in the Minutes of the General Assembly for 1853, they will please inform us and we will send the Report to their address.

MONTHLY MEETING OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The regular meeting of the Board of Missions was held in their rooms in Philadelphia on Monday the 11th inst. Rev. John McDowell, D.D. Vice-President in the chair. Besides the usual business of the Board a very encouraging statement of the progress of this work was presented, from which it appeared, that for the first three months of this ecclesiastical year, as compared with the corresponding months of last year, there has been an increase of twenty-six appointments and reappointments, as well as a very encouraging increase of funds, particularly from the churches. Many of the new appointments were to important fields in the far West. Another missionary was appointed to California. A letter was read setting forth the progress of this work among the Germans in Cincinnati. In the work of missions among the foreign population in our country this Board is much interested, and have some excellent men thus exclusively engaged. They need more men for this important work. The Board is much encouraged to hope that the present year will, with the Divine blessing, be fruitful to our Church in the enlargement of its borders, as well as the evangelization of our country.

MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

The following letter from Rev. J. C. Brown, of Valparaiso, Indiana, will interest our readers. He went to Minnesota, at the suggestion of the Board, on a tour of exploration and observation, and his letter is a report in part. We shall be happy to receive further donations for Rev. Mr. Riheldaffer's house of worship in St. Paul, of which Brother Brown particularly speaks. Is there an ardent and enterprising young minister, unmarried, who would like to go to Minnesota, and aid in laying the foundations of our Church there? We shall be happy to hear from him.

Valparaiso, Indiana, June 25, 1853.

C. C. Jones, D.D.

Rev. and Dear Brother:—About the 28th of May, I mailed a letter to you stating that I had left for Minnesota. I made all haste, and reached St. Paul on the first Saturday of June, at dark. I soon found our dear brother Riheldaffer, who was greatly rejoiced to see me. I preached for him twice on the Sabbath. The day was wet, and the audience not so large as usual. Bro. Riheldaffer labours under very great embarrassment for want of a house of worship. Would that the Church felt the need of sustaining Church Extension. If our men of wealth could see for themselves the vital importance of a house of worship in the new settlements, they would gladly pour out of their abundance to sustain this object. Look at Brother Riheldaffer. He is labouring in the midst of a rapidly growing city, already numbering nearly four thousand inhabitants, not more than two hundred of whom are members of evangelical churches. He has a wide field of labour at present, and prospectively one of untold importance. He has no place suitable in which to worship. He occupies the Court House when not otherwise occupied. He gathers a fair congregation and Sabbath-school, when something gets possession of the Court House, and his congregation and school are scattered. Other churches are there with excellent buildings, mainly built by money from abroad. But, says one, "Why did he not build a small church large enough for present purposes?" Well, what are the facts. You go to these western towns—there is almost no religion; but men of means want churches to help their place, and they have lofty notions of their town; and they tell you plainly if you will build such and such a house, we will give you a lot and help you so much; if you do not, you must buy a lot and build the house yourselves.

But I did not think of discussing this matter when I commenced. To return.

After the Sabbath, Brother Riheldaffer and myself visited St. Anthony, at the Falls—estimated population fifteen hundred. It is a place of importance, and is open to us now. True, there is a small Congregational and Presbyterian Church, and also a small Baptist and Methodist, with very indifferent church accommodations. The lumbering business at present is its main source of revenue. But its unbounded water power, so easily used, must give it much importance by and by. It is surrounded by a fine country, now settling rapidly, especially on the west side of the Mississippi and north of the Minnesota. The location of St. Anthony is handsomer than that of St. Paul. But its commercial importance is by no means so great at present.

At the first opportunity, I started up the Minnesota, now the great point of attraction for the immigration. The valley of this river is undoubtedly very beautiful, with prairie and timber so situated as to make it very desirable for the emigrant seeking a home for himself and family. The soil is rich, and timber abundant, generally speaking. There is also plenty of building stone (a mixture of lime and sandstone, but durable.)

I went up the river one hundred and fifty or sixty miles to the recently laid out town of Mankato. This place is two miles below the mouth of the Blue Earth or Makato River. It is pleasantly located on the south side of the river. This is regarded as a place of much importance. 1st. It is nearly a degree further south than St. Paul. 2d. The country around is excellent, a great abundance of timber said to extend far towards the Iowa line. 3d. Its proximity to Blue Earth and Le Seur rivers, both fine mill streams, and yet on the river, and hence sure of the surrounding trade. 4th. There are indications of coal in that region. 5th. It is at the head of navigation, although boats do go above there in high water.

At present there are but a few families there. I preached on the Sabbath twice; I had fair audiences, between thirty and forty. The arrival of a steamboat seriously interfered with our afternoon service. Indeed, we had to suspend it until the boat left, as the house I was preaching in was but a few steps from the boat. I found five members of the New-school body. They are, however, perfectly willing to enter into any organization of either; they want a minister. Only one male member, Capt. James Hanna. I took steps to organize a Sabbath-school; six dollars were raised to procure a library of the Amer. S. S. Union; I had heard there was one of the ten dollar libraries at St. Paul. I preached the first sermon ever preached there. The proprietors of the place offered a lot for a church, and also one for a parsonage, or to the minister personally, if one of our ministers would become a resident of that place within six months. The place should be occupied this summer at all events, beyond that time I fear it may be too late. There is no other professor in the place. Mr. Hanna has become one of the proprietors.

On Monday after dinner, I took my staff in primitive style, and went across the country ten miles, to see how it looked out from the river. My way was through prairie of a fair quality, with excellent timber adjacent. The cabin of the emigrant was seen here and there on the edge of the timber, the oldest inhabitant dating his arrival not more than two or three months before. Spent the night at Babcock's Mills, intending to preach, but circumstances hindered; found no members; was hospitably entertained. A number of the Massachusetts colony are settled adjacent. At half past four next morning I was on my way, and after crossing the river and walking six miles, reached Traverse de Sioux, a beautiful situation on the north side of the river, in former times one of the stations of Amer. B. C. For. Missions, among the Dacota or Sioux Indians. Alas, one of the mission-houses is now the public house, where I procured my breakfast. The people say that this will be the great place in Minnesota valley. It may be, but it did not so strike me. It is occupied, however, by Rev. Mr. Adams, who will enter the Domestic work, now that the Indians have been removed, and the Foreign work of course suspended. He is not either Old or New-school ecclesiastically. For their own convenience, the missionaries organized themselves into the Dacota Presbytery, but sought no ecclesiastical connexion. I think that this is the state of things.

Re-crossing the river, after walking some fifteen miles, I reached Le Seur—the actual distance is but ten miles between the two places—here I found an elderly lady, a worthy member of our Church, and hastily circulating an appointment, I preached at candle-lighting to some thirty-five persons. The place is new, and this was the first sermon preached in it.

Le Seur is the county seat of the county, very finely located, and being surrounded with a fine country, they anticipate, and I think with reason, too, that they will have a place of much importance in that valley. At present it is but small, not six months old, but improving in the village and around it with considerable rapidity.

The proprietors have set apart a church and parsonage lots, eligibly situated, for the four denominations who will first locate ministers there. This and Mankato are entirely unoccupied, and, I think, quite as important places as there will be in this valley. We should have a man there without delay. A minister at Mankato, and one at Le Seur, with Brother Riheldaffer at St. Paul, would be sufficient for a Presbytery.

I was informed that ten to twenty miles back of Le Seur, you reach the Cannon River country, which has a fine reputation for the fertility of its soil. Most of the Massachusetts colony are out there.

On Thursday morning meeting a boat I came down the river. At Shockapee (or Chakapi), another brother of the Dacota Presbytery, (Rev. S. W. Pond) has measurably entered the Domestic work. And still farther down near the mouth of the river, his brother, Rev. G. H. Pond, also of that body, is labouring in the Domestic field. While I was there, he united with the Minnesota Presbytery. At dark, Thursday evening, I reached St. Paul, and had the privilege of meeting with Brother Riheldaffer in his weekly prayer meeting.

I intended to have gone up the Mississippi eighty miles to Sank Rapids, but had been detained so long up the Minnesota that I could not accomplish my wishes in that matter. On Friday morning, after seeing Brother Riheldaffer rejoicing in the safe return of his wife, I took the boat for home. Spent the Sabbath at Dubuque, preached twice, and was present at the installation of Brother Phelps—a pleasant day, I assure you, to that little church. Brother Phelps pleases the people, and bids fair to be the means of great good. He is, as you are aware, President of Alexander College, recently started there, and in which Rev. A. H. Kerr has been elected a professor.

At six o'clock of Wednesday I reached home, having travelled safely seventeen hundred miles. I found my family in very deep affliction; my second son had been for several days at the point of death with scarlet fever, while my youngest was already very sick, and by next morning my other child was also very sick, and Mrs. Brown utterly worn down with watching and anxiety. But the Lord is dealing mercifully. We trust that to-day they are all better. His will be done. We have no desire to see them live, unless in after life they would be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

It may not be out of place to throw together a few thoughts in relation to this new country.

Minnesota is certainly a fine country; not better than Northern Indiana, and Northern Illinois, and Iowa, but still a fine country. Although extending pretty far to the North, yet it is thought that corn will mature there; oats and potatoes, it is said, grow luxuriantly. Winter wheat has not been tried sufficiently. It may winter-kill.

The climate is claimed to be very healthy, less subject to bilious diseases than some other parts of the west. The winters, I was told, are cold, but dry; and hence not so changeable as a more southern latitude. Perhaps the settlements are not yet old enough to afford us a complete test upon more than one point. Everything is now new and lively. Those who are there seem to have no doubt but that Southern Minnesota is a good agricultural country. In the North, along the Mississippi and its tributaries, the business of lumbering will perhaps receive the most attention, and be the source of the chief wealth of that section.

The importance of Minnesota will be enhanced if the Northern route for the Pacific Railroad should be adopted by the Government. The citizens of Minnesota are sanguine that it will. It will cross the Mississippi at Sank Rapids, eighty miles north of St. Paul.

The people are from all parts of the country, and I might almost say of the world. About St. Anthony, I was informed that they were chiefly from the State of Maine; perhaps because of the lumbering business.

Mankato and Le Seur should be occupied by us at once; but my opinion is that young men should be sent. The expense of sustaining a man of family will be great for some years. Everything bears a high price. Brother Riheldaffer being a man of prudence, two young men—with him as a counsellor—is what we now need in Minnesota valley, as it seems to me. At St. Anthony there is at present an agreement between the Presbyterians and Congregationalists to let all ecclesiastical matters remain undisturbed for a while. There was strife; for peace this compact was made.
